The Report, which was considered a highly satisfactory one, concludes thus:—"The Bentinck steam-ship, 1,800 tons, and 520 horsepower, built by Mr. Wilson, and the machinery by Messrs. Fawcett & Co., Liverpool, will be ready for sea early in July, and will come round to Southampton during that month. The Proprietors are perhaps not aware, that in addition to the extra fastenings and other improvements, this ship, as well as all the vessels built by this Company since 1840, have had introduced into them the water-tight iron bulkheads, first adapted to steam vessels by Mr. C. W. Williams, one of the Directors of this Company, which give not only additional strength, but also unquestionably additional security in case of accident.

"The Directors therefore recommend that the usual half-yearly dividend of 3½ per cent., for the half-year ending on 31st March last, be paid to the Proprietors entitled to receive the same, which will amount to about 15,000*l.*, and the balance, undivided, will remain to accumulate for future contingencies, or for any purpose to which the Proprietary may hereafter see fit to apply it."

The expected change in the Commander-in-Chiefship in Ireland is postponed—the attempts of the Agitators render it necessary that an officer so intimately acquainted with Irish affairs should not be removed from his important post. Sir Frederick Adam and Sir Willoughby Cotton are aspirants for the command.

Sir C. Napier's remonstrance respecting the scarcity of European officers with Native regiments has drawn serious attention to the subject, and may probably be attended with beneficial results.

It is expected that, as soon as further advices are received, a gazette will be published, conferring honours on Sir Charles Napier, and brevet rank on the officers who distinguished themselves at the battle of Meeanee. H.M.'s 22nd regt. will probably be permitted to carry the words "Hyderabad,—Scinde," on its colours.

On 30th May the Government entered into a contract with Messrs. Learmonth, the principal Army accoutrement makers, for 10,000 sets of accoutrements, to be supplied forthwith. This order confirms the general impression that the Army is about to be considerably increased.

In consequence of the alarming state of Ireland, an order has been issued this week to augment all the regiments in the Service, with the exception of those in India and China, and New South Wales, and those having two battalions, from 740 to 800 rank and file. This order to recruit the regiments, issued so suddenly, and so very recently after the reductions made in the Army Estimates, has excited considerable surprise. All the Irish forts, castles, and battlements, have been inspected by a Government engineer, and ordered to be repaired and placed in a state of perfect efficiency.

JUNE 5 and 6.—The following reached London via France, on the afternoon of the 2nd, by telegraph and extraordinary express:—"The Oriental brings the news from India to the 2nd May, and from China to the 12th of March. It represents affairs in Scinde as perfectly tranquil, but some disturbances had taken place in Sirhind. A somewhat serious engagement had been fought in the territory of Khytul."

The Wesleyan body have issued another circular, calling on all their congregations to petition against the Factories Bill in its present (amended) shape.

The announcement that possession of the Sandwich Islands had been taken by Lord George Paulett in the name of her Majesty, has thrown the Paris press into a new paroxysm, which has received aggravation by a document published by two foreign diplomatists, of whose existence we had the misfortune to be in total ignorance: these are Timoteo Haalilio and William Richards, Envoys of his Majesty King Kannehameha III. to his Majesty the King of the French, who, with infinite promptitude, protested, through the official evening papers of Friday, against this wanton aggression of England, and threaten her with the consequences.

The Athlone Sentinel announces that some of the Roman Catholic Bishops were about to direct their clergy to insert the name of Mr. O'Connell after the Queen's, in the public prayers; in consequence of threats of assassination, and "lest the Almighty would permit the violent removal of the only man who can at present direct the mighty storm of public opinion."

The Repeal agitation increases in Ireland. The rent for the week, announced at the close of the meeting, was 2,205*l.*!—a much larger sum than had been received in any week during the agitation which led to Catholic emancipation. At the meeting of the Repeal Association a circumstance occurred which excited the deepest sensation amongst all parties. Sir C. O'Loghlin, Bart. (son of the late Master of the Rolls), and ten other members of the Irish bar, several of them gentlemen of extensive practice, and all of them men who had heretofore kept aloof from the movement, gave in their adhesion to the association.

The Irish Repeal agitation has spread to England. The Repealers of Liverpool have had a public meeting as a demonstration of sympathy; and in Manchester groups of Irishmen paraded some of the streets, levying contributions towards the Repeal-rent on shopkeepers and publicans. The police took steps to suppress the nuisance.

The Government having considered it politic to establish a light squadron on the coast of Ireland, with a rear-admiral in command, Rear-Admiral Bowles, C. B., is appointed to that command, and has proceeded to Dublin in the Lightning steamer, preparatory to his hoisting his flag on board the Malabar, 72, Capt. Sir G. Sartorius, which is fitting at Plymouth for that purpose, with the Malabar. The Tyne, 28, Rose, 18, Racer, 16, Lynx, 10, and Nautilus, 10, are ordered to proceed to Ireland. Ten steamers will also assemble on that station, two of which will lie in the river Shannon. The Fairlie, Rosehill, for Hong-Kong, is arrived at Portsmouth to embark troops.

There was some serious rioting at the village of Carney, near Dungannon, on the 30th May. An Orange party went from Dungannon to oppose a monthly Repeal meeting in the village: at first they were repulsed, and had a drum taken from them; but, obtaining reinforcements in Dungannon, they renewed the attack, routed the Repealers, and razed some houses.

Speaking of the last news from India, the Times says, "We have had occasion to say much for and much against Lord Ellenborough. We have disliked some of his past—we suspect some of his present—policy. But viewed as a military appointment, we must allow that the confidence which he has placed in Sir C. Napier has answered. We will say somewhat more—that as a matter of mere policy the present conquest seems considerably less questionable than that of his predecessor, which was gained by military successes of similar brilliancy, and hailed in this country with feelings of similar triumph. The one attempt was to coerce the population of a distant and almost impenetrable country; the present is the expulsion of a dominant and unpopular tribe from a country which they have oppressed—from the rich and level banks of the Indus—contiguous to our own frontier, and accessible to our steam-boats. In wisdom Lord Ellenborough's enterprise seems at present to have the advantage of his predecessor's. Yet still we must wait and see. The adhesion of the Affghans to Shah Soojah was scarcely less vaunted by the unfortunate Envoy at his Court, than the 'delight' of the Scindian population by Sir C. Napier. In spite of somewhat more promising circumstances, it may still prove that in Scinde, too, our difficulties are only beginning."

And we confess that this apprehension is not lessened by the absence hitherto of any statement of the excuses or justifications of this wholesale seizure. Of such things there is a total absence in our Indian news; and we have only to hope that Sir R. Peel and the Duke of Wellington, in their respective places, will have some better reasons to give for an act of violence, always at first sight suspicious, than our own determination to possess the Indus, the alleged oppressions of the Scindian people by their Beloochees rulers, or their conversion of fertile land, capable of paying a good land-tax to the Government and profit to the cultivator, into a hunting forest for their own boars and roebucks.

We shall wait patiently for this explanation, which doubtless will soon be required. But meanwhile we must, as others have done before us, distinctly guard ourselves from being supposed to relinquish any of our prima facie objections to the justice of Lord Ellenborough's policy, or all of our apprehensions for the ultimate result of his sweeping appropriation. Even while most fully participating in the public admiration of the gallantry of his subordinates, and appreciating the value of these acquisitions, which are in good truth worth anything to our Indian empire short of that honour which we may find we have sacrificed in their pursuit, we must still remember that one previous question, and that the most important one, has still to be answered.—London Mail.

Abstract of the Report of the Church Missionary Society, for 1843.—The Rev. R. Davis, one of the Secretaries of the Society, then commenced reading the Report for the past year, of which the following is an abstract of the principal features:—The Committee stated, that whereas they had commenced the labours of the past year under the oppression of a considerable debt, and the necessity for a very heavy expenditure, yet, taking their stand upon those Protestant and truely Evangelical principles by which the operations of the Society had ever been characterized, they now rejoiced to say, that the result was their present almost complete redemption from their financial difficulties. (Hear.) The income of the Society for the past year had exceeded 115,000*l.* (cheer); and, in addition to this, the Committee were glad to be able to state, that their Report was this year unalloyed by any accounts of any serious mortality among those who were engaged in carrying its labours into execution. The Bishops of Barbadoes and of British Guiana had accepted the office of Vice-Presidents of the Society; and the King of Prussia had become a member of it, having presented it with a donation of 100*l.*, besides becoming an annual subscriber of 25*l.* (Cheers.) With reference to the Institution of the Society, the Principal was described in the Report as speaking of it in the highest terms, as one of the most important features of the operations of the Society; and, as it were, the very spring-head of missionary efforts. God grant that all the streams which flowed from it might be as pure and unalloyed as their source. Of the West African Mission, the Committee were enabled to give an encouraging Report. No death had occurred in it during the past year, and the most encouraging conviction prevailed that the blessing of God rested on all the labours of this portion of the Society's operations, and the Committee had every anticipation that extensive benefit would accrue from this Mission to other parts of Africa. With respect to the Christian Institution, the Committee felt that a necessity existed for placing it on a more efficient footing; and, in order to carry out this object, they had made an appeal for a subscription of 2,000*l.*, which was the estimated expense; and though that appeal had not yet quite realized their expectation, yet the Committee had every hope that the subject would be effected, and they had already commenced the additional buildings that were required for it. On the subject of female education, the Committee stated, that a higher degree of instruction had been determined upon. Of the general progress and result of the Society's missionary labours, the Report referred to several very satisfactory instances; and the Committee adverted with much gratification to an extract from a Report of a Committee of the House of Commons, relative to West Africa, of which Lord Sandon was chairman. in which the benefits which had been conferred upon that part of the world by the exertions of the Church Missionary Society, were spoken of in high terms, it being stated, that on that part of the African coast, not less than one-fifth of the whole population had attended the schools of the Society, and that the effect was visible in their general moral and religious improvement. (Hear.) The Committee of the Society also spoke with satisfaction of the state and progress of the missions beyond Sierra Leone. The result of the labours of the Timmanee Mission was gratifying, and Mr. Thomson's labours among the territories of the Kings of Teemoo and Bambarra had been very encouraging. With reference to Mr. Townsend's mission, that active agent of the Society had visited Badagry, in the Bight of Benin, in a ship called the Wilberforce, and had been received with welcome and encouragement. In the East African Mission, the same desire for the word of God, which was noticed in the last Report, continued to increase; and the Mediterranean Missions were equally progressive. With respect to the New Zealand Mission, it was advancing in every respect, in spite of the opposing efforts of Popery and worldliness. The Bishop had arrived on the 19th of June, at the Bay of Islands, and had made such progress in his knowledge of the native language, that, immediately on landing, he had commenced conversing with the people in their own tongue. (Cheers.) The Northern Island, which was now divided into four districts, were all progressing favourably. The accounts from Waimate were most gratifying. On one occasion the number of persons present at the administration of the Lord's Supper was so great that it was found necessary to hold the service in the church-yard. There were upwards 1,000 natives present, and 487 partook of the Lord's Supper. At Tauranga, 198 persons have been baptized during the past year, being an increase of seventy on any preceding year: the congregation amounted to 1,575 persons, being an increase of 238; the number of those who read the Scriptures in their own tongue exceeded by 100 the last return: four chapels had been erected at the expense of the natives. In the eastern and western districts there were increasing evidences of usefulness and of real faith. War was almost entirely given up, and the old chieftains spoke of it with disgust. (Hear.) The munificent grant of 10,000 copies of the Scriptures from the British and Foreign Bible Society having been exhausted, another edition had been printed, and 5,000 copies granted to the Society. (Applause.) The desire to possess copies of the New Testament was general and intense. A lofty mountain, Tongorino, was visited by strangers, who offered gold to natives to guide them; but they refused it, and said, that gold could not break the charm of tapu, but if they would bring Testaments next time, the tapu should be removed from the mountain. ("Hear," and applause.) Within the last four years, the number of natives who had embraced Christianity had increased from 2,000 to 35,000, and not a few to the saving of their souls. Of the character of their Christianity, the Committee would say with their missionary, Mr. Brown, "We look not upon our infant Church as all glorious within, and as consisting wholly of those who count all things loss for Christ—they are yet but babes in Christ, and as such we commend them to the prayers of the Church, that they may grow in grace, till they shall arrive at the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." (Hear, hear.) The arrangements for withdrawing the operations of the Society from Trinidad, had been delayed by circumstances justifying the delay; nor were they quite completed at Jamaica, but three stations only remained out of nineteen which existed in 1842. In North-west America the work progressed favourably. At the Cumberland station, 500 or 600 miles from the head-quarters of the Mission, a native schoolmaster, named Henry Budd, the first-fruit of missionary labour, being one of two Indian youths who were some years ago committed to the care of a zealous servant of God, was sustaining alone a flourishing station. The Rev. J. Smithers found there thirty-one children in the school, and on the day preceding the Sabbath a whole fleet of canoes, bearing from sixty to seventy natives, arrived there to attend the services of the following day. Upon June 26, last year, Mr. Smithers admitted eighty-five Indians to baptism—thirty-eight adults and forty-seven of their children. (Hear.) Here was a little Church in the wilderness—a flock destitute of a shepherd. Would not the Christians of England follow the advice of Mr. Cunningham, and double their subscriptions rather than that they should remain without one, and the operations of the Mission in such an engaging and extensive field of usefulness as that presented in North-west America?

The Rev. J. Venn then proceeded to read the remainder of the Report.

North India Mission.—At the station of Calcutta the good work had prospered during the last year, and on the out-stations great success had followed the efforts of the missionaries. Those stations comprised eighteen villages, and the number of converts was 300, of whom ninety-six had been baptized during the past year, and these had been admitted to that holy rite on two occasions, the candidates being brought up to the front in families. Upon this subject the Rev. J. Long writes:—"Every months experience adds to my conviction of the advantages of Calcutta as a missionary station, and as a centre from which the truths of the Gospel should spread to the surrounding country. Brahminism is fast receiving its death-blow in this country." And again:—"When not engaged in my scholastic duties, I am generally engaged in conversations upon the truths of religion with hundreds of educated young men. The English language is now almost generally spoken, and on every account it is a matter of the highest importance that every effort should be made to spread Christian instruction in this district. From Krishnaghur the accounts were not quite so encouraging. Many in this district who had come in had gone back to idolatry. Still the number of the baptized was 3,000, and 660 had been added during the past year; but of this district the Committee had been warned by the Bishop of Calcutta of the danger which would at the outset beset this infant Church; but while it was to be regretted that there were many who had become Christian in name, and showed but little symptoms of a converted heart, there were many of a very different character, who held fast to the truths of the Gospel. The Rev. A. Alexander writes, that many of his congregation came miles to attend Divine worship; and the Rev. W. J. Deerr says:—"If I take a retrospect of twenty-five years, it is surprising to see what God has done for this part of India; but everything is yet in its infancy, and the seed but just springing up." In South India, from the Tinnevelly station, the Report differed in some degree from that of last year. It had pleased God to visit and purify the Church in this district with a violent persecution, which had occasioned many to go back. The total number of baptized on this station was 13,604, and there had been 1,221 baptisms in the course of the last year; and notwithstanding the number that had gone back on account of the persecution, there were still 1,178 communicants. This station was divided into six districts, and the Rev. gentleman who had charge of one of them wrote, that "none have gone back who had been long with us." There were in various parts of this station religious Societies supported by the native converts, especially a Church-building Society, for the purpose of building and enlarging churches, and which had already effected great good. At Cottayam the Rev. J. Bailey had completed and printed a translation of the Holy Scriptures and of the Liturgy in the Malayalim language, and churches had been erected in which the Church service was performed in the Malayalim language, and which were attended by large congregations. At Mallapali, on the Travencore hills, a wild and desolate district where the people were fierce, brutal, and ignorant, many converts had been made, and the sound of the Gospel was now heard with joy by more than 200 of these people, and 500 rupees had been subscribed by them for the building of a church. At Ceylon the prospects were encouraging; twenty-two converts had been recently baptized at Nellore, eight on the 2d of March from Bombay. The Society's stations throughout India were still almost without fruit. The principal advantages hitherto gained being the establishment of schools, and the distribution of religious tracts. There was no case of conversion on this station during the last year. The Committee, in concluding the Report, impress on all the friends of the Church Mission, the urgent need which existed for continuing of those noble efforts by which its treasury had been replenished; and they deprecated the notion that because so much had been raised in the last year therefore their efforts should now relax. The necessity for missionary exertions was now more urgent than ever. European superintendence, especially in the villages near Calcutta, was necessary to prevent a relapse into the state of Heathenism from which they had been rescued. They must never forget that the exertions of the venerable Schwartz had forty years ago left a large Christian flock at Tinnevelly, which, having been neglected, had relapsed almost into idolatry, and the Society was now carrying on the work which had been begun there forty years since. The Bishop of Calcutta, who had recently visited that district, had expressed his wonder and admiration at these blessed Missions. The Bishop said, that twenty-four more missionaries were immediately required, and exclaimed, "Oh! what can England be about, with her drivelling contests about tradition and the Fathers, when India was stretching out her arms to England for aid?" Neither was the call on the Christian public limited to the support of existing Missions. New and sudden openings had of late been presented by the opening of Central Africa, by the way of Sierra Leone and the Niger, and by the opening of the great empire of China. (Cheers.) In the former, even the kings and chiefs of Central Africa had invited the residence of missionaries amongst them. China—with an amount of population more than one-half of the whole Heathen world—China, to which are owed so much in return for the evils brought upon her by the pernicious trade in opium—presented peculiar facilities for the exertions of missionaries, from the circumstance that the whole of the population was a reading population, and read the same books in the same language, notwithstanding the vast variety of their spoken dialects. Peculiar facilities suddenly arising might be taken as an indication of God's will; and with respect to Africa, an opening had now been offered to the Society without any expense to itself; and with respect to China, the Lord had put it into the heart of one of his servants to offer 6,000*l.* for that specific purpose. ("Hear," and cheers.) The Committee, therefore, felt themselves fully justified in calling on their friends for renewed exertions, not only to strengthen existing Missions, but to avail themselves of the new openings which had arisen, and this call, they humbly anticipated, would not be made in vain. (Loud cheering.)

"STATE OF THE FINANCES.

(To save time the remainder of the Report was omitted to be read, but as it stands in the Report we publish it.)

"The signal blessing vouchsafed of the Society with regard to its finances, has been already noticed. The receipts of the year from all sources are as follows:—

| | £ | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| General Fund, ............ | £104,177 | 15 | 7 |
| China, .................... | 5,805 | 0 | 0 |
| Fourah Bay, ............... | 339 | 3 | 0 |
| Capital Fund, ............. | 3,715 | 1 | 3 |
| Disabled Missionaries, &c. ... | 1,063 | 10 | 9 |
| | £115,100 | 10 | 7 |

"The expenditure of the year stands as follows:—

| | £ | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| On the General Fund Account | £92,446 | 1 | 9 |
| Liquidation of debt, ......... | 6,495 | 18 | 11 |

"Since the accounts were closed on the 31st of March, a farther payment has been made on account of debt of 6,000l.

"Thus, through the Divine bountifulness, the debt of the Society, which at the commencement of the year amounted to 13,500*l*., is now reduced to 1,000*l*.

"In the receipts of the year are included 5,805*l*., a legacy of the late Rev. John Natt, and a like sum of 5,805*l*. (6,000*l*. Consols), a munificent donation by one who wishes to be no otherwise known than as Ελαχιστότερος (less than the least). It is also gratifying to the Committee to report that the receipts of the year include a contribution from the Corporation of the City of London of 500*l*.

"The appropriation of the donation of 6,000*l*. Consols is thus limited by the donor:—'I would destine and limit it to a special object; an object, nevertheless, which I have observed has already occupied the attention of several warm friends of the Society, but which has not yet been taken up, it appears, for want of the necessary means: namely, an attempt to make known the knowledge of a Saviour to that vast country, China, to which, apparently, an access is now open to us.' This sum, therefore, is not applicable to the maintenance of the Society's existing Missions.

"In pursuance of the course explained in the last Annual Report, the Committee, immediately after the Anniversary Meeting, took measures to reduce the scale of the year's expenditure to 85,000*l*. The managements for that purpose embraced the relinquishment of the Society's operations in Malta, Trinidad, and Jamaica, and a reduction of expenditure in some other Missions. It required, however, a considerable interval to carry out these arrangements in the distant Missions. The printing establishment at Malta has been entirely disposed of. In Jamaica, the Mission is now reduced to two missionaries and one catechist; but it was not practicable to effect the reduction of the Mission without involving an expenditure on account of it in the past year of nearly 6,000*l*. In Trinidad, the difficulties have been still greater in effecting a reduction of the Society's establishment. This has arisen partly from the sees being vacant at the early part of the year, and partly from the absence at a later period of the Governor, whose co-operation is needed in order to a satisfactory adjustment of the matter. The cost of this Mission, therefore, is little less than in the preceding year.

"In the total of 92,446*l*. above-mentioned, is also included 1,995*l*. 18s. 11d. for tradesmen's bills, forming part of the debt at the beginning of the year.

"In those Missions, the operations of which the Committee decided on continuing, they have the fullest reason to believe that the ratio of expenditure assigned to them will be strictly adhered to.

"In the year just closed, the various causes which have been specified have carried up the expenditure, as above noticed, to 92,446*l*.

"On annalyzing the aggregate receipts of the past year, with a view to fix the ratio of expenditure for the ensuing year, it was requisite to deduct the following items, either as not applicable to the general expenditure of the Society, as not to be anticipated in the next year, or, as in the case of the contributions in the Missions, as applicable to the support of the Missions wherein they are raised, in addition to the sums allowed from home:—

|---|---|
| Capital Fund .. .. .. .. .. | £3,715 |
| Disabled Missionaries' Fund .. | 1,063 |
| Natt's Legacy .. .. .. .. | 5,805 |
| —— Donation (China) .. .. | 5,805 |
| Negro Education Grant .. .. | 1,850 |
| City of London Grant .. .. .. | 500 |
| Contributions in the Missions .. | 4,756 |
| | £23,494 |

"The Committee, moreover, have not felt themselves warranted to calculate on the same amount of benefactions as received in the last year, when contributions were liberally made with the special view of liberating the Society from debt.

"On the best view which the Committee have been able to take of the financial situation of the Society, they have judged it right to adhere to the course pursued last year, and to limit the scale of expenditure for the year, on account of the existing Missions of the Society, to 85,000*l*. The discontinuation of the Malta establishment; the reduction of the Mission in Jamaica to its present limited extent; and the prospect of narrowing the expenditure of the Society in Trinidad, will, it is anticipated, leave at the disposal of the new Committee the means of some enlargement of operations in the existing Missions. The means thus available will, however, fall far short of what is needed to enable the Committee duly to improve the encouraging opportunities of extending the Society's operations which are placed within their reach. Indeed, the Committee feel that the circumstances of the Society are such as to demand the persevering prayers and exertions of their friends to sustain the operations to which the Society is already pledged.

"It has been stated above that the donation of 6,000*l*. Consols is limited to China. With such a foundation laid for resuming the operations of the Society in that country, the Committee could no longer decline taking preparatory measures for that purpose. They have, therefore, determined on engaging the services of two clergymen as missionaries to China, so soon as two individuals of suitable qualifications for this difficult undertaking shall be met with. At present, the General Fund of the Society is insufficient to provide for a Mission to China, even of this limited extent. The Committee, have, therefore, opened a seperate fund for the China Mission. They do so with considerable solicitude, lest it should operate to the diminution of the General Fund, at present inadequate duly to sustain the existing missions. They trust, therefore, that their friends in promoting contributions to the China Mission Fund, will use the utmost precaution not to injure the General Fund. The Committee have yielded to the opening of a separate fund for China, from regarding the present undertaking as of an experimentary nature; with a view to ascertain what facilities for missionary operations in China may really be the result of the late peace with that country. Should the Mission be permanently established, the Committee would place it on the General Fund of the Society in the same manner as its other Missions.

"It is stated above, that the amount received on account of the capital fund during the year, was, 3,715*l*. This, in addition to the sum reported last year, makes a total of about 5,000*l*.—an amount wholly inadequate to effect the purpose for which this fund was opened. The proceedings of the past year have afforded an additional illustration of the necessity of a fund of this description of considerable amount. In the course of the year, the Committee were compelled to borrow to the extent of 19,000*l*., to meet the inequality between the receipts and expenditure, which constantly occurs during a considerable part of the year. This involved a charge last year for interest of upwards of 700*l*. To this expenditure the Society must be constantly subjected, until a sum of money, constituting a capital fund, shall be placed at the disposal of the Committee equal to meet the inequality between expenditure and income above adverted to; and so relieve them from the necessity of borrowing money to meet the current expenditure. The Committee, therefore, earnestly solicit contributions from their friends to this fund."—Record.

CHURCH OF SCOTLAND FOREIGN MISSIONS.—On Thursday evening the tenth anniversary meeting of the London Auxiliary to the Foreign Missions, conducted by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street. William Hamilton, Esq., having taken the chair, the Secretary read a report of the operations of the society and the state of the missions abroad during the past year. The establishments in India were all in a prosperous condition; and the examinations of the children, educated through the instrumentality of the missionaries, gave great satisfaction to all who attended them. The Indian newspapers had passed high eulogiums upon the manner in which the schools were conducted. Since the last annual meeting of the Association, additional schools and churches had been opened under favourable auspices, and many of the former contain 700 scholars and upwards daily. Calcutta, Bombay, Poonah, Bengal, Madras, and the other places reported upon last year, continued, as regarded the missions of the Scottish Church, in a prosperous state. The income of the London Auxiliary during the past year amounted to 686*l*., which sum had been paid to the "General Assembly." The report having been adopted, the meeting broke up.—Pat.

ENDOWMENT OF ADDITIONAL MINISTERS.—On the Motion for the House resolving itself into Committee on the subject of endowment of additional ministers in populous places.

Sir R Peel said, in reply to a question from Mr. Hume, that the proposition involved no grant of public money.

The House then went into Committee, and

Sir R. Peel stated the progress which had been made to remedy the evils arising from the population progressing in various towns in a greater ratio than the means of providing them with religious instruction. This evil being admitted, the next question was as to the means of applying a remedy, and for these it was the present intention of the Government that ecclesiastical revenues should be applied to the purpose, but if these should hereafter prove to be insufficient, it would become his duty to apply to Parliament for assistance. The Right Hon. Baronet adverted to the advantages which had resulted from the Ecclesiastical Commission appointed in 1834, and stated, that in consequence of the reduction of the number of cathedral establishments a revenue of 25,000*l*. was now at their disposal, applicable to the augmentation of small livings. This sum would in future years be largely increased from the same source. He proposed to borrow 600,000*l*. from the capital stock of 1,200,000*l*. standing in the names of the Governors of the Queen Anne's Bounty to be secured on the revenues accruing hereafter to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. He proposed that the sum borrowed should be applied to the increase of spiritual instruction to the extent of 30,000*l*. per annum, not the building of churches, but for the endowment of ministers in aid of local subscriptions. If a minister were endowed in a destitute district, he had no doubt but that the erection of a church by subscription would soon follow as a result of his labours. He believed it to be of importance that they should immediately proceed to action, and as he asked for no public money, he hoped the House would unanimously agree to the proposed plan. The Right Hon. Baronet concluded by moving a Resolution upon which to found a Motion for leave to bring in a Bill to carry out the scheme he proposed.

Sir R. Inglis could not give his approbation to the plan, although he would not embarrass the Government by any observations which could have the effect of strengthening, the hands of those from whom the Church had nothing to expect. He confidently looked forward to the time when the House would be asked for a grant of public money in furtherance of the religious instruction of the people. It was to the enlargement of the Church Establishment that the country looked for the means of improving its social condition, and it was to be remembered that the greatest evils of the late insurrection prevailed in districts insufficiently provided with pastoral care. He sincerely hoped the present plan would prove beneficial though it by no means came up to his expectations.

Lord Dungannon approved of the proposed plan, which he thought would be productive of lasting benefit.

Captain Bernal, in reference to the Puseyite schism, asked Sir R. Peel what were the principles of the Church of England, as by law established, as it was but right to know what doctrines were to be inculcated by the new ministers.

Mr. Colquhoun treated the present measure as a step in the right direction, which he hoped to see followed up by Parliament hereafter.

Lord J. Russell was not prepared, so far as he understood the plan, to bestow upon it his unqualified admiration, although it certainly contained the elements of utility. It was not, however, any defect, according to his views, that the plan required no grant of public money in its support.

Mr. Hume thought they should promote the education of the people without augmenting the Established Church.

Mr. Pakington approved of the plan.

Mr. Gisborne thought the question of Church extension was forced upon the Government, and upon the whole they had brought it forward in as moderate a shape as could have been anticipated.

Mr. Plumptre said, he had no reason whatever to disapprove of the proposal now made by the Right Hon Bart. towards the affording of endowments for ministers in populous districts, and he begged to add, that he had been very highly gratified by the tone and language employed by the Right Hon. Gentleman in bringing this proposal before the House. It was most pleasing to him (Mr. Plumptre) to hear the Prime Minister of this great country speaking of the application of religion as the main remedy for the many social evils that are to be found amongst us. Everything was to be hoped for if this great remedy could, under God's blessing, be brought to bear upon the population of the land. The Hon. and Gallant Member for Wycombe had referred, in the discussion of subject before the House, to certain opinions introduced of late years by certain members of the Church, and had said that such opinions ought to be guarded against. He quite agreed with the Hon. and Gallant Member; and as he (the Hon. and Gallant Member) had introduced the subject, he (Mr. Plumptre) would say that he believed that the holders of these opinions, the Tractarians, were inflicting an injury of no common amount on the Church of which they are members. They were giving the utmost offence in many quarters (hear, hear,) and when, in language almost as unintelligible as in his opinion it was altogether unscriptural and uncharitable, they ventured to consign to "the uncovenanted mercies of God," members of any other Church than their own, they were creating disgust, and driving from their churches very many by whom such exclusive opinions could not be tolerated. (Cheering.) The Hon. Member for Montrose (Mr. Hume) had alluded to the empty state of many churches in the City. He (Mr. Plumptre) had heard of this state of things, and he believed he might venture a general opinion that the extent of congregations very much depended on the character of the preaching employed before them. He remembered a saying of Rowland Hill, that the place where a cannon-ball might be fired with the least risk in London on a Sunday, would be along the aisle of a church in which the Gospel was not preached. And he (Mr. Plumptre) thought this was pretty nearly true in these days. People were not satisfied now with a mere dry, moral discourse; they desire to hear the Gospel faithfully and affectionately preached. (Hear, hear.) And when this was the case, as for instance in that great church St. Bride's the minister which the Right Hon. Bart. (Sir R. Peel) had appointed when he was for a short time in power in 1835, he (Mr. P.) believed there was a crowded congregation whenever the church was opened. (Hear, hear.) The body of ministers to whom he had before alluded, the Tractarians, did much; he believed, towards emptying their churches, and he could not wish it to be otherwise. He trusted they would not be countenanced. The Right Hon. Bart. at the head of the Government had given proof of his sentiments with regard to them, by the appointment he had made to the bishopric Chichester (hear, hear); and he (Mr. P.) hoped, from some little indication of his feeling that he had manifested during the present dicussion, that the Right Hon. Bart. would still discountenance opinions which he (Mr. Plumptre) believed sincerely were dishonourable to the Church of Christ generally, and greatly injurious to the established religion of this country. (Hear, hear, hear.)

Mr. Borthwick complained of the practice of making shows of our churches, charging two-pence for admission to them, instead of throwing them open to all. He then proceeded to complain of the attacks that had that evening been made on the Tratarians, as they were called, and to speak in the highest terms of the learning, piety, and benevolence of the gentlemen so described.

Lord Sandon supported the plan as likely to prove beneficial to the temporal as well as spiritual welfare of the people.

Mr. Campbell, while he approved of the plan condemned the doctrines of Puseyism, and said he would not support any Motion calculated to promote the doctrines of a sect opposed to the principles of the Reformation.

After some further discussion, in which Mr. H. Curtis, Lord J. Manners, and Mr. Brotherton, took part,

Mr. Acland said, he thought that for that House to enter on questions of doctrine could lead to nothing but idle discussions. He agreed with the suggestion thrown out, that the right place for such discussions was the Convocation. He should not object to the Right Hon. Gentleman's plan because it had not been laid before Convocation; but he must protest against the constitutional right of the Church of England to express her opinion on her internal affairs being questioned. He thanked the Right Honourable Gentleman for the manner in which he had referred to the exertions made by private persons in the cause of religion, which would be gratefully received by those who had laboured in the cause, and taken as evidence that they had produced some good.

Sir R. Peel replied, and said that the difference of opinion expressed in the course of the debate upon the propriety of requiring a Parliamentary grant fully justified him in refraining from adopting that course. He believed the annual sum of 30,000*l* which he proposed would be found adequate, with the aid of voluntary subscriptions, to promote the real welfare of the Church more effectually than if he had required a large grant of public money.

The Resolution was then agreed to and the House resumed, after which leave was given to bring in the Bill.—Record.

MISCELLANEOUS.

RESPECT TO THE MEMORY OF THE DUKE OF SUSSEX.—The City, on Thursday, presented almost the appearance of the Sabbath, scarcely a shop being open for business, agreeably to the wish of the chief magistrate, in order to show the respect of the citizens of London to the memory of his late Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex. Until one o'clock nearly the whole of the shops were kept closed, and during the morning the bells of the City churches were tolled at intervals of a minute. Some of the shops remained closed during the whole day, and business was entirely suspended, whilst scarcely one was not partially closed. In other parts of the metropolis the shops were closed.

We are informed that the personal property left by the late Duke of Sussex is considerable, his life having been insured to very large amounts in several offices. The interest of the bulk of his property, it is said, has been settled on the Duchess of Inverness; the principal to revert, on the death of her Grace, to the son and daughter of his Royal Highness by his former wife. It is also whispered that handsome legacies have been bequeathed to the various charitable Institutions of which his Royal Highness was the munificent patron. —Brighton Gazette.

Sir Henry Hardinge has instituted inquiries respecting the expediency of granting to soldiers a free discharge after ten years service, to encourage a better class of persons to enlist in the army.—Record.

A court for the decision of quarrels between literary men, publishers, &c., has been established at Stuttgardt, and has succeeded so well that the example is about to be followed in Leipsic.—Ibid.

A Spanish journal states, that in consequence of the abundance of the growth of oranges of an excellent quality in the south of Spain, and the difficulty of disposing of them for exportation at a good price, several of the growers convert them into wine, which is said to be of a delicious quality, and resembling much in flavour the wine of Madeira.—Ibid.

THE WINE TRADE.—The breaking off of the negotiations with Portugal and Brazil, for establishing more liberal commercial treaties, will at least remove the state of suspense in which merchants trading with those countries have been so long kept. The falling off in port wine alone during the year 1842, will show the injurious effect it has had, being no less than 1,351,258 gallons, as compared with the average number on which duty was paid for the three preceding years, and which at 5s. 6d. per gallon, and five per cent., shows a loss to the revenue, in 1842, of 390,175*l* 14s. 11d.—Record.

We learn from a source on which we can place every reliance, that an intended change is shortly about to take place in the uniform of all the grades of officers in Her Majesty's navy.—Hampshire Telegraph.

A Bill has been introduced in the State Legislature of Pennsylvania, providing for the incorporation of a company, to whom shall be sold the principal State works. The object is, to appropriate the proceeds of such sale to a diminution of the State debt.—Record.

EMPLOYMENT OF CONVICTS IN THE DOCKYARDS.—The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have ordered the officers of the dockyards in which convicts are employed to furnish a report of the number of labours it would take to do the same amount of work as 100 convicts, and the difference of expense, taking into account the cost of the hulks, &c. This order is received by the friends of the honest labourer with the greatest satisfaction, for they cannot but hope that it is only a preparatory step towards the entire abolition of convict labour from the arsenals.—Ibid.

IMPROVEMENT IN SHIPPING.—It is only a short time since our docks had an unusual number of vessels at whose mast heads a broom was fixed, denoting them on sale; but within the last week this sign of depressed times has so rapidly decreased that there are now scarcely a dozen vessels advertised for sale; the others having been either advantageously chartered or sold. From this we may contemplate a speedy increase in the demand for export goods.—Liverpool Standard.

DISCIPLINE OF THE NAVY.—The fact that the ships' companies of the three ships have manifested an opinion as to the estimation in which the hold their officers has attracted the attention of the Admiralty. Within these few days, the crew of the Herald thought proper to cheer Lieutenant Dewes on his return to his ship, after a slight censure from a court-martial; and for this their Lordships have issued a circular expressive of their disapprobation of the custom of cheering, it being contrary to the naval instructions; and to those instructions they direct the attention of commanding-officers as regarding this point, it being, in the opinion of their Lordships, a strong proof of a lax discipline whenever the seamen were permitted to indulge in it. To the credit of Captain Elliot, the late Captain of the Spartan frigate, we are bound to record that he, very shortly after returning on board, from the recent court-martial, turned the hands up, and expressed his sense of the breach of discipline they had been guilty of, though he felt grateful for the feeling they had evinced towards him. If seamen are permitted thus to express their approbation, who shall say how soon they will show their disapprobation, and then what becomes of the discipline of the service?—Hampshire Paper.

ENGLISH BRUTALITY.—We hardly know, apart from serious crimes against the person of a more atrocious offence than the following, communicated in a private letter to a gentleman of this city, and from which we have been permitted to make an extract:—

"Butts (Rochdale), April 30, 1843.

"I think I named to you in a former note that Danby's picture of 'The Opening of the Sixth Seal' was exhibiting here, since which I have learnt that it belongs to Mr. Brett, of London, who, I believe, you have some knowledge of. But grieved am I to tell you, that some miscreant last evening, between four and five o'clock, cut a piece about twelve inches by eight, out of the centre of it, in the temporary absence from the room of the exhibitor. The slave, with uplifted hands, with the prostrate king and warrior in armour is the part cut out, and taken away, and no trace whatever is left of the parties who committed this execrable deed. The poor fellow and his wife, who have the charge of it, are almost deranged. He was gone out to give orders for printing bills to announce his last week, and his wife let in two strangers, it is supposed not belonging to the town, and immediately after they had left the room, the man, on going in, observed that the light was excluded, and on opening the window the discovery was made." The picture was valued at 1,000 guineas, and was being disposed of in shares, at 1*l.* 1s. each, the list of which was nearly completed.—Bristol Gazette.

TREATMENT OF THE INSANE.—Having observed, some eighteen months since, in your paper, a short notice on the effect produced by Music at the lunatic asylum of this town, it may not be uninteresting to you and your readers to know the result of that experiment, and how far the attempt has answered the intentions of the philanthropic and zealous director.

First allow me a few preparatory remarks. England boasts itself, and justly, as the cradle of those enlightened ideas which now preside at the direction of the insane; and in France, where that speciality now attracts so much attention, few names are more honoured than that of Dr. Ellis. Yet, if I mistake not, the French are now in advance even of the English in their treatment.

The present director, Dr. Girard de Cailleux, was named here in 1839, in virtue of the law of 1838, for centralizing the lunatic asylums, and found the Hospital, as all those in France at that epoch, under the management of religieuses, and without any resident physician. The old system reigned in all its horrors,—that is, cells, seclusion, and straight waistcoats. The number of the former was to the inmates as 54 for 150 patients, and 22 more were actually contracted for when the change took place. The patients were fed like wild beasts, and left all day without employment. Need I say the cures were few? This treatment was immediately changed; social life was exchanged for seclusion, employment was gradually given to all, idiots excepted; every kind of délassement was furnished, music and reading introduced; and such has been the effect, that about a month since, when conducted over the asylum, we were perfectly astonished at the order and regularity everywhere remarkable, and at the cheerfulness and uniform politeness of all the patients. It appeared to us to be nothing more than a well regulated almshouse. The cells were everywhere empty, the dortoirs full. The patients are all present at meals. They work, they promenade together, their amusements all in common, and almost all the work of the house is performed by the patients. We found the tailors, shoemakers, carpenters, sempstresses, spinners, laundresses, all engaged with evident pleasure at their respective employments; and those who have no handicraft skill, work in the garden, cultivate the land, or are employed in digging a canal for bringing a supply of water to the establishment, straw-plaiting for hats, bonnets, &c., and the least able at mat-making.

Sunday, the 26th, was the anniversary of the establishment, and a grand mass in music was executed entirely by the insane. Yes, and well executed too. The singers, about 50, were in the gallery, and the choir was filled by about 120 patients. What a cheering sight to contemplate the decorum everywhere observed;—the pleasure the patients appeared to feel, all dressed in new clothes, entirely made by themselves, and proud of their power to unite together and give delight to all that is most distinguished in or near the town: the préfet, the maire, judges, directors, engineers, with their wives and families, who came to witness and applaud the complete success of this philanthropic experiment!

I could give you many curious illustrations of the effects produced by the music in particular cases, but general results are, perhaps, best suited to your readers, and here they are:—In two years (1841-2) 44 patients have been discharged as cured out of an average of 190 patients,—paupers nearly all, and only sent to the establishment when it is impossible to leave them longer at liberty in their communes.

Auxerre, 28th March, 1843.—Athenæum.

RUSSIA AND SERVIA.—The Augsburg Gazette of the 30th ult. states, that Russia has confined her interference in Servian affairs to the fact of requiring from the Ottoman Porte that a new election should take place in that province in a legal form. The Porte is consequently free to exclude any candidate who may be displeasing to them, and likewise to limit the dignity of the Sovereign to the life of the Prince elected. "It is therefore evident," adds the Gazette, "that Russia has merely endeavoured to enforce her will relative to the question of principle, and that, consequently, the Emperor Nicholas has confined himself within legitimate bounds."—Record.

No. 148 of 1843.—In continuation of General Orders, No. 180, of the 21st July, and No. 276, of the 1st December 1841, the following Act passed by the Honourable the President of the Council of India in Council, in the Legislative Department, on the 28th of October 1842, with the assent of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India, is published for general information:

ACT No. XII. of 1842.

"An Act for the better Regulation of Military Bazars, and defining the liabilities of Camp-followers.

"I. It is hereby enacted, that no person residing within the limits of any Military Cantonment, or carrying on trade therein, or who shall have been a trader at any Military Cantonment shall be allowed to recover in any Military Court of Requests, for the Native Troops of the East India Company, held within any such Cantonment, any debt contracted in the way of trade, or for the loan of money, within any such Cantonment, by any person subject to the jurisdiction of such Court, unless the person seeking to recover the debt shall at the time of contracting thereof have been registered as a Military Bazarman within any such Cantonment.

II. THE Friends and Acquaintances of the late Mr. JOHN HENRY MOOR, for many years Head Master of the Singapore Institution Free School, will learn with regret that he died without leaving means to satisfy the claims against his Estate, and that his Widow and a family of eight Children, the eldest of whom is a Girl of fifteen, and the youngest an infant of three months old, are thus left in a state of absolute destitution. In a case so peculiarly distressing it is trusted that the Communities of the Straits Settlements where the deceased was so long and so well-known, will feel that this Orphan Family have no common claims on their charity and benevolence, which have heretofore never been appealed to in vain.

This Paper is put in circulation by the following Gentlemen who will form a temporary Committee for the collection of the funds subscribed and until the same be placed in the hands of the Trustees appointed by the Subscribers, at large for its future disposition and management for the benefit of the family.

Mr. H. W. Abbott, Agent of the Calcutta Union Bank, has kindly consented to act as Treasurer:

WM. MOORE,

General Post Office, July 10th, 1843.

THE BISHOP OF MADRAS AND THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The Madras Record of the 4th instant has a rumour that the Bishop of Madras had refused to ordain a gentleman connected with the Church Missionary Society on no other ground than that he was so connected; and adds, that the domineering spirit manifested by the present Diocesan more especially when contrasted with the humble piety of his predecessor Bishop Corrie, is not calculated to increase his own popularity. A correspondent of the Hurkaru, A Churchman, addressed a letter to the Editor on Saturday last, in which he asserts that the Record has not stated the whole truth, and enters upon a vindication of his Lordship's proceedings. The subject is not without some general interest, as it serves to illustrate the tendency and developement of Puseyism in India. The circumstances on which this refusal is grounded are these. A Missionary connected with the Church Society at the Madras Presidency, had exhibited very unequivocal evidence of belonging to the Puseyite School. The Madras Committee of the Society pronounced him to be disqualified from labouring in connection with the Church Missionary Society. The parent Society concurred with their local Committee, and the Revd. Mr. —— was, as the Churchman says, "expelled from the performance of the duties to which he had been licensed by the Bishop, and from which his Lordship had never relieved him"—in other words, the Church Missionary Society refused to devote the funds entrusted to them to the propagation of Puseyism, and the connection between the Society and the Missionary was dissolved. The Churchman is we suspect somewhat of a Puseyite himself, for he denounces this measure as a flagrant instance of the Society's "entrenching on the spiritual independence of the Missionary, and trespassing upon the ecclesiastical powers of the Bishop himself." He styles it a "trampling on an office, the purity, dignity and independence of which the Bishop is bound by his consecration vows to maintain." And as the Society had "deliberately insulted the very order which they wished the Bishop to confer; —as the Society would neither confess their delinquency, nor guarantee its non-repetition in future," the Bishop refused "to trust the sanctity of the priesthood to their patronage;" that is, refused to ordain the candidate of the Church Missionary Society.

We need not stop to examine the nature of this reasoning, we look only at its practical effect on the operations of the Church Missionary Society. It is of course well known that the Hundred Thousand Pounds sterling subscribed to that Association in England is entrusted to its agency for propagating the doctrines of the Gospel, as received by Protestants; and that any subscriber who thought his money would be devoted to the propagation of Puseyism, would at once withdraw his support from it. The Puseyites give their money to the Gospel Propagation Society. Now according to the doctrine laid down by A Churchman, the Church Missionary Society has no kind of control over its Ministers on the most important of all questions, the doctrines they teach the Heathen. The business of the Society, as it appears, is to find the money; it is the province of the Bishop to judge of the doctrine; and until the Bishop shall denounce any doctrines which the Missionary may think fit to propagate, the Society is bound to maintain him in the dissemination of them. If for instance, any Missionary were to preach to the heathen the doctrine of transubstantiation, and of the sacrifice of the mass, as inculcated by Dr. Pusey on a recent occasion in the University pulpit in Oxford, and the Bishop of Madras were to concur with the Puseyites in maintaining that these doctrines are in strict accordance with the ritual of the Church of England, the Church Society are without remedy. They must continue to support their missionary, and assist in the propagation of religious sentiments which they and their constituents hold in abhorrence. And it seems that the Bishop of Madras refuses to grant ordination to any candidates, until the Society shall not only express their contrition for having cut off the Rev. Mr. —— from their connection, but promise never to repeat the transgression; that is, until they shall bring themselves under an obligation to leave all spiritual questions of doctrine to the sole decision of the Bishop. Now as it is impossible for the Church Missionary Society thus to tie up their own hands, and solemnly renounce the power of withholding support from any Missionary who may think fit to teach Puseyism, in as much as this would inevitably lead to the extinction of the Society; and as on the other hand, the Bishop, as it would appear from A Churchman's letter, is "bound by his consecration vows," not to ordain any candidate for the Society unless they will part with the power of dismissal in such cases, and leave all questions of Doctrine to the Bishop, whoever he may chance to be, both parties are in a position which brother Jonathan would call a "fix."

The ground upon which the Bishop's demand on the Society is founded, is stated by A Churchman to be that "the Church of England requires her canditates for ordination to produce titles from some respectable quarter, whereby they may be secured from the temptation of engaging in secular labours for their livelihood, before they can be admitted into the sacred ministry. If a Bishop confer such an order without seeing his candidates so secured by a satisfactory title, he is bound to maintain them himself, in order to prevent the desecration of their sacerdotal office by entrance into secular work." He adds, "the Bishop cannot be expected to make ministers for a Society which assumes the power of unmaking them without ever consulting him." As to the unmaking a Clergyman here charged on the Society, it is evidently introduced in order to round the last sentence of the letter; but it is singularly misapplied. The Churchman ought to have known the principles of his own Church better than to suppose that it is in the power of any body of men to destroy Holy orders which are in their own nature indelible. The Society has not unmade him. He is now on his way to India as a Chaplain on this establishment, on 500 Rs. a month; and, if the Churchman will forgive a little pleasantry on a very gloomy subject, the Society may really be said to have been the making of the Missionary, and so far are entitled to his gratitude. The Correspondent of the Hurkaru appears also to be incorrect in stating that this title from some respectable quarter,—which corresponds with what is designated among the Dissenters as a "Call"—is intended to secure candidates from the temptation of engaging in secular labour before they can be admitted into the Church. The writer evidently means after they have been admitted. The Church cannot be supposed to care much about the avocations of a candidate, before he is brought within the pale of the apostolical succession. It is only to his subsequent conduct, after imposition of hands, that its anxieties are directed, lest "the sacerdotal office should be desecrated" by the Clerk's engaging, like the Apostle Paul, in any secular employment.

As to the general argument, the reasons given by A Churchman for this requisition of a title, are unfortunately too original to be of any value, for they are not in the Canon to which he alludes, which is altogether silent as to motives, and simply says, "We do ordain that henceforth, no person shall be admitted into sacred orders, except he shall at the time exhibit to the Bishop of whom he desireth the imposition of hands, a presentation of himself to some ecclesiastical preferment then void in the diocese, or shall bring to the said Bishop a true and undoubted certificate that either he is provided of some church within the said diocese where he may attend the cure of souls, or of some minister's place vacant either in the Cathedral Church of that diocese, or in some other Collegiate Church therein also situate, where he may exercise his ministry....And if any Bishop shall admit any person into the ministry that hath none of these titles, then he shall keep and maintain him with all things necessary till he do prefer him to some ecclesiastical living." And the penalty for a Bishop's refusing thus to support him is, suspension from the faculty of giving orders for a whole year. But this Canon simply prohibits the Bishop's ordaining without a certificate; it does not compel the individual who gave the title or certificate to continue the minister in the ecclesiastical preferment. It is true that in ancient times, the names of the persons who granted the titles were entered in the acts of ordination as "standing engaged; as a testimony against the person entitling, in case the clerk (ordained on such title) should at any time want convenient maintenance." In the register of Archbishop Winchelsey there is "an order to a bishop to oblige a Clergyman who had given a title of a certain annual sum to pay it till the Clerk should be provided for." There is but one Archbishop Winchelsey in the list of Archbishops, and he flourished in the days of Edward the II. We believe the rule has long since been obsolete, and that it is never acted on. All that the ecclesiastical law demands is, that the Bishop shall be satisfied of the candidate's having "a presentation to some ecclesiastical preferment," before he ordains him. After ordination, the Clerk is left to his own resources; there is no obligation on the part of the individual who gave the title to maintain him for life, or even for a twelvemonth. A Rector or a Vicar appoints a man to a Curacy, in order to give him his title to holy orders, but the poor Curate is entirely at the mercy of his patron; and may be dismissed any day without ceremony. Such at least is our impression of the practice in England, and we believe that in no instance is the grant of the certificate considered to create any obligation on the part of the grantor. All the authorities we have been able to consult concur in maintaining that an assistant curate to a Rector or Vicar is removable at pleasure. No Bishop would therefore be at liberty to refuse ordination upon a title or certificate, on the ground that the clergyman refused to bind himself not to displace the newly ordained clerk; and, by parity of reasoning, the Bishop of Madras is not constrained by "his consecration vows," to refuse ordination to a candidate of the Church Missionary Society on the ground that they refuse to come under an engagement to grant perpetual support to the Missionary, whatever doctrines he may teach, till the Bishop shall see fit to disapprove of them.

Double Rations to Convicts.—We are happy to perceive that the Deputy Governor, on the recommendation of the Medical Board, has been pleased to order that the convicts shall in future be furnished with two cooked meals during the twenty-four hours. As a measure of humanity, this rule will meet with general commendation. For men employed like the convicts in hard labor out of doors, a single meal of cooked food in the day is utterly inadequate. It was an unnecessary aggravation of the punishment awarded them by the law, to subject them to a long and painful fast, and expose them to those bodily complaints which inadequacy of nourishment was sure to produce. It is much to be feared that the mortality which has been exhibited in the returns from some of the jails may be in some measure attributed to the rule which limited them to a single meal a day. The principle of the ration system is sound. It subjects men who have disturbed the peace of society to restrictions, which form a very appropriate part of their punishment, and debars them from those enjoyments which would injudiciously lighten it. But while the new system is rigidly maintained wherever it can be introduced without affecting the caste of the parties, it is equally necessary that the quantity of food supplied to the convicts should be such as fully to sustain life, and to keep them in a healthy state. The new rule, combined with the directions given by Mr. Bird that the quantity of food allowed by Government shall be faithfully given to them, will secure this object, and wipe out the suspicion of cruelty.

Mr. Bird's re-appointment to Council.—The Tame Elephant.—The prolongation of Mr. Bird's tenure of office in Council announced by the last Mail, and his appointment as Deputy Governor of Bengal, appear to have given general satisfaction. The Englishman's London Correspondent, has however given somewhat of a whimsical turn to the appointment, which suggests some reflections. He appears to be somewhat puzzled to account for the decision of the Court of Directors, as though they had never exercised this prerogative in the case of individuals who had acquired their confidence; and under the idea that the additional year of service given to Mr. Bird has reference to the state of the Council, he adopts the conclusion that a kind of slur is thereby cast on the other members of that Board, more especially on Sir W. Casement.—The conclusion however is far from conclusive. It does not follow, because the Home Authorities may desire to detain a particular member in Council for an additional twelvemonth, that they thereby dishonour all his fellow counsellors. Sir William's period of service expires in June next year; and we cannot see how his interest or his honour can in the most remote degree be affected by Mr. Bird's continuance, which neither hastens nor retards the lapse of his tour. The Correspondent of our contemporary has been very diligent in endeavouring to discover the secret springs of this measure; and he fancies he has found them in Mr. Cotton's relationship to Mr. Bird, Mr. Cotton being the Chairman of the year. But lest this conjecture should prove groundless, which it needed no conjurer to predict it would, he has another resource in the fact of Lord Ellenborough's being still a wild elephant, who can be subdued and civilized only by tame elephants. So the Court having, by the aid of letters missive, succeeded in bringing the Governor General down to the Council Board, have determined to keep Mr. Bird to act the tame elephant.

It is however quite possible that the Correspondent may be entirely wrong in his conjectures; that the wild and the tame elephant may after all be on such terms of cordiality as to render the idea of any control on the one part, and submission on the other, ridiculous. Judging indeed from the appointment of Mr. Bird to the Government of Bengal by the Governor General on the day of his return, before the mail had announced the Court's determination, we are rather inclined to think that the prolongation of Mr. Bird's tenure of office, is in accordance with Lord Ellenborough's own wishes, rather than in opposition to them. So far as an Editor may judge from appearances, we should suppose that Lord Ellenborough had so much reason to be satisfied with Mr. Bird's management of the Lower Provinces, as to feel a strong desire to prolong the arrangement, in order that he might have leisure to attend to the general interests of the Empire. For the accomplishment of this plan it was necessary that Mr. Bird should be continued in Council after his five years had expired, seeing he had resigned the service, and after the 15th of October was debarred by act of Parliament from holding the Government of Bengal, or any office whatever. It would appear therefore that the resolution to prolong the administration of Bengal in his hands was the cause of his continuance in Council. And it is only to suppose that his services had been as much appreciated by his Masters in Leadenhall Street as they have been by the Governor General, to account for the extra year of labour and honour, without any reference to his relationship to Mr. Cotton, or his being selected to act the part of the tame elephant.

Without attempting to offer any fulsome flattery on this occasion to Mr. Bird, or to obtrude any congratulations on the country, we may still be at liberty to say that the decision of the Court, combined with the arrangement effected by Lord Ellenborough is very satisfactory. Mr. Bird is the first Deputy Governor who has identified himself with the improvement of the Bengal Provinces; and the present is the first instance in which the government of them has been separated from other and distracting responsibilities. We look forward, therefore with confidence during the next sixteen months to a series of beneficial measures grounded upon that intimate knowledge of the country and its wants which those who occupy the bureau of Bengal, are known to possess, and calculated to simplify and improve the administration in every department.

Expence of maintaining Singapore as compared with its value.—The Singapore Free Press of the 8th June last furnished us with a statement of the receipts and disbursements of that Settlement, and in that of the 22d of June we have the number of ships which arrived at and left the island, together with their tonnage, for the year 1842-43. From these important documents we learn that although Singapore is a free Port, without a single export or import duty, its revenues during this period, amounted to 509,000 Rupees; and strange to say, the expenditure was only 494,029 Rupees, leaving a surplus of 15,000 Rupees. This is the first year in which the expenditure has not exceeded the income. The amount, as inserted in this account, includes every charge of every description, some indeed of which ought never to be imposed on the local revenues of the island. Thus it not only comprises the Civil charges of the island, 226,721 Rupees, as well as these in the Military branch, 153,087 Rupees, but one-third of the expense of the general Government, and of the Diana Steamer and the gun boats, as well as 12,186 Rs. for the magnetic observations conducted by Lieutenant Elliott and his assistants; and nearly 50,000 Rupees for the expenses of the convicts with which it is peopled from the continent of India. The Singapore Free Press considers that the expenditure might be still farther reduced, by dispensing with the office of Governor altogether, who is said to be of no more use to the settlement than the man in the moon. This is a very sublime simile, and we cannot take on ourselves to pronounce how far it may be correct; but to those who are not deeper in the secret than we are, there seems to be no adequate necessity for a separate Governor to look after the three subordinate Chiefs of three Settlements, whose united income does not exceed that of many Zillahs at this Presidency, and which, with the aid of Steam, are now brought as near to the seat of the Supreme Government as Bombay. That journal also begrudges the Salary of the Registrar of the Court, all whose duties are performed at Singapore by the Sworn Clerk. If this be correct, the value of this sinecure 1800 Rs. a year, ought certainly to be saved to the Settlements. The charge for convicts might also be reconsidered with reference to the justice of carrying it to the separate account of the provinces which the practise of transportation benefits. Barrington, on being transported to New South Wales, wrote a prologue to a play which opened with this stanza:—

> "True patriots we, for be it understood,
> We left our country for our country's good"

Now the 1185 convicts who are at Singapore are sent thither primarily for the benefit of the three Presidencies which are gainers by their absence. If, therefore, their services are not required in that colony, or if those services could be obtained cheaper, by free than by convict labour, the charge ought to fall on the transporting, and not on the penal, settlements. The expense of the Magnetic observations ought to be borne by Great Britain. It is quite enough that she enjoys the benefit of such an outlet for her manufactures, gratis. It is ungrateful to saddle the tender resources of the island with the cost of her own scientific experiments. If the items we have alluded to were equitably adjusted, there would remain a surplus of some 50 or 60,000 Rupees a year for local improvements, and sound policy demands that this sum, created by the enterprize of this rising and valuable settlement, should be sacredly devoted to that object.

It is impossible to contemplate the state of prosperity which the colony has now reached without a strong feeling of exultation. Here is a maritime entrepôt, in one of the most advantageous commercial positions in the world, to which during the past year 952 square rigged vessels resorted, and 2824 native vessels, from the various ports and islands in the Archipelago. The burden of these vessels was 363,600 tons, and the value of the goods they imported and exported amounted to five crores of Rupees. This settlement is maintained at an expense not exceeding 50,000*l.* a year! and this sum is raised on the island itself. All the advantages which it confers, directly and collaterally, on British commerce in the Eastern seas, are gained without one farthing of expense to the mother country. We question whether the records of the Colonial office could shew us any Crown colony, of equal importance and value, which is managed with the same economy; or which makes no annual demand on the British Exchequer. Singapore stands almost alone in our colonial establishments, as a self-supporting colony.

Looking thus as we now do, at the principle of rigid economy which appears to pervade every branch of the expenditure at Singapore, and which has produced such large results at so small an outlay, we cannot avoid noticing the contrast it affords to the expensive establishment at Bencoolen, which we wisely relinquished to the Dutch, after it had swallowed a mint of money. We believe that if the profligate extravagance which marked the public expenditure of the ten years preceding the cession of that place; and the systematic—we had almost said the unprincipled—proceedings by which the public was fleeced, and private fortunes were accumulated, were laid bare, it would be regarded with an incredulous smile in this reformed and economical age. There are two jobs, which for the benefit of society, we have long wished to see fully exposed in all their naked deformity. The one is, that Imperial job; that job of all jobs, the Carnatic and Tanjore Commission, after it had dexterously obtained an Act of the legislative decreeing that, like the Long Parliament, it was not to be dissolved except with its own consent; and the other is the last of Colonial jobs in the East, the great Bencoolen job, in which every functionary from the highest to the lowest, seemed to be animated by one impulse, that of making the most of his position, at the expense of the state.

This allusion to Singapore reminds us that we have been culpably negligent in not bringing forward the claims of Mr. Moor's family on the generosity of the public. He was formerly Editor of the Malacca Observer, the Singapore Chronicle and the Singapore Free Press. In 1837 he published a valuable collection of Notices of the Indian Archipelago and adjacent countries. He was subsequently entrusted with the charge of the Singapore Free School, in the management of which he appears to have earned the approbation and confidence of his supporters. He has now sunk into the grave, bequeathing a widow and eight unprovided children to the sympathy of the public. The gentlemen at Singapore who were acquainted with his worth, have opened a subscription for their relief; and express a hope that though he was little known to the community of this Presidency, the fact of his public labors both as an Editor and an instructor of youth in a neighbouring settlement, combined with the very destitute condition in which he has left his family, will not fail to draw forth those generous feelings which have seldom been appealed to in vain.

BACON'S NOVUM ORGANUM.—The Rev. T. Smith, of the General Assembly's Institution, has just conferred a great boon on the youth of this country, by preparing and carrying through the press an English translation of Bacon's Novum Organum, for the Christian School Book Society. A translation of this treatise appeared in England in 1818, but its defects both in point of style and fidelity were glaring; and scarcely a copy of it was to be obtained in this country. The Novum Organum was therefore a sealed book to the native youth, whose minds have been expanded by instruction, and who may be supposed to have imbibed an anxiety to examine a work so celebrated in all countries during the last two centuries. Mr. Smith has placed it within their reach, in a simple and attractive style. We hope most cordially, that notwithstanding the secession from the Kirk, of those who have taken the warmest interest in the Assembly's Institution, and with whom the Missionaries are identified in feeling and in position, there will be no interruption of their valuable labors, and that Mr. Smith may long enjoy the opportunity of inculcating on the minds of youth, those important truths which he has now enabled them to study.

THE LATE GENERAL ELPHINSTONE.—The apparent discrepancy between Lieut. Eyre's representation of Capt. Sturt's advice relative to the attack on Mahomed Shurreef's fort on the evening of the 4th of November has induced him to come forward with full particulars of the events of that memorable night. We have extracted the most material portion of his letter which appeared in the Hurkaru of the 15th Instant, and placed it among our selections. It is as important as any part of his interesting narrative, and, in one point of view, infinitely more so. It lets us, so to speak, into the real secret of the destruction which befel our force; and enables us to trace it distinctly to the total want of confidence in his own judgement, which the General in chief exhibited on every occasion, and to that mental weakness, and indecision on his part, which neutralized the ability, zeal and courage of the subordinate officers. The transactions of that single night shew at once that with such imbecility at the head of affairs, the army was doomed from the first to annihilation, and that nothing but a miracle could have saved it.

There were but three days' provisions when the insurrection broke out in the cantonments. All the Commissariat stores were in a fort at a little distance from them, which was closely besieged by the enemy, and defended only by one officer and a few men. He had repeatedly sent intelligence of his critical position and importuned for succour. Between the Commissariat fort and the Cantonments, lay Mahomed Shureef's fort, which it was necessary to capture before it could be relieved. It was painfully felt that the loss of the supplies it contained must prove fatal to the hopes of the army, and leave it no other prospect, but that of a dreary winter without provisions. The salvation of the troops appeared to hang upon the success of the effort to be made that night to capture Shureef's fort and relieve the Commissariat fort. With these feelings of the emergency of that crisis, and of the value of moments, a meeting of officers took place at the General's House on the night of the 4th at which Sir W. Macnaghten was present. It will appear utterly incredible to the world, that the propriety of attempting the capture of the fort was made a matter of debate even for a moment; yet it is a lamentable fact that it was debated for hours, and that some of the officers present brought arguments against the measure. General Elphinstone, after the matter had been long discussed without any favourable result, took Lieut. Eyre into his private room and asked his advice. He urged the expediency of assaulting it without delay. The General then alluded to the severe loss sustained in the sally of the previous day under Capt. Swayne, and said that he feared a repetition of that scene, and could not bear to contemplate such a sacrifice of life. Lieut. Eyre replied that no secondary consideration should be weighed in the balance against a measure which involved the honour and safety of the army. The General walked about the room in great agitation, urging the same objections. At length, he opened the door and called in Major Thain and Capt. Grant, and consulted them, flying off repeatedly to other subjects totally irrelevant. To fix his determination, it was proposed to consult Capt. Sturt, the only Engineer officer in the garrison. The General eagerly seized the idea, as one that released him from the burden of responsibility. He ordered Lieut. Eyre to go to his quarters, but above all to tell him that the enemy was on the alert in the Fort. Sturt said that the Fort must undoubtedly be taken before morning, but so far gave in to the General's views as to fix the hour of departure at 3 A. M. This reply was reported to the General, but his repugnance was not overcome, and he began to narrate stories of misfortunes which had befallen the troops in the Peninsula, in nocturnal expeditions. At length he was brought, at midnight, to consent to the attack, but postponed the hour from 3 to 4. Four o'clock came without any preparations, and it was broad day light before the troops were got together; when, just as they were about to start, intelligence was brought that the Commissariat Fort was in the hands of the enemy!

After this detail of the transactions of this memorable night, when the salvation of the army depended on the improvement of moments, its subsequent destruction ceases to be a matter of surprise. The same lack of energy, the same spirit of procrastination marked every subsequent movement. Even when the right thing had been determined on, after dreary and sickening discussion, it was not done at the right time. This unhappy temper of the General, the result of age and infirmity, soon became contagious, and diffused a universal despondency through the whole body of the army, which soon lost the characteristic distinction of British soldiers, and eventually allowed itself to be bearded, defeated, starved and massacred by a foe, whom the least display of energy in the General, would have enabled the troops to subdue as they had done before, and have since done in every instance.

It has become the fashion of the day to decry the "Politicals," as they are called by way of contempt, and to ascribe our expulsion from Affghanistan to their mismanagement. In every instance of national disgrace and misfortune, the Government and the community demand a victim. On the present occasion of the direst calamity which has ever befallen our arms, the officers to whom the political administration of that country was entrusted, have been selected for the sacrifice, and they have been pursued with the most virulent obloquy, till the very term "political" has become a byeword of reproach. As it regards the wisdom of appointing Political Agents to the various provinces of Affghanistan, after it had been subjugated, not a little may be said on both sides of the question. The division of responsibility and the clashing of power which it entailed, was injudicious and often inconvenient. The authority to direct the movements of a General in command of a little army, which was lodged with officers of far inferior rank, with beardless boys as their enemies styled them,—though in many instances they had succeeded in acquiring a beard, which even Mr. Muntz might envy—created heart-burnings, and in some instances hindered that cordial co-operation which the circumstances of the time required. Yet the individuals selected for these duties, Majors Pottinger, Outram, Rawlinson, Leech and Todd, and Dr. Lord, were men thoroughly acquainted with the habits and the language of the people, and so far as aptitude for their duty was concerned both as it regards natural or acquired qualifications, a better selection of political officers was never made. It may be doubted whether the bestowal of these political functions on the Generals who commanded in Affghanistan, would have mended matters. Age and obstinacy might have been found qualities as inconvenient, as youth and rashness. As it regards the supreme management of our interests beyond the Indus, no man in his senses would have dreamed for a moment of entrusting Lord Keane or Sir Willoughby Cotton with the responsibilities which were given to Sir W. Macnaghten. Neither did the system of Political Agents work ill in the hour of danger. The much abused Politicals fully vindicated the wisdom which selected them, when their capacity was put to the severest test. Though Majors Rawlinson and Macgregor have been treated with unmerited neglect by the local Government, no one attributes it to any discovery of neglect or incapacity in the discharge of their duty, or indeed to any thing but the misfortune of their being identified with the "Auckland clique." Sir William Nott, and Sir Robert Sale are too just and generous not to acknowledge that in the preservation of Candahar and Jellalabad, their services were invaluable. Major Mackeson, though turned into the Quarter Master of a Regiment, does not stand the less high in public estimation for the important assistance which he rendered the army at Peshawur. It was to Major Pottinger's knowledge of the people and the language, and to his activity and genius that the captives at Bameean were indebted in a great measure under God for their liberation, without which the object of the second expedition would have been entirely frustrated. And Sir William Macnaghten's merits during the whole period of the siege of the cantonments from the 2d of November to the 22d of December, when his better genius left him, and he fell into the toils of Akbar Khan, is allowed by the common consent of all to have been beyond all praise. Every movement of the troops which was crowned with success, owed its origin not so much to his counsel, as to his importunity. If he had not unhappily been thwarted by men who hesitated and grumbled when they should have acted; if there had been at the head of that army, an officer who breathed the same daring and noble spirit with the Envoy, the winter of 1841 would not have been the darkest period of our Indian History. We are confident that when the animosities and prejudices of the present generation have been interred in its grave, and the Historian sits down to do justice to the actors in those transactions, the services of the Politicals will not be overlooked, and that the present judgement regarding them will be reversed.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JULY 20.

— The Star mentioned yesterday that information had been received by the last mail, of the appointment of Sir Lawrence Peel, as Legislative member of the Supreme Council. It is contradicted in this morning's issue. It was supposed at one time that the office would be abolished, but the advantage of having the disposal of such a piece of patronage, worth more than the post of any Cabinet Minister, the Lord Chancellor excepted, will be duly weighed by the Ministry before it is thrown away. Why should not the Advocate General, who is paid 3000£ a year, act as legal adviser in the preparation of laws which require a reference to English legislation? Hitherto the Advocates General have been men fully qualified by their legal experience and acumen to afford such assistance. If this legislative duty was entrusted to that officer it would constrain Directors invariably to fill up that office on the ground of merit and on no other.

— We have been favoured with a letter from Captain Biddulph at Darjeling, stating that the report of his having discovered the Tea plant in that locality is entirely groundless.

— The Star gives an account in this morning's number, of the capture and death of an enormous Alligator at Akra, on Saturday evening last. We have placed the whole article, though somewhat lengthy, among our selections.

— Sir Hugh Gough may, we suppose, be daily expected at Calcutta to assume the command of the army. Garrison orders were issued by the Governor General on the 17th instant directing the whole of the troops in garrison, as well as the town guards to hold themselves in readiness to turn out in full dress, as might be hereafter directed, to receive His Excellency.

— The Hurkaru states that Mr. George Thompson reached Delhi on the 9th of the month. Three miles from the city he was met by half a dozen of the nobles of the Court with a large phalanx of attendants and was conducted to the residence allotted to him on the king's elephant, richly caparisoned, with a glittering Howdah and splendid trappings. Every possible attention was shewn him. It appears that no obstacle was made to his entering the palace, and the report that the Commissioner had forbidden it, is therefore, as we suspected, utterly groundless.

FRIDAY, JULY 21.

— The accounts received through the Delhi Gazette of the insubordinate proceedings of the too powerful Rajah Dhyan Sing, seem to indicate the approach of a conflict between the Sovereign and his Minister, which will probably end in the establishment of a paramount British influence in the Punjab. It is said that the Minister has abstracted ten crores of Rupees, or ten Millions Sterling, from the public treasury since the death of Runjeet Sing. When called on to account for the expenditure of this sum, he said that it had been laid out in securing the allegiance of the troops, but he appears to have given no other explanation. It is known that a large portion of this sum has been abstracted from time to time from the treasury, and sent to Jumboo. The Minister, in the usual oriental style, said he was the Raja's slave; but his actions are those of a master. He has betaken himself with a large force, to his own mountain fortresses in Jumboo, accompanied by many chiefs of distinction. General Ventura is said to have been sent to bring him to reason. The country appears to be on the eve of a civil war. If at this juncture, a strong and united Government existed at Cabul, an effort would assuredly be made to recover the lost province of Peshawur, and to extend the Affghan dominion again to the banks of the Indus.

— The Raja Kuleekissen Bahadoor, again figures in the papers of this morning. He got up a translation of a Sungskrit work, the Muha Natuk, with the aid of others, and sent copies of it to all the Kings and princes of the earth to whom he could obtain access, and their flattering acknowledgments have from time to time been sent to the public journals for publication. On the present occasion, he announces the receipt of a letter from the King of Prussia. We suppose that as an amicable intercourse has been established between the Emperor of China and the British Government, a copy of the Maha Natuk, will be sent forthwith to Pekin, and that the papers will be called on to minister anew to the Raja's vanity, at no distant period by the publication of a letter signed with the vermilion pencil.

— The Star, in reference to the announcement of Sir Lawrence Peel's having been appointed Legislative member of the Council of India, states this morning, that the post has been offered to him. The Chief Justiceship is worth 8000*l.* a year; with a retiring pension of, we believe, 1500*l.* a year, after ten years service. The situation in the Supreme Council gives 10,000*l.* a year, without any pension.

— The Star of this morning states that notwithstanding the vigilance of the British officers in Scinde, the Ameer Shere Mahomed had contrived to cross the Indus and had betaken himself to the mountains of Belochistan, where he will endeavour to raise the tribes, and bring them down to the reconquest of the country.

— The same paper has a long and interesting article on the Assam Tea Company which the Editor says, "promises well, all things considered." It appears however that the extravagance of expenditure which has marked its career, from the beginning has not ceased; and an agent is to be deputed to Assam to examine the establishments. Is it true, that Mr. Masters, the only practical botanist connected with the Society, has been dismissed?

— The Hurkaru states, that an army of observation, 15,000 strong, will be assembled in the ensuing cold weather on the Seikh frontier, under the command of Sir Robert Dick.

SATURDAY, JULY 22.

— The Express reached Calcutta last Monday afternoon. Up to yesterday evening, the first instalment of the regular mail had not arrived. Seldom has the patience of Editors, and of the community been put to so severe a test, and we are sorry to say the strength of this virtue has not been improved by the experiment.

— A number of the Christian officers, commissioned and non-commisioned, who were employed in the service of Scindea, have addressed a letter to the Rev. Mr. Price, the Chaplain at Agra, laying their grievances before him, and stating that they were seized, tied up to the guns, abused, kicked, thumped, and cruelly and unmercifully belaboured, besides being deprived of eight month's arrears of pay. It is not a case in which the British Government can interfere. Nothing can be done for them, but through the sympathy and generosity of private individuals.

— A general meeting of the Dumdum Temperance Society was held on the evening of the 18th for the purpose of presenting Sergeant Major Wolfe, with a silver medal, having a suitable inscription previous to his leaving the station, and proceeding to Agra. It is a testimonial of the respect and esteem of the members of the Society for his unwearied endeavours and disinterested zeal in promoting the cause of Temperance.

MONDAY, JULY 24.

— Saturday's Calcutta Gazette contains an extract from a letter of the Court of Directors relative to the splendid victory gained by the troops under Sir Charles Napier on the banks of the Fullailee, in February last. The Honourable Court have postponed the bestowal of marks of distinction on the Troops, having heard that there had been a subsequent battle in which they trust another victory had been achieved. In this they will not be disappointed. The most gratifying portion of this despatch is that in which the Court have supplied an omission in Lord Ellenborough's notification, and made the most honourable mention of Major Outram's services, giving the stamp of their own authority to the epithet "the fearless and distinguished Major Outram," bestowed on him by Sir Charles Napier.

— The Star states on the authority of letters from England that Mr. Dyce Sombre had become deranged in intellect, and is placed in a lunatic asylum. The borough of Sudbury, with which his name is so disgracefully associated, retains its franchise. The papers brought by the last Mail state that the Bill for disfranchising it, which had passed the Commons, had been thrown out by the Lords, because general bribery and corruption could not be proved against it. It was saved because ten righteous men were found therein.

The Delhi Gazette affirms that Shah Kamran has been murdered, that the Persian Monarch, whose occupation of Herat is confirmed,—has commenced the coinage of money in his own name at that place. Central Asia is thus again in commotion as it was in 1838; and, to add to the confusion, we have now the prospect of disturbances in the Punjab. The Affghans, when we were quitting their country last year remarked to several of the officers that we should assuredly be back there before many years had elapsed. Will their prophecy turn out to be as correct as that of Dost Mahomed, who long before there was any appearance of the insurrection, affirmed that the country could not be settled without him, and that he should be at Cabul in two years?

— A meeting of the Creditors of Messrs. Fergusson and Co. was held on Saturday, Mr. Beckwith in the Chair. There were 30 or 40 gentlemen present, and it was resolved to cancel the trust deed, and to transfer the estate to the Insolvent Court. When the trust was originally established, it was remarked that the estate could not long be kept out of the Court. It is affirmed and believed that the intermediate operation of the trust has been beneficial to the interests of the creditors.

— The matter of the appointment of Mr. Serle, as Registrar of the Supreme Court at Madras, has been again brought under the cognizance of the Court. There is evidently some under current of private interest, in this matter, which we at a distance are unable to discover, and which the Editors on the spot are too prudent to unfold. Whether the opposition arises from private disappointment or from public virtue, it is not for us to say, but it is rather a novel sight to see the two Judges pulling one another's caps, or rather wigs in open Court. We are told that the Chief Justice "was very severe in his language with reference to Sir John Norton, and the course which that judge had pursued." We are also told that on the breaking up of the Court, Sir John said he would have nothing to do with Mr. Serle's appointment, in any shape whatever, and looked as if he would carry the matter farther.

— We are happy to find from the Hurkaru, that Government has at length bestirred itself in the matter of the Dinagepore district, which has been so long the scene of tyranny, oppression and torture. The Shristadar of the Civil and Sessions Court, who entered the office a beggar, and has been enabled upon a small salary of about 50 Rupees a month, to obtain landed property to the value of 150,000 Rs. which yields him a clear income, of 19,000 Rs. a year, or 1583 Rupees a month, has been expelled from his office. It is true that the creatures with which he has filled every office, still remain, and that he himself is allowed to continue in the district; but though it may be a sufficient reason for removing a man from the head of an office, that the amassed property which he could not have come by honestly, it would be unjust to banish him from the district without a legal conviction; and in this case, banishment would be an inadequate punishment.

TUESDAY, JULY 25.

— A correspondent of the Hurkaru states, that "some short time back, the corpse of a respectable gentleman was seized by a bailiff of the Court of Requests for a certain sum of money due to a certain creditor, and the friends of the defunct were obliged to pay it before they got the remains removed for interment." Our contemporary states that the practice is illegal, though it was successfully employed to procure the payment of poor Sheridan's debts, whom his friends allowed to pine unnoticed in a spunging house, and when his spirit had sunk under his misfortunes, paraded their carriages at his funeral.—We have understood that the same disgraceful procedure was adopted in the case of William Pitt, and that the body was released by Parliament's paying his debts, but as the Hurkaru does not mention the circumstance, we conclude that our impression was erroneous. But how shall the Hurkaru's idea of the illegality of the act, obtain legal force, and prevent a creditor's resorting to this disgraceful practice for the payment of his debts, with this example of success before him?

— Mauritius papers to the 29th of June have been received; but they contain no other intelligence than that the Colony had been some time out of rice; yet such was its depressed condition that the few bags which remained, were with difficulty disposed of at 4 dollars the bag.

— We regret to learn from a London letter given in this morning's Hurkaru, that Mr. H. M. Parker, was far from well, quite unable to go out, and that he had been advised to visit the German baths.

☞ At the last meeting of the Landholder's Society, Mr. G. Thompson was appointed Agent for the Society in England, and Mr. Theobald accepted the office of honorary Secretary. An instance was brought to the knowledge of the Society of a Collector's having refused to receive Company's paper from a mortgagee for the postponement of the sale of an estate, when it was resolved immediately to memorialize Government on the subject.

— The Englishman of this morning announces a Catholic Marriage between one Mr. Rostan and a Miss Cornelius, which is said to have been solemnized by "His Grace, the Most Reverend Dr. Carew, Lord Archbishop of Edessa, and Vicar Apostolic of Bengal!"

— The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette complains that the Victoria Steamer has not brought any Magazines, or light reading. Thus it appears that the good people at Bombay have for once experienced a disappointment to which we have been but too often subject. This detention of this packet at Suez is much to be regretted, more especially as it contained the last Quarterly Review, which has suddenly changed its tone towards the Puseyites, and denounces them almost as violently as it formerly encouraged them.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 26.

— A grand entertainment was given by the officers at Barrackpore on Monday night to the Right Honorable the Governor General. His Lordship reached the House about ten P. M. when a salute was fired from guns which had been brought up from Dumdum for the occasion. The slumbers of his Danish Majesty's lieges were broken soon after midnight by another peal of cannon to announce his departure. The Governor General made a speech, in which he expressed his warm attachment to the interests of the army, and alluded to their services in the acquisition and maintenance of the Empire. It was eagerly listened to, and loudly applauded.

— It is very gratifying to learn from the Star, that we may soon expect a large supply of that necessary luxury, Ice. Two ships left Boston for Calcutta direct on the 22d. May, having, between them, 1000 tons of Ice on board. A third, with 600 tons was to leave that place in June. Another may be expected in a fortnight, with 400 tons for us, and the same quantity for Madras.

— The proprietor of the Englishman now at home has engaged the services of a new Editor, Mr. Stephenson, who is to come out immediately. He has received a University education, and is quite at home in the Editorial line, having for some time written the Editorial articles of the Monthly Times. We had just penned some observations on the tone and style of this journal; but we must not break through the time honoured rule of receiving every editor on his first appearance with courtesy. We have therefore destroyed them. The Hurkaru has engaged Mr. Stocqueler, the late Editor of the Englishman, as his London correspondent.

— The Star notices this morning the happy mode in which the Legislature of the Mauritius has contrived to evade an act of Parliament. Parliament, in the exercise of its wisdom, has imposed a heavy duty on the importation of salt provisions into the Isle of France. It is an article which the island cannot do without; so the Government has very ingeniously contrived to defeat the law by offering a bounty on the importation, to the same amount as the import duty.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

THE CAPTURE AND DEATH OF AN ALLIGATOR.

A very large alligator was hooked and safely landed at the Acra Farm on Saturday evening last. He was deposited in a strong brick building for the night, his execution being put off to the following day that notice might be sent to the curious to attend. At day light he was waited upon by several gentlemen from the surrounding country who paid their respects from the top of the walls that confined him, and appeared very much affected with delight at the prospect before them of a little sport. The alligator was lying on its belly with its disproportioned legs extended, and might have been conveniently measured in all his proportions but it was thought as well to put off that until the exact tenacity of life in the amphibious monster had been ascertained. The hook which was a single barb and straight shank, about 11 inches long, had entered the back part of the right upperjaw and passing round the cheek bone came out above the eye. Thus the tittlebat (qy. stickle-back ?) could never have escaped but by the hook straightening or the rope giving way. It may be mentioned for the guidance of fishermen that the hook above described is far preferable to the small grapnel-shaped affair which has been thought necessary for this game. But the probabilities are that this fellow would have taken any hook for he was ravenous, and it was not thought necessary even to float the bait, but drawing it a few feet out of the water on the mud, two hands were left to watch and report progress. When all was quiet he came straight at it and made no bones about it. The word was passed and by the time he had rolled himself over and over two or three times, some fifty hands were hanging on to a 2½ inch rope and "pull devil, pull baker," was the order of the day till he was safely housed, a matter of no slight difficulty as may be supposed, considering that with his tail he could command a range of about 16 feet. He appeared to have remained perfectly motionless during the night being found in the morning just as he was left. It may be mentioned that the off hind leg was gone at the first joint, that is the foot was wanting, or hand, for their extremities are much more like hands than feet. There are five fingers three of which have large and long nails upon them and the other two are scaled to the very tip. He was maimed also in the near fore flapper and had evidently been in the wars. They are known to fight desperately with each other about their prey, and this one had been maimed for life without a pension; the stump was well rounded off and the injury could not have been a recent one.

Some fortnight ago a child was taken away in this neighbourhood by an alligator while filling some water vessels, and it was thought not impossible it might be the monster now under sentence. Gentlemen who amuse themselves with firing ball at this kind of large game may save their powder and lead. The trials made with a rifle show how heavy the odds against doing any thing with them. There was some difference of opinion as to whether a rifle ball would pass through him supposing it not to strike the scales. The first one fired with a view to this experiment entered the side below the strong scales of the back and the brute took not the slightest notice of it; a second near the same spot seemed not to trouble him in the least; neither of them passed through; they were fired from a distance of not more than 10 feet. He was now stirred up in the rear with a long pole and he turned upon his assailant with a ferocity that was terrific: people talk of alligators not being able to turn easily; he was round with the rapidity of a flash, the report when he opened his jaws to their full extent and closed them in his rage was incredibly loud and gave a tolerable idea of the enormous power of the jaws. A third shot was now fired with the view of finishing him if possible, and the aim was behind the large raised scales at the extreme end of the head so as to break the spine. This would appear to have been done for he turned up on his back and did not again recover his position. After a fourth ball, and a most careful search for his heart with a bayonet and a spear, a rope was passed over him and he was dragged out, giving ever and anon sufficient warning of the propriety of standing aloof: a fifth ball in the spine appeared to settle him and on passing the tape along his back he measured to a nicety 16 feet 6 inches, but his tail too had been curtailed 18 inches less than one caught in the same place about 3 years ago, and of which a very perfect skeleton was made on the farm taken to England by Mr. Waterhouse and deposited in a museum in Yorkshire. With a heavy axe he was now divided just abaft his hind legs. The next process was an interesting one, the examination of the stomach. It contained little: portions of the scull of a child, the thigh bones, some smaller ones, and the bones of one hand; a quantity of straw, a large ball of hair, about four feet of inch rope, and six or eight bangles two or three of which were of silver. Having cut off the head and weighed it, it was found to be to an ounce two hundred weight: the muscular action in the tail end, about six or seven feet, was extraordinary, for on inserting a knife to expose the fat which here lies in thick layers, the whole mass, saving only the chump, was thrown into violent motion and after performing several gyrations almost on end struck the ground with extraordinary violence: this was the effect of every insertion of the knife, and it could not have been less than an hour after it was severed from the body. The head by the by was 5ft. 8in. round the jaws, and 3ft. 6in. long. It is cleaned and preserved. The fat from the body was carefully taken off by native operators it being highly valued as an external application for rheumatism, &c. &c.—Cal. Star.

UNION BANK.

The meeting yesterday of the Proprietors of the Union Bank was very numerously attended both by European and Native Shareholders. The business for which the Meeting had been made special seemed to create the greatest interest.

Major Doveton was called to the chair, and proceeded to read the advertisement calling the meeting.

In consequence of Mr. Gordon labouring under a severe cold and sore-throat, Mr. Clarke officiated for that gentleman in the reading of the following balance sheet of accounts, which, was finally put to the meeting and passed as being correct:

" J. C. STEWART, Actg. Depty. Secy.
" G. J. GORDON, Secretary.

Calcutta, 30th June, 1843.

The accounts on the table, it will be observed, exhibit an amount of profit corresponding very nearly to that of the former half year, namely—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| | Rs. 5,13,069 | 8 |
| against, ............................ | " 5,10,936 | 10 |

in the preceding six months.

Since the last General Meeting the deficit on the accounts of the Insolvent Firms of Messrs. Boyd and Co. and of Messrs. McLeod, Fagan and Co. have been ascertained. In the latter instance, particularly, the proceeds of the Goods pledged to the Bank and sold by the Assignee of the Estate, have fallen very far short of the lowest estimate at the time of the failure, a great portion having realized less than one-third of their Invoice cost.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| The loss by Messrs. Boyd and Co., amounts to ........................ | Rs. | 24,059 |
| by Messrs. McLeod, Fagan and Co., | „ | 75,460 |
| Total, ...... | Rs. | 99,519 |

The award of the Referee in the matter of Gilmore and Co. has also proved more unfavorable than was expected, and the proceeds of Indigo that remained unsold at the date of the last General Meeting fell considerably short of the original valuation. It is to be hoped that the out-turn of the present season will go some way to compensate those disappointments.

The amount of Credits with the collateral security of Indigo Factories continues larger than could be wished or than was expected at the time that the Directors fixed the amount of such Credits for the current season —the difference being almost entirely attributable to the unexpectedly low prices of Indigo that prevailed after the bad prospects of the English market became known. Had the value of Indigo as estimated by Brokers in October been maintained, the balance due to the Bank on last year's operations would have been inconsiderable. As it is, the safety of those balances is fully secured, the principal amount being due by the Estate of Fergusson, Brothers and Co., and there is no doubt that by the close of the season the whole will be liquidated.

It will be observed, that there has been a falling off in point of profits from the Singapore Agency, and that there is a larger balance standing against that Agency than was contemplated at the time of its institution. The Directors have under those circumstances deemed it expedient to depute the Deputy Secretary to the spot, and his report may determine the expediency or otherwise of withdrawing from that field of operations. In the mean time, he is directed to take measures to reduce the funds employed in that Agency to their originally assigned amount. Should it appear that there is little probability of the Agency being restored to its former flourishing state the Directors propose that it shall be gradually contracted with a view to its total withdrawal.

It is now for the Shareholders to determine the rate of Dividend which it would be expedient to declare under actual circumstances.

Mr. O'Hanlon, addressing the chair wished to know " whether there was or was not any truth in a report which stated an error to the amount of 1,80,000 Rupees had been made in the accounts ?

Mr. W. P. Grant, a Director, in reply to Mr. O'Hanlon, explained in a straightforward and satisfactory manner the way in which the report had got abroad and its total want of foundation.

Mr. Grant deprecated in strong language such idle reports, and expressed his surprise that proprietors should, without the least enquiry, give credence to rumours that owe their origin to alarmists, who propagate all manner of nonsense at the expence of the Bank's credit.

Mr. Turton proposed, and Colonel Forbes seconded.—

Resolved—That the Secretary's Report just read be approved and published, and that the accounts submitted be passed, and the books be closed accordingly.

Mr. Hume begged to propose an amendment on this resolution, to the following effect : that the accounts be open for a further term of one week for the examination of shareholders. This was seconded by Mr. O'Hanlon ; however on being put to the vote, it was negatived and lost.

Mr. Hume, in proposing this amendment, said he did not throw any suspicion on the report, but he did not think sufficient time had been given for the examination of accounts. Much discussion here arose on the expediency of the amendment. Mr. H. said it was admitted there was an error of 180,000 Rs., and where there were no auditors, it was but expedient that time should be afforded the shareholders for the examination of the accounts before they were passed.

It was then proposed by Mr. Turton, seconded by Mr. Willis, and

Resolved—That a half yearly dividend of eight per cent per annum be declared.—Carried.

The third resolution was to the following effect :

Resolved—That the time of service as Directors of Messrs. H. Holroyd, D. M. Gordon, John Lyall, and G. F. Remfry having expired, the meeting proceed to elect four duly qualified members in their stead.

Mr. Longueville Clarke here proposed that the General Meeting be adjourned till after the consideration of Mr. Lattey's proposition, that the partner or partners of a retiring director shall not be eligible for election until the lapse of one year dating from such retirement. This proposition of Mr. Lattey's was seconded by Mr. Imlach ; but on being put to the vote, was lost. Mr. Hume spoke at some length in support of Mr. Lattey's resolution.

The meeting then proceeded to the election of directors in room of those who had retired, when the following were elected : Rev. Mr. Morton ; Baboo Dwarkanath Tagore, and Messrs. A. Rogers and John Rennie.

Mr. Turton addressed the meeting in a lengthy speech, in which he stated his opinion, with reference to Mr. Lattey's motion, that though he was against two partners of a firm being in the direction at the same time, he did not see any reason why one member should not take the place of a retiring director, also a member of the same firm. Mr. W. P. Grant took part in the discussion arising out of this proposition of Mr. Lattey's. Some gentlemen said Mr. Grant was inclined to think that parties in the direction exercised an undue influence, forwarding their own interests, at the expence of the interest of the Bank ; they alluded to the instances of Messrs. Gilmore and Co. and Fergusson and Co.; but for his part he conscientiously believed that the loans which had been made to those firms were not effected by the influence exercised by members of those firms then in the direction, and that the loans in question which had been productive of loss to the Bank, would, he had every reason to believe, have been made even had these circumstances not existed.

Baboo Dwarkanauth Tagore then followed in an address of some length.

The following resolution was then proposed by Longueville Clark, Esq., seconded by Mr. Allan and

Resolved,—That it is expedient to abolish gradually the system of advancing for the cultivation of Indigo and other produce, and with a view to the object that the advances for the next season be limited to 25 lacs of Rs., and that none be made previous to the month of May, excepting to the firm of Fergusson and Co.

This motion was proposed by Mr. Clarke, in an excellent speech ; but not having preserved notes of it, we are unable to give even an outline thereof.

Mr. Turton proposed an amendment, to the following effect :—That this meeting is of opinion that advances for the entire or chief carrying on of Indigo Factories through the whole season, and upon the mere security of block and crop of such factories is an inconvenient mode of employing the capital of the Union Bank, and foreign to the legitimate objects of a Banking establishment, and that the Directors of the Union Bank ought to make no advance of such a nature to fresh parties, and to discontinue all such advances to their present constituents except under the most stringent circumstances, after the close of the present season, and that under any circumstances the Directors ought to be prepared to give the fullest information to the proprietors of any deviation from the strict observance of this rule. That advances for Indigo crops cannot be safely made by Banking establishments until the month of May and June in every year to be repaid in a few months, say on the arrival of the indigo in Calcutta. That such advances ought only to be made on the security of all the owners and mortgagees, and on the block and crop of the season, with an acknowledgement of the manager in possession that he holds such for the Bank to secure their advances of the season before any other payments, and the Directors of the Union Bank ought not to advance for the next season for indigo cultivation, even with such security beyond the extent of 25 lacs of rupees." This amendment was carried. Mr. Turton in proposing this amendment made a very lengthy speech.

After this matter was disposed of, Mr. Turton addressed the meeting and referred to one or two subjects which it was his intention to bring before them on the present occasion. One of these was the qualification of Directors. The qualification at present entitling a proprietor of the Bank to Directorship was ten shares. He certainly thought this too little. In his opinion, the number of shares should be increased to twenty-five. He was aware that this measure would lessen the number from which the election of Directors would be made. But it would contribute materially to guard against members of mercantile firms, leaguing together, and getting into the Direction, and forwarding their own private interests instead of those of the bank. He did not bring this question forward on the present occasion for the purpose of decision ; but he would place it before the proprietors for their consideration, and at some future opportunity he might frame a resolution to the above effect.

It was then moved by Mr. Turton seconded by Captain Vint, and

Resolved—That it is inexpedient to make any relaxation in the rule which prohibited the Bank advancing on its own shares.—Carried unanimously.

Moved by Mr. Gordon, seconded by Mr. Morton and

Resolved—That this meeting be adjourned till Saturday the 29th instant.

Thanks being voted to the Chairman, the meeting broke up at 4 P. M.—Eng. July 16.

CABUL ON THE 4TH NOV. 1841.

It must be remembered that the rebellion broke out on the 2nd of November, and it was on the night of the 4th of November, that conference of officers took place at the General's house, when the propriety of immediately capturing Mahomed Shurreef's fort was discussed. The principal speakers for and against were Sir William Macnaghten, Captains Boyd, Lawrence, Grant, and Bellew, but several other officers were present. Of General Elphinstone's talents as an officer I then knew next to nothing. His apparent lack of enterprize, during the first day, had certainly excited general surprise, but I considered that neither my station nor standing in the service entitled me to obtrude my thoughts upon him unasked. I accordingly sat a silent listener during the early part of the debate, until the General suddenly came up to me, and leading me into his private room, demanded my opinion as to what he ought to do. I then said, that from all I had heard urged by the Envoy and Captain Boyd, I could not help concurring with them as to the expediency of assaulting the fort without delay. He then complained of what he was pleased to term Captain Boyd's "impetuosity,"* which he said had annoyed without convincing him, and his object in calling me aside was that we might discuss the matter calmly and dispassionately. He then reminded me of the severe loss sustained that very day in the sally under Captain Swayne, H. M.'s 44th, and said he feared a repetition of the same thing on the present occasion without any proportionate benefit being derived, and that he could not bear to contemplate such a frightful sacrifice of life. I replied, that in a case of such desperate emergency as the present, soldiers must be prepared to sacrifice their lives, and I conceived that such secondary considerations should not be weighed in the balance against a measure involving the safety and honour of the whole force. He walked about the room for several minutes in great agitation, urging again and again the same objections, and receiving the same reply ; at length he opened the door and called in Major Thain and Captain Grant. The General had an unfortunate habit of flying from one subject to another, it being impossible to keep his attention fixed to an argument for any length of time. Observing this propensity, and seeing the necessity of bringing him to a speedy decision, I proposed that he should abide by the opinion of Lieutenant Sturt, the Garrison Engineer. He eagerly jumped at the idea, as releasing him from the sole burden of responsibility, and bade me go to that officer at once and state the whole case, but, above all, to mention the fact of the enemy being on the alert in the fort. I accordingly hurried over to Lady Sale's house, where I found Lieutenant Sturt sitting up in his chair, Lieutenant Warburton was present, but whether he accompanied, or had preceded me, I cannot precisely remember. I told Sturt all that had occurred and the General's unhappy vacillation. He said, that the fort must undoubtedly be taken before morning, but that, as the garrison was on the watch at present, there could be no harm in so far giving in to the General's views as to postpone the attack until about 3 A. M. at which hour the Affghans usually get careless. As Lieutenant Sturt seemed somewhat exhausted, and the wound in his face rendered his articulation difficult I did not stay longer than was necessary to obtain his answer, which I forthwith reported to the General.

I was disappointed to find that he was even yet disposed to keep up the unprofitable discussion, and it was long past midnight ere he was prevailed on to abide by Sturt's advice, and then only with an amendment of his own namely, that the hour of attack should be 4 instead of 3 A. M. I believe the fact was he had an insuperable repugnance to nocturnal expeditions, and could tell of numberless instances where they had failed in Europe. "It was an inconceivable trial of one's patience to be doomed to listen to such stories at this serious crisis when every moment was of infinite value.

* Captain Boyd had, in his eagerness to carry his point spoken in rather a loud tone of voice, but his manner was solemn, and his language, though not perhaps classically select, yet certainly not disrespectful.

No one could tell an anecdote better, and, unfortunately for us, he always had one ready even at the most unseasonable time. Meanwhile several officers, desparing of getting him to act instead of talk, had gone away disgusted, and when at last it was decided to attack the fort, it became no easy matter to warn those concerned, scattered as they were in different parts of our extensive cantonment. I myself, accompanied by Captain Bellew, went to the magazine to prepare the powder bags after which I visited the batteries and employed myself as best I could until the appointed hour drew nigh, when I began to marvel at the stillness that prevailed, there being no signs of preparation. In great uneasiness of mind I went to the General's house, and seeing a light in Major Thain's room I entered. He was awake, but told me I better not disturb the General. He however, urged me to put the folk on the qui vive promising himself to do the same. Meanwhile precious time was spent at a fearful rate, and what with running hither and thither all night long, I was thoroughly fagged, and but for the necessity for continued exertion could have fallen asleep on my legs.

The troop turned out but slowly and in driblets, and, to my horror, it was broad daylight ere they were collected at the Western gate in readiness to move out. The rest is already known. The delay had been fatal to the garrison of the Commissariat fort, who were hard pressed by the enemy and desparing of relief, evacuated their post at dawn of day, and marched into cantonments just as we were on the very point of moving to their assistance.—Hurkaru, July 15.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

POLICE DAROGAHS.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I was glad to see your remarks in your issue of the 13th July 1843, on the subject of the pay of Darogahs. There can be no doubt that persons who hold such responsible situations ought to be well paid. Indeed 100 Rs. a month, for the higher class, is less than a Subadar Major of Native Infantry receives when on command, (107 Rs.) and little more than when in Cantonment (93 Rs.) A Subadar of Native Infantry gets 67 Rs. a month, 83 Rs. marching, and 107 Rs. if a Subadar Major. The Subadar Buhadur gets more; one Rupee a day; other ranks less. A Jemadar of Native Infantry gets 25 Rupees a month in Cantonment. Then there are advantages for gallantry; the order of British India, &c. But the usual regimental incomes should be the guide, as promotion to Jemadar or Subadar, and Subadar Major is not according to seniority. The Darogahs will not get the increase to 50, 70 and 100 Rs. by seniority. My object is to point out that there should be certain rewards, as in the Native Army, beyond the above departmental increase of pay. There are said to be 508 Darogahs, and their annual incomes are Rs 1,60,520 yearly.

The 503 Darogahs are to be thus paid :

| | | | Yearly. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 25 at | 100 Rs. | a month, | 30,000 Rs. |
| 50 „ | 75 | „ | 45,000 „ |
| 100 „ | 50 | „ | 60,600 „ |
| 353 „ | 25 | „ | 99,900 „ |
| | | New plan, | 235,500 |
| | | Old plan, | 160,520 |
| | | Increase, Rs. | 74.900 |

Now we do not see as to the 508 Thannahs, the extent of population or size of District or Thannah, over which these Darogahs have control. Would it not be better to make the scale on such a principle ?

I would recommend that the advance from 25 to 100, though ordinarily of gradual increase, yet, for very eminent services, should be from the minimum to the maximum at once. That without reference to the rate of pay, individuals should, for very distinguished service, receive a Medal commemorative of the occasion with a suitable inscription in the English and Native languages. That presents of swords and pistols from Government on other occasions would be much prized. I believe those who are killed, have a pension or provision from Govt. made for their families.

If a man distinguished himself in either of the classes of 25, 50 and 75 Rs. pay, we will suppose a Medal, or Sword, &c. and his name should be registered for future notice, promotion, &c. A copy of such names should be kept at the Head Quarters of the Magistrates, or Deputy Magistrate's of the District. The grades of 25 to 100 Rs. should be distinguished by their dress, and every thing should be done to cause them to feel confident of being noticed and rewarded for meritorious acts! The proposed increase of 75,000 Rs. makes the total Rs. 2,35,500 annually. If these men were Subadars and Jemadars or 67 and 25=92÷2=46 Rs. monthly, the annual cost would be 2,80,416 Rs. The very important duty of these Darogahs, points out that they should be well paid. If the sum of 300,000 Rs. were allowed, they would be paid more with reference to the labour of daily and nightly calls.

But may not the expense of living be greater in some districts in Bengal than in others, and should not that be taken into consideration ?? of the Darogahs get less than the pay of a Subadar of the Calcutta Native militia! compare the duties and risks of the two classes! It is not so much the number as the zeal and energy of the Darogahs, on which the peace, happiness, and protection to life and property depend! The Darogahs get no extra batta, as command allowance, or when on service, as Subadars and Jemadars in the Army do! Hence they should be better paid 508×600 Rs. (50 Rs. a month) would be Rs. 304,800 annually. The Subadars and Jemadars get the Invalid pay, pensions, &c. There seems to be too great a number on 25 Rs. If there were 5 classes of 25, 35, 50, 75 and 100 Rs. it would be a better plan. Though indeed, I should make the classes according to a scale of amount of jurisdiction, population, &c. which create so much more work liable to be done. I think the plan must be hereafter modified, the good pay of the Darogahs will stimulate the exertions of those under them; and if it works well, the plan should be extended beyond Bengal. A Darogah ought to be mounted to be fully useful.

HOME; SWEET HOME.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

"We are sorry to find Capt. Moresby styling the voy-
"age from Suez to Calcutta, the homeward bound voyage
"of the vessel. It is in very bad taste. The word home is
"sacredly associated in the mind of an Englishman, with "England. Whenever he is obliged to allude to any other "place by that endearing name, it is done with a manifest
"conviction that nothing but the necessity of circum"stances could justify such a misuse of the word. It is a
"poor compliment to the European community in Cal-
"cutta to desecrate the word, by applying it, even in the "case of a steamer, to any city in India."

DEAR SIR,—I fear, from the above quotation, that you are the "Friend of India" only in name; and that you belong to that numerous class, who conceive that they confer great favour (forsooth !) on the people of India, by coming to live among them for a while, and then return home (as you call it) with wealth, of which not one farthing will ever be expended for the benefit of the country from which it was obtained.

Notwithstanding what you have stated, I cannot help thinking that Captain Moresby was perfectly right in styling the return voyage from Suez to Calcutta the homeward bound voyage, nor do I believe that he intended to pay any compliments to the community of Calcutta, or of any other place, by doing so. "Our own Steamer" belongs, I presume, to the port of Calcutta, and the expression of homeward, and outward bound, is therefore quite correct.

Moreover I have always understood you to be a great advocate for promoting the visits of respectable Indian gentlemen to England, by means of Steam communication—and to have rung the changes upon "amelioration of the natives"—"the two countries brought more closely together—" "spread of knowledge and intelligence" and all that. Surely to Indian gentlemen, the voyage from Suez to Calcutta would be their homeward bound voyage. Why then claim for Englishmen the exclusive right to use the word "home" as you have applied it?

But I will go farther than this and maintain that so long as an Englishman resides in India, (and how many have done so, long and happily) it is, to all intents and purposes, his home—and that it is not a "misuse" of the term to call it so. Why disparage the country in which we live, and eat our daily bread, and which, after all, will bear a fair comparison with the miserable, cold, raw, damp, dark atmosphere of England from October to April inclusive, with its train of colds, consumptions, influenzas, and what not? The people too as inhospitable as their climate, unless you have plenty of money in your pockets! Away then with all that maudlin, mawkish, puling, pitiful baby cry which we so often hear about "dear old England!" The real friend of India is he who spends his whole life in it, and who does all the good he can in his own immediate neighbourhood.

I remain, dear Sir,
Your very obedient servant,
A REAL FRIEND.

JESSORE SCHOOL.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I shall feel highly obliged by your kindly inserting the following few lines in your valuable journal.

Perhaps all your readers are not aware that an English Seminary has been established by Government at Jessore, where it was long felt as a desideratum. This school was established in 1838 by the exertions of the European gentry of the station.

On Monday the 17th July, the third annual examination of the pupils of the above Institution took place at the School House, where all the gentlemen of the station assembled. The examination was chiefly conducted by Messrs. Bentall, Morris, Anderson and Bamber, who were highly satisfied with the rapid progress of the boys, during the short period they have been in the School. The studies of the senior classes consisted of Histories of Greece, England and India, Poetry, Geography, Grammar, Geometry, Algebra, Arithmetic and Translations, in which the boys acquitted themselves to the entire satisfaction of the Examiners, and reflected the greatest credit on their Instructors.

In conclusion I beg to remark, that from the great demand of English education which exists in this part of Bengal, it is earnestly hoped, that this Institution will continue to prosper under the able management of Mr. Smith, the Head Master, and his zealous coadjutor Baboo Thakoordass Chuckerbutty.

I am, &c.
A VISITOR.

RELIGIOUS.

CHRISTIAN UNION.—On Thursday last, (1st June) at an early hour in the morning, Exeter Hall was visited by a great concourse of persons, sufficient in number to have filled a building thrice its dimensions, spacious as it is. An advertisement had appeared in various religious periodicals, headed "Christian Union," and announcing that "a Public Meeting to promote this most desirable and blessed object," would be held there and then. Although the Meeting was thus designated "public," admission was only procurable by tickets, the issue of which for the most part was limited to "members of Churches," a regulation necessarily applying, in the sense the terms are commonly used, to some denominations not at all connected with the Established Church, with respect to the members of which it was understood that there was also a restriction; tickets being given only to communicants at the Lord's table. Nevertheless, the great room was literally crammed, and there were present some few persons whose particular tenets excluded them from the prescribed category, and consequently it may be presumed, from a full participation in the proceedings. The great room was built to contain 4,000 persons; but so closely packed was the auditory upon this occasion, that there must have been considerably more than that number. Even the reporters' box was invaded, a place barely sufficient for its proper purpose; and but for the kind interference of the Chairman and Secretaries, the pressure of the intruders must have rendered the duty of the representatives of the press upon this occasion more laborious than usual, if not wholly impossible. Some persons, however, in spite of every remonstrance, pertinaciously retained their position in a place to which they had no right whatever, until the very last. Other Meetings, to save the surplus auditory from entire disappointment, were held in the lower room, and in the Wesleyan Chapel, Great Queen-street, both of which were equally crowded. But besides these, numbers returned to their homes; among those who retired, were many delicate females, unable to endure the pressure, and with torn dresses and other damages almost unvoidable, though in several instances the result of a reckless eagerness. In the Great Hall, to the proceedings in which this account will now be confined, the majority, reckoning the platform, was against the ladies, a circumstance rather unusual in Meetings of a religious character. The heat was distressing throughout, and there were frequent faintings, fits, and cries for water; notwithstanding which the Meeting lasted seven hours.

W. Evans, Esq., M. P. for North Derbyshire, took the chair by invitation at half-past nine o'clock, half an hour before the appointed time; the Hall being full, it was deemed unnecessary to wait.

After the assembly had sung the 34th Hymn, Book II., Dr. Watts, "Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly Dove," &c., led by the great organ.

The Rev. T. Mortimer, of the Episcopal Chapel, Gray's-inn-lane, read the 133d Psalm, John xvii. 15 to the end, and Eph. iii. 14 to iv. 6. He then read prayers, the collects for Good Friday, and for St. Simon and St. Jude's day.

The Rev. G. Clayton, Walworth, then offered an extemporaneous prayer, concluding with the Lord's Prayer, the petitions of which were audibly repeated by a few voices.

The Rev. Dr. Leifchild, a member of the Committee which had convened the Meeting, now came forward and read an official statement of its nature and design. It described the assembly as being ministers and members of different Protestant Evangelical denominations, met together upon the declared ground of the essential unity of the Church of Christ, and the union of heart and affection that ought to arise out of that oneness of Christ's mystical body. The separations and divisions and hostilities which had marked the various denominations of professing Christians had long been deplored by good men of every section, as being inimical to the progress of our holy religion, and alike unjust to its character and its author; they had sighed in secret and yearned for such a prominence to be given to the essential verities of the Gospel, as should blend together in the sympathies of holy friendship all who hold the Head. The strifes and divisions of the present day, instead of abating, that desire, had given it new vigour, and led to the inquiry how it could be expressed and extended. Conferences had been held with different parties supposed to be best acquainted with the state of feeling of their respective denominations and after several consultations on the subject, it was resolved to call a Meeting for the purpose of endeavouring to establish Christian union upon a firm basis, by giving, in the first place, expression to the desire for closer union of heart and affection, on the ground of the essential verity of the Church of Christ, and with a view of promoting it among Christians and ministers of all Evangelical Protestant communities. The union proposed was not to be formed upon a compromise or surrender of any distinctive opinions and convictions; there was in it no implied pledge of abstinence from the avowal and maintenance of them on other and fitting occasions, with deference to the sacred oracles and meekness towards those who differ. For the time being those distinctive opinions would be put in abeyance, lost sight of, and forgotten, if possible, in the contemplation of our common Christianity, as a sufficient ground of fraternal regard and conference. No allusion therefore would be made to those opinions, either by way of apology for holding them, or of giving reasons for the preference given to them. It would be the aim of every speaker and hearer in that vast assembly to escape from the recollection of them in the absorbing contemplation of being fellow-Christians, made children of God, and heirs of everlasting bliss. No practical object was intended to be connected with the Meeting. It was felt necessary first to raise the tone of Christian feeling and communion, by confining attention to that object, which feeling was likely to be the prelude to more practical and permanent objects. In the meanwhile, should such associations be frequently formed and held in different parts of the country, benefits of no ordinary nature must ensue, in removing shyness and distrust, in establishing friendly recognition and interchange of acts of kindness, in softening the asperities of controversy, in eliciting the truth and in disarming the sceptic of his weapon of reproach against Christians on account of their hostilities. As the principal character of the Meeting was to be devotional, the usual display of feeling in expressing approbation was not expected. [This point was occasionally disregarded, involuntary expressions of feeling breaking from sections of the audience, which, however, were as promptly hushed by others.] It was hoped that the feelings elicited would be of a high and lofty order, which find their most appropriate vent in prayers offered and praises sung by the whole assembly. The Rev. Speaker then said, that some expense had been incurred by the Committee preparatory to the Meeting, and that of hiring the Hall was not inconsiderable. Towards it the Committee had advanced money, and if they had to bear it all they would be well repaid, more than repaid, by the spectacle before them, the oneness of feeling in that multitudinous host, and the anticipation that this was but the first of a long and numerous series of similar Meetings, leading forwards to a bright and glorious era in the history of the Christian Church at large. To others as well as to himself that was a most auspicious day. The first of June henceforth should never be a black day in his calendar, for in that Meeting he saw the true olivebranch held forth to the Christian world.

The Chairman then rose and apologized for his presumption in presiding upon that occasion; but he had consented to do so at the urgent request of the Committee. He had long felt the deep injury arising from the divisions among those he believed to be true Christians who hold the Lord Jesus Christ as the only Head of his Church, who looked to his atonement, his death, and resurrection, as the grounds of their pardon and acceptance with God, and that happiness in heaven which Christ had promised to all who trust and love him. He did not allude to the mere divisions of sects, and diversities of discipline, and forms of worship, but to the heartburnings and jealousies, the open hostilities and rancorous abuse, which sometimes were exhibited by one party towards another. Such a state of things was not only injurious to Christians themselves, but to the cause of Christ, and to those who were irreligious, while they afforded matter for triumph to the enemies of the cross of Christ, and strengthened them in their enmity. He lamented that the occasions on which true Christians could thus unite were so unfrequent. The only instances he could then call to mind, were the Meetings of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the City Mission, and perhaps the London Missionary Society. With respect to the first, he had heard that some persons had expressed a hope that there would be no dissenters present. But it was not his duty to go into such topics. He was happy to see so large an assembly; his fears were disappointed. He anticipated the best results from the spirit of union evinced by the Meeting.

The Rev. Dr. HARRIS, (one of the tutors of Cheshunt College,) then read a written address in support of the first Resolution. (The different Resolutions will be found below which we hope will be published.)

The Rev. J. Sherman, of Surrey Chapel, who acted as Secretary pro tem., said, a vast number of letters had been received from ministers and laymen of all Evangelical denominations; but it would be utterly impossible to read them all. As samples, he read one from the Rev. Dr. M'Leod, Minister of St. Columbus, Glasgow, and another from Dr. Chalmers, who both pleaded the state of ecclesiastical affairs in Scotland as an excuse for their absence, and expressed their earnest desire for the success of the object of the Meeting.

The Rev. J. Hamilton, (Minister of the Scotch Church, Regent-square,) next read a most eloquent address, which we regret we have no room to insert.

Another hymn by Dr. Beddome,—"Let party names no more the Christian world o'erspread," &c. (given out by the Rev. J. Sprigg, of Ipswich), was sung; and the Rev. Peter Latrobe, Secretary to the Moravian Missionary Society, engaged in prayer.

The Rev. Dr. Cox (Baptist) proposed the second Resolution. In the course of his speech he said, There were times and seasons when it was important to take a retrospective view of our Moral position. He agreed with the sentiments of Howe in his Treatise on Union amongst Protestants, that the increase of love and union amongst true Christians would be the best means of defence against the enemies of the Christian interest. The results he expected from that Meeting, were, a spirit of prayer for each other's welfare; the promotion of an internal feeling of union; a stronger attachment to the great principles held in common; a salutary effect upon the rising generation, on perceiving that none but members of Christian Churches were admissible to the Meeting; the hallowing fraternal interchanges; the exaltation of the Christian Church as the light of the world; and the full recognition of the fact, that all true believers are one in Christ.

The Rev. Dr. Alder (Wesleyan), then addressed the Meeting.

The Rev. T. Jackson (Divinity Tutor of the Wesleyan Theological Seminary) gave out the hymn from which Dr. Alder had quoted a verse; that having been sung, the Rev. A. Tidman offered prayer.

The Hon. and Rev. B. Noel reminded the Meeting of the commands which our Lord by himself and his apostles had laid upon the members of his body—the Church—to unite together, which commandments must have more weight than all the eloquence and authority of man. "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." The absence of that grace in fervent exercise would prove that we were not the followers of Christ; while its exhibition would be one of the most certain proofs that we belonged to him. Again, that passage, when our Redeemer prayed for them that should believe on his name, should never be absent from our minds;—"That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." [This verse was printed on the back of the admission-tickets.] Not a portion of his believing people, but the whole, were thus to be one, with a view to the securing at length of the world itself to Christ, our Master. The apostles reiterated the same injunction no less than others, which must lie on our consciences at this time, if we are true followers of Christ, for they were intended to guide us through the whole of our course. "Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children;" was the admonition of Paul to the Ephesians; "And walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour." The Christians at Philippi were called to a similar manifestation of brotherly kindness, by the most affecting of all motives, the recollection of the love Christ had manifested unto them, and of that voluntary humiliation on our behalf to which our blessed Master consented. To the Thessalonians the apostle gave a similar command. "As touching brotherly love," he says "ye need not that I write unto you: for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another. And indeed ye do it toward all the brethren which are in all Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more." The Apostle James, and the Apostle John, insist on the same features of the Christian character, and demand from us this love to all the disciples of Jesus Christ. Indeed, the Apostle John, who insists much upon this feature of the Christian character, declares that he who loves not his Christian brother without taking account of any discrepancies of opinion between them, is not of God;' and he tells us, moreover, that we may "know we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren;" that is, all who are Christ's followers without regard to the differences of opinion subsisting among them. "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us." "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God love his brother also." We must not have the pretence then, but the reality; we should love one another, not because we are members of the same denomination, but because we are members of Christ's body, because we have learned to love him, and are owned as his followers by him. The same spirit is as constantly enjoined in the opposite form in the New Testament. As expressly as we are urged to love one another as Christians, so are we strictly warned not ourselves to create dissensions, nor to associate with those who do. "I beseech you, brethren," says the apostle, "mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them;" and we are at no liberty to choose which of Christ's commands we shall neglect and which we shall obey. The apostle says, that a spirit which leads to divisions and jealousies, marks those who profess to be Christians as carnal; "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?" Just so far then as in the present day, and in this country, there are envyings, and strifes, and divisions among the professed followers of Christ; yes, and among the true, are we carnal, and dishonouring the religion we profess. Each of the Churches addressed by St. Paul is warned against dissensions by the most earnest entreaties and exhortations, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." A greater calamity than that cannot befal a Christian or a Church; therefore the apostle follows up his warning with the admonition, "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." When the apostle urged upon Christians this necessary duty of avoiding schism and cherishing love, he well knew that there would be, and there were even then most important diversities of opinion, which, be it remarked, he did not enjoin them to cease from. The passage quoted by Dr. Alder (Rom. xiv. 1—6) is the great rule of Christian forbearance, showing that while we must not despise or judge our brother for holding different opinions, but leave them to be determined by the Great Arbiter, we are to love one another. This was the grand characteristic of the infant Church at Jerusalem, when the young converts suffered persecution and the loss of all things, those who had goods gave them up to preserve the starving and the destitute; and the historian, St. Luke, declares, that the early Christians were of one heart and mind. God was pleased to make the Church in that day the model to every individual Church throughout all ages. "Great grace was upon them all," and therefore they were thus united. Hence if we judge of the example of the early Church while under the influence of the Spirit of God, or regarded the injunctions expressly laid down, we must feel it to be our duty to love one another. It must be a real love, a lasting love, and a visible love. The mere secret feeling of attachment to all we deem true Christians is not enough to satisfy the injunctions of Scripture, or the needs of the Church. How can the words of our Lord be fulfilled,—"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another,"—unless that love be visible? When our Lord entreated that his disciples should be one as he was one with the Father, it was that the world might believe that he came from God; but if their unity is concealed, what influence can it have upon the world? How would a concealed union bring the whole force of the body to act upon any feeble part of the Church? How could it strengthen, for instance, the hands of the persecuted Christian missionaries in Tahiti? How can we efficiently protest against a powerful tract I have in my hands, in which the author condemns Dissent from the Established Church as a sin, and all who in any way countenance Dissenters as incurring equal guilt? Such sentiments would fill the whole land with enmity, and prevent any hopes of union among the universal body of Christians; they are utterly at variance with Christian charity, and would devastate the Church. Here is also another tract by a professed minister of Christ, in which he anathematizes the principle of Protestantism in all its forms, and anthematizes all Protestants. In the absence of visible union how are such doctrines to be resisted and refuted? I have communicated in other Protestant temples than those of the Church of England, and hope to do so again, notwithstanding this anathema; I have done so at Geneva, and rejoiced to be recognised as a brother. Here then, is another motive to manifest the union of Christians. The Hon. and Rev. Gentleman proceeded to show that Christian union could not consist in constrained conformity, and therefore the idea of making any form of Church government dominant over the rest must be given up at present; eventually some one might possibly prevail, but the past history of the Church did not seem to favour the expectation. An agreement in essentials was compatible with separate opinions on minor matters, and the free expression of them upon fitting occasions. The elements of Christian union were the grand items of the Christian faith, as stated by the apostle in Ephes. iv. 1—6. These being held by all, no discrepancies in other doctrines ought to be grounds of disaffection or disunion. A little moderation would settle many points of difference, and in all cases we should give each other credit for sincerity in believing our own course to be right. We should not deal in sweeping censures upon each other. Let not any Dissenter, for instance, having heard of the anathemas uttered against him by the clergyman who wrote the tract just mentioned, say, "See what the Church of England is!" That would be unjust, for there were many in the Church who would condemn that tract. On the other hand, if a Dissenting minister had the bad taste at a public Meeting to tread upon the Common Prayer-book, and pronounce it to be fit only to wipe his feet upon, it would be unjust in a Churchman to exclaim. "There, you see what Dissent is!" The Hon. and Rev. speaker concluded an excellent address of which we are able to give little more than an outline, by moving the third Resolution, which recognised the Bible as the basis of all Protestant Christian Churches.

The Rev. J. Sherman explained that the Dissenting minister alluded to by Mr. Noel, had denied the conduct attributed to him; what he did was, to elevate the Bible with one hand, and to drop the Prayer-book in the floor, declaring, that so far from the latter being fit to be placed above the former, it ought to lie in the dust in comparison with it.

The Motion was seconded by the Rev. M. La Croix, of Switzerland, and supported by Mr. T. Farmer (Treasurer of the Wesleyan Missionary Society), and unanimously adopted.

Prayer was then offered by the Rev. Dr. Steane.

The Rev. J. A. James, of Birmingham, proposed the fourth Resolution.

Mr. Isaac Taylor seconded the Motion, which was adopted unanimously.

At the suggestion of Dr. Leifchild, the Committee were requested to continue, with power to add to their number, and to confer together on the next step to be taken to establish Christian union.

The Rev. R. Redpath moved, and the Rev. B. Ainslie seconded the last Resolution. It was carried unanimously, as was also a vote of thanks to the Chairman, and after another hymn and prayer, the Meeting adjourned.

We have been unavoidably obliged to omit some of the addresses, thinking it better to give a few speeches at length and many briefly. The above report gives a fair representation of the tone of the Meeting. The following were the Resolutions proposed and carried:—

1. "That this Meeting is fully persuaded that real and essential unity exists among all the children of God, and that being united to Christ, they are, in principle and affection, united to each other by the Spirit of Christ."

2. "That this Meeting is therefore convinced of the duty and practicability of rendering visible the union of all who hold the Head, Jesus Christ the Lord, notwithstanding the diversity of their opinions and practice with regard to minor points of faith and ritual observance; and that the state of theological controversy, missionary operations, and public sentiment at the present time, renders it peculiarly desirable to attempt the furtherance of such an union.

3. "That this Meeting declares itself assembled on the ground of truths common to all Evangelical Churches of the Protestant Reformation from Popery, and based on its first principle, the sufficiency and authority of the Holy Scriptures as the sole rule of Christian faith and practice, and the right of every man to judge for himself of the meaning and interpretation of that rule—and recognises as the bond of Union, the great doctrines unanimously received by all Evangelical Christians, viz.—the doctrine of the Holy Trinity; of the infinite love of the Father; of the perfect atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ; of the sanctifying grace of the Holy Spirit; of justification by faith alone; of the necessity of regeneration to a Christian life and character; and other truths in harmony, and in essential connexion with these. And the Meeting believes the agreement in these fundamental truths among Evangelical Christians, to be so unanimous in substance and spirit, as to lay a firm foundation for concord and union."

4. "That this Meeting utterly repudiates the sentiment that a true Church, a true ministry, or a true Christian can be constituted, in the absence of spiritual qualifications, by the mere observance of any form, even though of Divine appointment. At the same time, it disclaims the least compromise of what is conscientiously regarded as truth or duty on any point of doctrine, discipline, or worship, by any individual bearing part in its proceedings."

5. "That this Meeting deems it an imperative duty, for the defence of the truth—for the strength of the Churches—for the spread of the Gospel, to seek Christian union—not in ritual uniformity; not in exact agreement of creed; not in a universal incorporation of Churches; but in the blinding force of love to the truth in things great, and in the harmonizing power of forbearance in things subordinate. For this union would the present Meeting bear witness before the world, and offer fervent prayer to Almighty God. For the promotion of this blessed fraternal oneness in Christ, it would appeal to all his disciples, on the ground of their Saviour's will and prayer, that thus our holy religion may be honoured in the sight of the world, and the world be converted to our holy religion."—Record.

DR. PUSEY'S SUSPENSION.—The condemnation of Dr. Pusey, in due form, and under the provisions of a statute "for such cases made and provided," is an event of no slight importance. It removes this acknowledged head of the Tractarian party from the elevation he has heretofore occupied, and places him in a very unquestionable way, among the teachers of error.

We say, in the most unquestionable way;—for nothing can be more frivolous and ungrounded, than the exceptions taken by Dr. Pusey's friends, and by Dr. Pusey himself.

The objections started by the Times, and other journals in the Tractarian interest, are such as these,—that the proceeding was of a "persecuting" character;—that the statute was an "obsolete one;"—and that the Board or Committee was unfairly constituted.

A sermon which is now fully ascertained to contain heretical statements is preached in the University pulpit. A public complaint is made by the proper officer. Is it "persecution," then, for the Vice-Chancellor to direct an inquiry into the charge? If so, what kind of check would these writers propose to the preaching of heresy in an University pulpit? Or would they have no check at all? Are they converted, on the sudden into ultraliberals?

But the statute was "obsolete:"—in other words, no such flagrant instance of unfaithfulness to his engagements, as that of Dr. Pusey's, has been known in Oxford for a century past. And this is gravely assigned as an objection to the present proceeding!

The more serious objection of Dr. Pusey's advocates is the last; namely, that the Committee was unfairly composed. Happily, however, there is not the slightest ground for this imputation. The whole proceeding has been entirely regular, and if partiality has existed, it has manifested itself in a favourable leaning towards the accused, to which just exception might be taken, did not this fact now render the sentence more convincing and impressive. Let our readers mark the circumstances.

The Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Wynter, is a High Churchman, and has been considered to lean rather to the Tractarian side. It was only on the receipt of a positive complaint, that he took up the matter, and he is said to have acted unwillingly, and as in the discharge of a most disagreeable duty, throughout the whole transaction.

The selection of the Committee of examination, or "Board of Heresy," was as follows: One only of the members, Dr. Fausett, could be considered as a declared opponent of the Tractarian party, and he formed one of the Board, not by choice, but necessarily, ex officio, as Margaret Professor. On the other side, however, there was named Dr. Jelf, who is on terms of the greatest intimacy with Dr. Pusey, and therefore, according to the recognised principles of judicial proceedings, ought not to have been of the number. Our readers will remember that it is this gentleman who has professedly endeavoured to find a via media between Protestantism and Tractarianism. A third member was Dr. Ogilvy, who was formerly Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and who was recommended by his Grace to the Chair of Pastoral Theology. The other three members were Dr. Jenkyns, the Master of Balliol; Dr. Hawkins, Provost of Oriel; and Dr. Symons, Warden of Wadham, the two latter personal friends of Dr. Pusey, and all three most respectable men, no doubt, but at the same time unquestionably High Churchmen.

Nor did these six judges arrive at a verdict of guilty by a mere vote carried by a majority. Each, individually, gave in his judgment of the impugned sermon. With these six deliberate opinions before him, the Vice-Chancellor proceeded to pass sentence; and that sentence speaks a language which cannot be mistaken.

We come, then, lastly, to Dr. Pusey's own complaint. This is obviously for the popular ear; for, to those accustomed to deliberative proceedings, the Doctor's pleas will appear utterly frivolous.

He complains that his judges did not enter into a controversy, or paper war with him! that they did not select particular passages of his sermon for proof or disproof; and that they did not hear him in his own defence. He is quite sure that he has been "misapprehended," and that he could have satisfactorily defended, or explained, every sentiment in his sermon, had he but been allowed the opportunity.

This sort of complaint will have some little effect upon weak minds. But what is it really worth? A theologian of mature age, and well practised in controversy, delivers a written and well considered discourse, in an University pulpit. A charge is brought against him, of maintaining, in that sermon, false doctrine. The manuscript is called for, and laid before six seniors of the University that they may examine into the charge. Is it not abundantly clear, that if these six men, two of them personal friends, and another on terms of great intimacy with the accused, find no difficulty in replying to the question, as to the heretical character of the sermon,—the permission to the author, to defend himself, in writing, or viva voce, could not affect the question. When Dr. Pusey argues that these six divines, all equal to himself in intelligence and theological discernment, have unanimously "misunderstood" him, what kind of an idea does he convey of his own skill in writing English. What! could no one of all these six, by any means discover the real meaning of Dr. Pusey's discourse! Are his sermons usually so obscure, that not even learned divines can discover their real meaning? If so, then assuredly it is quite time that he was prohibited from any longer perplexing the University by public discourses which by his own account of the matter, it would appear that nobody can understand.—Record.

LAW, ARCHES' COURT, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26. OFFICE OF THE JUDGE PROMOTED BY SANDERS AGAINST HEAD.—This was a proceeding by letters of request, at the promotion of Mr. Ralph Sanders, of Exeter, against the Rev. Henry Erskine Head, Rector of Feniton, Devon, for having offended against the laws, statutes, constitutions, and canons ecclesiastical of the realm; for having written and published, or caused to be published in the Western Times newspaper, of Exeter, for August 21, 1841, a letter entitled—"A View of the Duplicity of the Present System of Episcopal Ministration, in a Letter addressed to the Parishioners of Feniton, occasioned by the Bishop of Exeter's Circular on Confirmation," in which letter he (Mr. Head) advisedly affirmed and maintained that the Catechism, the order of Baptism, and the order of Confirmation, in the Book of Common Prayer, contain erroneous and strange doctrines, and wherein he also advisedly affirmed and maintained other positions in derogation and depraving of the Book of Common Prayer, contrary or repugnant to the law, statutes, constitutions, and canons ecclesiastical of the realm, and against the peace and unity of the Church; that in the said letter were contained the following passages:—"There spake the spirit of the present system of Episcopal ministration. All the bishops, it is true, may not be quite so incautious as the Bishop of Exeter; but, inasmuch as they connive at and continue the use of the Catechism and Baptismal and Confirmation Services in their present state, I do not hesitate to aver that they act upon a system by which the Episcopal order is exalted under false pretences, and at the expense of the doctrines of the Bible." "As reformation in this respect is not hopeless, and as I also am pledged by my ordination vows, as a minister of the Church of England, to banish and drive away all erroneous doctrine, I do hereby decline and refuse to give any countenance whatever to the office of Confirmation as it is now used by their Lordships the bishops, and, instead of recommending, in compliance with the Episcopal circular, the perusal and reperusal of that service, to the young persons of this parish, I warn them all, young, old, and middle-aged, to beware in the name of God of the erroneous and strange doctrine which it contains." "It is also a fact that the Prayer-book sins against itself. Some parts of it are at variance with other parts. The 4th, 6th, 8th, and 36th Canons are repugnant to the first and third ordination vows. Some of the dogmas in the Catechism, Confirmation, and Baptismal Services are utterly inconsistent with the doctrines contained in the Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth, and Seventeenth Articles." "If their Lordships wish to satisfy the public that their exaltation is just and right, let their Lordships, instead of teaching the erroneous doctrine in the Church Service, banish and drive it away; instead of bending the Bible to the obliquities of the Prayer-book, let them make, or endeavour to make, this Prayer-book consistent with the Bible and with itself; instead of reversing the apostle's rule, let them 'abhor that which is evil' in the Prayer-book, and 'cleave to that which is good' in it."

The proceeding against Mr. Head was commenced by the Bishop of Exeter, under the recent Church Discipline Act (3d and 4th Victoria, c. 84); but this form of proceeding was soon abandoned, and the case came in the form of a cause of office, by letters of request, before this Court. Mr. Head, however, appeared to the citation under protest to the jurisdiction of the Court on several grounds, which were overruled. Mr. Head, thereupon, appealed to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which affirmed the sentence and remitted the cause to this Court.

Dr. Adams, for the promoter, contended, that as the articles had been admitted without opposition, the question of law had been conceded, and the facts could not be denied; but the case was clear upon both points, the law and the facts. It was a matter of public notoriety that, at the present day, there was a strong disposition to deny the doctrine of baptismal regeneration. The gentleman proceeded against had thought proper to discuss this point and the others, not soberly, at a proper time, and in a proper place, but in a public newspaper, the last place where such a controversy should be carried on, accompanied by matter very offensive to his diocesan; as if the Bishop had any right to alter or disuse the offices in the Book of Common Prayer. He (Dr. Adams) contended, that by the Canons of 1603, recognized and re-enacted by the Act of Uniformity (13th and 14th Car. II., c. 4), the party had been guilty of a gross offence against the ecclesiastical law, which he had aggravated by the vexatious manner in which his defence had been conducted; and he submitted that the Court was bound to pronounce a sentence of deprivation.

Dr. Robinson followed on the same side. The main and essential fact upon which the charge was founded was proved by Mr. Head's admission that he was the author of the letter. This was not a dissent from a mere matter of discipline, but from the doctrines of the Church, expressed in a public journal.

The Queen's Advocate, on behalf of Mr. Head, observed that that gentleman had a perfect right to defend himself as he thought best, and he (the Learned Advocate) had advised the protest. In the articles the law had not been distinctly pleaded, as had been done in all preceding cases of a similar kind, and as this was a criminal case, and the Court was asked to pronounce the highest penalty in its power, the proceedings should be strict. He should not go into the theological part of the question, nor discuss the merits of the publication.

Sir H. Jenner Fust.—Do you waive that part of the question, whether the publication was "in derogation and depraving of the Book of Common Prayer?"

The Queen's Advocate.—I do not discuss that question. I am not bound to make admissions unfavourable to my party. I apply myself to the law. Some of the canons in question apply not to the clergy merely, but to the laity, and they were passed in 1603, whereas the present Book of Common Prayer was not in existence till 1662. The 36th Canon, indeed, applies to the subscription of the clergy, and it is not alleged that Mr. Head has not subscribed. The Acts of Edward VI. and Elizabeth, which the Act of Uniformity referred to and re-enacted, prohibited the "preaching, declaring, and speaking" matter repugnant to the Book of Common Prayer; but it said nothing of printing and publishing. "Declaring," in its primary sense, meant "speaking openly." Moreover, the statutes did not annex the punishment of deprivation to the first offence; but provided that, if a party had once so offended, and "eftsoons" should offend again, he might be deprived.

Dr. Harding, on the same side, urged that, this being a case primæ impressionis, the party was entitled to the utmost indulgence. This was a criminal suit, and the construction of penal statutes was most strict. The language of statutes in pari matteria, passed at the time, showed that the term "declare" meant viva voce uttering. A reason for this limitation might be found in the fact, that a statute was then in existence against unlicensed printing, which rendered a person's house and goods liable to be seized jure prerogativo. There had been no instance of a prosecution under the statute on the ground that publication was a contravention of the prohibition against "preaching, declaring or speaking."

Sir H. Jenner Fust said, he must have an opportunity of looking into the cases. It was an important question, whether, on the one hand, a clergyman was at liberty to "write" anything in derogation of the Book of Common Prayer; and, on the other, whether he was liable to deprivation for doing so.—Record.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sir Charles James Napier is to be created a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath, in token of his services at the late battle of Meanee.—Record.

The colonelcies of the vacant regiments, the 19th, 21st, 46th, and 48th, have been filled up by the selection of General Sir Warren Marmaduke Peacocke, Lieutenant-Generals Sir William Macbean and Sir Robert Arbuthnot, and Major-General Sir Charles James Napier.—Ibid.

LOSS OF THE PACKET-SHIP "GREAT BRITAIN."—Accounts have been received of the total loss of the packet ship the "Great Britain," Captain Sharron, master, on her late outward passage to New York, together with the whole of her valuable cargo. The crew and passengers were saved with difficulty.—Ibid.

NEW POST-OFFICE CONVENTION BETWEEN ENGLAND AND FRANCE.—On Wednesday the employés at the General Post-office and the branch-offices were making every arrangement for the new Post-office convention between England and France, which came into operation next day, the 1st of June, by which the British rate on all letters to France and Algeria, or to countries through France, is reduced to 5d. on a letter not exceeding half-an ounce, and the French rate to 5d. (10 sous) under the weight of a quarter of an ounce. To Spain and Portugal, Sardinia, and the Southern States of Italy (when not conveyed by Mediterranean packets, vià Falmouth), 10d. India, &c., as far as Bombay, 1s. 10d., and any British colony or foreign country beyond sea (except the Mediterranean), via France, 1s. 3d.—Ibid.

THE CARTOONS IN WESTMINSTER HALL.—The inclosed space that has been boarded in for some time past, in Westminster Hall, for the receipt of the Cartoons that are shortly to be publicly exhibited, on Thursday received some of these works of art, that are sent to compete for the premiums that are to be awarded to the best. These cartoons, as is well known, are proposed as specimens of designs for the frescoes with which it is contemplated the new Houses of Parliament will be adorned. They are executed in chalk or charcoal, or some similar material, and without colours; the subjects selected from British history, or from the works of Shakspeare, Milton, or Spencer, and the figures not less than the size of life.—Ibid.

IMPORTATION OF RUSSIAN GOLD.—On Saturday morning week the St. George Steam-packet Company's steamer, Hercules, Captain Mowie, arrived at her moorings off the St. George Steam packet Wharf, Lower East Smithfield, from Cronstadt and Copenhagen, with a full cargo. Part of the Hercules's cargo consisted of upwards of 100,000*l* in gold bult imperials, the remainder of her cargo being wholly bristles, packed in casks.—Ibid.

SOUTHAMPTON, JUNE 1.—NOVEL PRESENT TO THE PASHA OF EGYPT.—Amongst the miscellaneous cargo carried out to Egypt to-day by the Great Liverpool was a case of six splendid salmon, caught at Mr. Tamlyn's fishery in the river Tert, near this town. They were well packed in ice, and there is little doubt of their arriving at their destination in good condition. As this description of fish has never yet been seen in Egypt, it will indeed be a rarity.—Ibid.

WATERLOO BRIDGE.—On Thursday the Half-yearly Assembly of proprietors was held at the Crown and Anchor, the Rev. Mr. Rush in the chair. Mr. Powell read the Report. The half-year's tolls amounted to 6,521*l*. 7s. 5d., being an increase of 374*l*. 11s. 10d. over the corresponding period of the preceding year. This was attributable to the omnibuses from Camberwell to Cambridge-gate, and other vehicles passing over the bridge. The disbursements, including the payment of interest on bonds at five, four, and three and a-half per cent., and a dividend of 2s. 6d. on annuities upon 37,500*l*., figured 7,105*l*. 14s., and there remained on the general account a reserved balance of 542*l*. 7s. towards the ensuing half year. Mr. Cope introduced the subject of selling the bridge to Government, in order that it might be thrown open to the public, but as it was irregular to do so, and as the Directors and proprietors were unwilling to entertain the question, it was dropped.—Record.

STATE OF TRADE.—We have much pleasure in stating that a decided improvement has taken place in the trade of Kidderminster. In Bromsgrove, however, we regret to say, that the aspect of affairs is different. It having been intimated to the nailors that a further reduction would be made in their wages, they turned out on Monday last but have not proceeded to any violence.—Worcestershire Guardian.

KIDDERMINSTER.—We have much pleasure in stating that a decided improvement has taken place in the trade of Kidderminster.—Ibid.

We understand that an Association has been projected by some very respectable and influential parties, to be called "The Indian Service Banking Agency," with a capital of 500,000*l* divided into 5000 shares, one-half for disposal in Great Britain, and the other half in India; 5 per cent. to be paid up on subscribing; 20 per cent. in three months; 25 per cent. in six months, and the remaining moiety in two equal payments, after three months' notice from directors. The Bank is to be one for exchange and remittance transactions, and occasionally for discounts in India, when accompanied by the security of imperishable staples in Bonded Warehouses, Government Paper, or Bank Shares. The supreme management of the Bank is to be vested in a London Board of Directors, and there is to be a branch in Calcutta, with a local Board.—London Mail.

DESTRUCTION OF A BRIG BY FIRE.—On Friday an explosion took place on board the brig Tartar, at Southampton. Her cargo consisted of 1,000 Paixhans, hollow or loaded shells, a large quantity of rockets, shipped in London, and twenty brass guns. The sight was grand and imposing, vast numbers of the rockets going up simultaneously, and many of the shells exploding in the air. Some pieces of the iron fell a third of a mile from the vessel. About two o'clock a further and more powerful series of discharges and explosions took place, and at twenty minutes to three she sank in deep water. The Tartar was under 200 tons burden, commanded by Captain John Byrom. The origin of the fire remains a mystery. It seems truly providential that no injury took place either to life or limb. The depth of water, low tide, is from eighteen to twenty feet where the Tartar lies.—Record.

Letters from Rome say, that an extraordinary mission from Russia is expected in that city, and that Count Potemkin, the Russian Ambassador at the Holy See, had received orders to repair to St. Petersburg, to confer with on the Emperor on the differences that have so long existed between the Russian and the Papal Courts.—Ibid.

The Constitutionnel states, that the King has by ordonnance, conferred the style of Royal Highness on Prince Augustus of Saxe-Coburg, the husband of the Princess Clementine; and on the young Prince of Wurtemberg, son of the late Princess Mary.—Ibid.

THE DUC D'AUMALE.—Wednesday's Moniteur is full of details of the feat of the Duc d'Aumale, in surprising and capturing some fifty Arabs' ladies, their children and treasure. His Royal Highness certainly showed great quickness and address, as well as much courage and resolution, in attacking at once, with five hundred horse, and before the infantry could come up, the smala (as this Arab family party is called), the escort of which counted 5,000 muskets. The Journal des Débats says, with truth, that this is the greatest razzia yet executed in Africa. It is not only greatest, but the one least liable to objection, the capture being a gallant act, the captives being well-treated, and the loss falling on chiefs, not upon the poor population, the razzias of whose wives and cattle are anything but glorious.—Ibid.

DENMARK.—We mentioned a few days ago, on the authority of a letter from Copenhagen, that a journalist of that city, charged with libel, had, in virtue of some obsolete law, been thrown into a dungeon, and kept on bread and water. By another letter, of the 17th inst., we learn that he has since been brought to trial and acquitted, and the Crown has been condemned to the costs of the suit.—French Paper.

THE GRAND CAYMAN ISLAND.—It was stated in the newspapers a few days since that the Grand Cayman, one of the three islands called Caymans, was reported to have disappeared in the recent earthquakes in the West Indies. We are glad to mention that, in consequence of this report, Her Majesty's frigate Warspite, Lord John Hay, sailed from Port Royal for these islands on the 26th March, which it made on the 28th of that month. Several boats came off from the shore, and the people on board reported to his Lordship that nothing had occurred.—Record.

PHILADELPHIA, MAY 13.—The resignation of the office of Secretary of State by the Hon. Daniel Webster is now complete, and the appointment of Hugh S. Legare, pro. tem, in his stead has taken place. Caleb Cushing, a distinguished statesman of

New England, has received the appointment of Commissioner to China; a son of Mr. Webster will accompany him as Secretary of legation, and a son of the President, Mr. Tyler, as private Secretary Mr. Cushing will proceed to China, via England, Bombay, &c. Mr. Webster and President Tyler parted on the most friendly terms—the President proceeding for a short time to his farm in Virginia, and Mr. Webster to his farm at Marshfield, Massachusetts. The present being a recess in all active public affairs, it is impossible to foresee the coming policy of the altered Cabinet. I cannot avoid, however, mentioning a singular report which has obtained credence in the political circles, to the effect that Lord Brougham is coming over here in August or September, either as a special Minister or Commissioner, accompanied by J. Macgregor, Esq., of the Board of Trade, for the purpose of arranging a new commercial treaty between England and the United States, and that the President will appoint the Hon. D. Webster and the Hon. John C. Calhoun to confer with them on the subject, with equal powers to their own, as far as consistent with the institutions of this country. I hope they will arrange the Oregon question at the same time, as it really bears a threatening aspect It is much to be lamented that this excitable difficulty was not settled with the north-east boundary in the late treaty of Washington. It is further stated that the French Ministry also intend to follow the example of England and the United States, if they succeed in their negotiations, and to propose a new commercial treaty between France and the United States.

MAY 17.—Two dreadful steam-boat accidents have just occurred on the Ohio. The "Pulaski" ran into the "Forrest" by accident at Pittsburg, on Monday night last. Both were crowded with passengers, and the boilers of the Pulaski collapsed. Six persons were killed, and thirteen seriously scalded. The "Harry of the West" exploded near the mouth of the Ohio, and then caught fire; drowned seven, and several dangerously wounded.

Jacob Ridgway, Esq., one of the richest citizens in the Union, died on Saturday last in Philadelphia. His property is estimated at about 6,000,000 dollars, all acquired by foreign commerce. It is equally divided (except a few trifling legacies) between his son and two daughters.

An immense sensation has been created in the far-west by the formation of a horde of banditti, who have gone out for the purpose of robbing the Santa Fe traders, on their return from New Mexico. The officers at the United States fort Independence, on the verge of Missouri, behaved with great spirit on the occasion, and sent out military parties, and scoured the prairies for several hundred miles, in the hopes of arresting the brigands. One party of the robbers plundered a Mexican trader named Charvis, whom they also murdered. Fortunately two of the miscreants, named M'Daniel, have been arrested at Liberty, and about 20,000 dollars recovered. Two or three others are also reported to be captured. The M'Daniels are believed to have shot poor Charvis; and doubtless the utmost penalty of the law will be carried into effect upon them, if the crime be proved, as the Santa Fe trade is a great source of wealth to the far-west, and both that and the fur trade will be injured seriously, if not destroyed, unless the banditti are suppressed. The principal band of these marauders is now on the prairies, waiting to intercept the great American trading expedition from Santa Fe. This "caravan" of the New World is numerously attended, all the men with it being well armed, and of tried courage, from long practice in Indian warfare. They will, therefore, make a vigorous defence. The Governor of Louisiana has been applied to for a military force to suppress these daring marauders, and they will doubtless soon pay the penalty of their crimes. —Record.

C. B., whose arrival may be now daily expected.

BY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Head Quarters, Simlah, 27th June, 1843.

The Commander-in-Chief having had before him the proceedings of a Court of Inquiry, originally convened at Nusseerabad on the 22d of March last, and re-assembled by His Excellency's desire, on the 27th of April following, to investigate the circumstances connected with an assault, attended with loss of life, committed by men of the 20th regiment of native infantry, on the gun lascars and drivers attached to No. 14 light field battery, and being satisfied that such an outrage could not have been perpetrated without the knowledge and connivance of the native commissioned and non-commissioned officers of that corps, some of whom, instead of coming forward to assist in discovering the parties implicated in the ryot, exerted their endeavours to screen the guilty from detection: His Excellency has deemed it necessary with the concurrence of the Right Honourable the Governor General, to direct the following measures to be adopted, as well with the view of punishing the offenders in this instance, as in the expectation, that the example will operate to prevent the recurrence of similar outrages in other corps, by proving to the native commissioned and non-commissioned grades generally, that the duty of maintaining order and discipline amongst the men, in their lines, is not to be neglected with impunity; and that a plea of ignorance of individual delinquency will not, in circumstances like the present, be received as an excuse, or afford them protection from the consequences of an insufficient performance of their duties.

The Major General commanding the Rajpootanah field force reports having withheld the indulgence of furlough from the 20th regiment for this season; and the Commander-in-Chief confirms the order, and desires that no Native Officer, or soldier, of the corps be permitted to proceed on leave, during the present year, unless under medical certificate.

All promotion in the native ranks of this regiment is to be suspended for one year, from the 20th of March last; and all promotions that may have been made in the corps, subsequent to that date, are hereby cancelled. On the occurrence of casualties, a report is to be made to the Adjutant General of the army, when the vacancies will be filled up by transfers from other corps.

Jemadar Bussee Sing and Havildar Emam Bux, both of the light company of the 20th regiment are considered by the Commander-in-Chief unworthy of further advancement, in consequence of having been particularly active in their endeavours to nullify the exertions of their European Officers to discover the perpetrators of the outrage, and a remark to this effect is to be entered opposite their names in the character roll.

Sewanhoy Sing, naick, of the 2d company, is reduced to the rank and pay of a Sepoy, from this date, in consequence of having prevaricated in his testimony before the Court of inquiry.

The Commander-in-Chief desires that this order may be read at the head of every native regiment in the army, at a parade specially ordered for the purpose.

The Dinapore division order of the 23d of April last, directing Lieutenant and Brevet Captain A. DeFountain, of the 49th to relieve Captain W. Mitchell, of the 32d regiment of native infantry, from the charge of the detachment of irregular cavalry attached to the Ramgurh Local force, is confirmed as a temporary arrangement.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to make the following appointment:

41st Regiment of Native Infantry.—Lieutenant and Brevet Captain C. Apthorp to be Adjutant, vice Ellis deceased.

ERRATUM.—In General Orders of the 30th ultimo, transferring native soldiers to the pension establishment, for "Drummer," opposite the name of "Henry Deane," of the 35th regiment of light infantry, read "Drum Major."

Order books to be corrected accordingly.

The following orders are confirmed:

The Presidency division order of the 15th instant, appointing Native Doctor Pooran to the Civil station of Hidgellie; and directing Native Doctor Bhowanee Deen, on being relieved, to join and do duty with the 68th regiment of native infantry at Barrackpore.

The Cawnpore division order of the 19th instant, directing Veterinary Surgeon D. Cullimore, of the 3d brigade of horse artillery, to afford professional aid to the horses of Her Majesty's 9th Lancers, during the indisposition of Veterinary Surgeon Johnston or until further orders.

Hospital Apprentice Alexander Ure, who was struck off the strength of the subordinate Medical Department, in General Orders of the 13th ultimo, is restored to the service, with his original standing, and directed to do duty in the General Hospital at the presidency.

Sergeant Thomas Johnson, of the 4th company 2d battalion of artillery, is transferred to the Town Major's list, and appointed to the Commissariat Department, in the room of Sergeant Hugh Douglas deceased.

Head Quarters, Simlah, 29th June, 1843.

The following orders are confirmed:

The presidency division order of the 12th instant, directing Ensign R. A. Grubb, recently admitted into the service, to join and do duty with the 17th regiment of native infantry at Benares.

The presidency division order of the 14th instant, directing Ensign P. M. Wal. isley, recently admitted into the service, to join and do duty with the 65th regiment of native infantry at Dinapore.

The order issued on the 18th instant, by Major R. Roberts, commanding the artillery at Sukkur, appointing 1st Lieutenant D. C. Vaarenen, of the 1st company 2d battalion of artillery, to do duty with No. 1 light field battery, in the room of Lieutenant Young, of the 3d company, proceeding on leave, on medical certificate.

THE Friends and Acquaintances of the late Mr. JOHN HENRY MOOR, for many years Head Master of the Singapore Institution Free School, will learn with regret that he died without leaving means to satisfy the claims against his Estate, and that his Widow and a family of eight Children, the eldest of whom is a Girl of fifteen and the youngest an infant of three months old, are thus left in a state of absolute destitution. In a case so peculiarly distressing it is trusted that the Communities of the Straits Settlements where the deceased was so long and so well-known, will feel that this Orphan Family have no common claims on their charity and benevolence, which, have heretofore never been appealed to in vain.

This Paper is put in circulation by the following Gentlemen who will form a temporary Committee for the collection of the funds subscribed and until the same be placed in the hands of the Trustees appointed by the Subscribers, at large for its future disposition and management for the benefit of the family.

THE JURISDICTION OF THE 24-PERGUNNAHS.—Considerable interest has been excited by a recent decision of the Sudder Court in a case in which Mr. Piddington, the former occupant of the factory of Goureepore, situated within the Civil Jurisdiction of the 24-Pergunnahs, was sued for 84,000 Rs. by the assignees of Boyd and Co. We were given to understand that the suit had reference to land or other real property situated in that district; hence the determination of the Sudder Court that the Civil Court had no juriadiction in the case, appeared to be at variance with a previous Construction which had been established by the concurrent decision of the Allahabad and Calcutta Courts of Sudder Adawlut. On turning however to the Reports of Cases decided during the last year, we find that the Sudder Court did not consider the suit to have reference to land or other real property, but to arise out of the balance of an account, and to come therefore within the category of personal actions, which in the Court of 24-Pergunnahs cannot be sustained against any individual who resides in Calcutta, or becomes a resident in it after the suit has been instituted. There can be no question that the sum demanded had reference to the unfortunate factory of Goureepore, in which more than two lakhs of Rupees belonging to the estate of Boyd and Co. have been interred beyond the hope of a resurrection; but it was not considered by the Sudder Court as being in the strict sense of the word, a suit for land or landed property, and the decree of the Principal Sudder Ameen was reversed on the sole ground of its having been passed in a matter beyond his jurisdiction. It is a matter of justice to the Sudder, not only to state this fact, but also to recal those reflections which an erroneous impression of the nature of the case led us to indite.

As the papers state that an application has been made by the Sudder Court to the Legislative Council to rescind Regulation III. 1793, Section 17, we propose to offer a remark or two on the subject. By this Section, it is declared that the Court of 24-Pergunnahs is not to "receive or entertain any suit whatever against any person who may be an inhabitant of Calcutta, at the time the suit was instituted, or may become a resident within the limits of the town after the suit may be commenced." The Sudder Court has ruled that this prohibition was intended only to apply to personal actions; and not to suits for land or other real property, A suit for landed property situated in the 24-Pergunnahs may therefore be sustained against a defendant, though resident at the time in Calcutta, and the suit does not fall to the ground upon his subsequent removal into town. This Section of the law of 1793 appears however to be strictly limited to the 24-Pergunnahs; and not to extend to any of the other districts of the Lower Provinces. We are aware that the Hurkaru has taken a different view of its applicability; but we think our impression is fully borne out by the following reasons:—

First. The original regulations for the administration of justice in Bengal passed by the Governor General in Council (Mr. Hastings) on the 11th April 1780 directed that all mercantile disputes, all matters of personal property, all disputes about bounds and limits of landed property within the town of Calcutta should be subject to the jurisdiction of the Calcutta Court of Dewannee Adawlut; that is, to a Company's Court. In the course of that year Mr. Hastings hit upon the memorable expedient of stopping the encroachments of the Supreme Court by making the Chief Justice a pensioner of the Company, and appointing him to preside over the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, on a salary of 60,000 Rupees a year. This appointment took place on the 24th October 1780; and Sir Elijah, soon after entering on his office, laid the foundation of our present Code by preparing Regulations for the administration of Justice comprised in Ninety-five articles, which were passed by the Governor General on the 5th of July, 1781. The 23d Article of those regulations for the first time imposed those restrictions on the jurisdiction of the 24-Purgunnahs which Government has now been requested to abrogate: and in almost the same words which appear in the Regulation of 1793. The object of Sir Elijah was to prevent a collision between the Company's Court in the suburbs, and the King's Court in the city; and the limitations were manifestly intended not to apply to any other Court in the interior, the jurisdiction of each of which was distinctly described in that document. Secondly. Regulation 9, 1819, declares that no person being a resident in Calcutta shall be at liberty to defend an original suit in any Zillah Court unless he shall furnish security for eventual costs by a surety or sureties residing or possessing property out of Calcutta. It is manifest from this enactment that personal actions had been constantly instituted in the other Zillah Courts against persons resident in Calcutta. If the Legislators had considered that the provisions of 1793, barring the jurisdiction of the 24-Pergunnahs in such cases, was binding on all other Courts, they would not have made provision for the management of suits, which, upon that interpretation, it would have been illegal for them to entertain. The Regulation of 1819 gave no additional powers to the Mofussil Courts which they did not before possess; it merely made provision, as the Preamble states, for demanding that previous security from residents in Calcutta, of which experience had shewn the necessity. Thirdly. Act 23 of 1840, which supersedes the Regulation of 1819, goes upon the same principle, viz. that personal actions against individuals resident in Calcutta may be entertained in the districts of this Presidency; and it prescribes forms for summoning a defendant resident in Calcutta who had been sued for debt in the Court of Hooghly, and who was directed to attend in person and answer the complaint. If Goureepore had been situated on the right bank of the Hooghly, instead of the left, and a suit had been instituted against Mr. Piddington in the Principal Sudder Ameen's Court of that district, the Sudder Court would not have quashed it.

It is a singular fact, and it tends to shew how much our legislation has been the patch work of successive legislators, and how much it stands in need of a revision, that the law laid down exclusively for the 24-Pergunnahs, was extended in 1803 to all the Ceded Provinces; and it was ordained that the Courts in the Western Provinces should not entertain any suit whatever against any individual resident in the town of Calcutta, unless such suit related to real property situated without the limits of Calcutta. It appears therefore, that in the 24-Pergunnahs, and in the Western Provinces, no personal action will lie against any person who resides in Calcutta, nor can it be prosecuted if after its institution he has the wisdom to abscond and take refuge in that city. In every other district of the Lower Provinces such an action may be brought against any resident in Calcutta, and the most ample provision has been made for serving writs on the defendant, through the machinery of the Supreme Court. It must be self evident that this permission to sue a debtor in Calcutta is more urgently required in the district of the 24-Pergunnahs which surrounds the town, than in a zillah, four hundred miles off; yet it is refused to the Court in which it is most needed; and in which the non-possession of it leads to the grossest injustice. As soon as a suit is commenced against a debtor, living in the suburbs, and the summons has been served upon him, he crosses the line of demarcation, gets within the Mahratta ditch, and sets his creditors at defiance. They have no remedy but to bring an action against him, in the city Courts, and he then re-crosses the boundary, and again evades their pursuit.

By this admirable contrivance of the law, a debtor is enabled to play at hide and seek with the Courts, and to baffle the individuals he has defrauded. The anomaly created by this Regulation of 1793 does not cease here. If a debtor lives in the suburbs of Calcutta which lie across the river and are within the jurisdiction of the Hooghly Court, he may be pursued into the city; if he lives in the eastern suburbs, he may not. Thus there is one law for the western and another for the eastern suburbs of the city. If this anomaly is to be perpetuated, there will be little wisdom in maintaining any Courts on the Eastern side of Calcutta, where every legal process may be so easily evaded. The time has now arrived for removing this anomaly, and assimilating the powers of the Court of 24-Pergunnahs with those of the Hooghly Court, and of every other Court in Bengal. The reason in which this enactment originated having ceased, the law itself should be abrogated. There is no longer any dispute between the Supreme Court and the Supreme Council; there is no fear lest the Governor General and Council should be served with a summons from the Supreme Court in a plea of trespass. There is no necessity for purchasing an immunity from vexation by creating an unconstitutional office and stopping the Chief Justice's mouth with 6000£. Parliament has created a local Legislative Council with equal authority over the Queen's and over the Company's Courts; and an enactment which grew out of their collision, and which inflicts injustice and misery on a large body of people, ought therefore to be expunged forthwith from the Statute Book.

THE NEW REGISTRATION ACT.—Government has been somewhat unfortunate in its attempts to establish an efficient system of Registration for this Presidency. About three years ago, a very complicated Act was drafted by the legal member of the Legislative Council, which was said to be very complete, but which was found to be very unintelligible, except to the initiated. The draft was published at two successive periods in the Government Gazette, but was left by Lord Auckland for the consideration of his successor. Lord Ellenborough, shortly after his arrival, went to the North West Provinces, where he was too busy with wars and foreign politics to command the time necessary for understanding the machinery of the proposed Act. It was therefore laid on the shelf, and in its stead was published a brief Act, in which the most palpable error of the previous law, an error which had rendered it altogether ineffectual, was corrected. That Act was directed to come into operation on the 1st of May in the current year. A draft of an Act has just been published repealing it, with the exception of the provision we have alluded to above.

The original law of 1793 declared that if a person had any knowledge, or had been informed of, the existence of a prior unregistered deed at the time when he registered his own deed regarding the same property, his registration became of no value. This clause created an opening for endless fraud and litigation, and entirely destroyed the security afforded by registration. Evidence of this prior knowledge sufficient to invalidate any subsequent registered deed, could always be obtained in the market, and at no great expense; and hence registration was altogether omitted. The same rule existed in the Equity Law of England, and the Real Property Commissioners in their Report state that it had ruined registration. The 1st Act of this year repealed this clause, and declared that no previous knowledge or notice had by parties of the existence of prior unregistered deeds, should affect the validity of their registered titles. This salutary provision of the new law has been retained in the Draft Act now promulgated, though the Landholder's Society, when roused from their long slumbers by George Thompson, addressed Government against it, and praised the old law, by which they said the Civil Courts possessed the power of protecting the innocent party, that is, the party which refused to obey the law and neglected to register its deeds, trusting to the eminent facilities which exist in India for obtaining proof of any thing—for a consideration.

Act I. of this year also provided that all registered conveyances or other instruments affecting titles to land, or any interest therein, should take precedence of every other deed or instrument of the same nature which was not registered. This in fact was compulsory legislation; and nothing was wanting to complete the process of compulsion, but to declare that the validity of a deed should date from the day of its registration, not from that of its execution. It was soon found however that, under existing circumstances, the new law embraced too large a circle; a deed affecting any interest in land included leases as well as large deeds of gift. The natives have a natural repugnance to registration, as they have to every thing else which enforces order. But even if their desire to register had been as strong as their repugnance to it was, they could not have quitted their homes and travelled to a distance, of several days' journey with witnesses to the execution of every deed, in order to obtain its registration. Neither was there any machinery ready to meet the new and almost boundless demand for registration which the comprehensive terms of the Act were sure to create. That Act has therefore been repealed, and the draft of a new law promulgated, which limits compulsory registration to deeds of sale, gift, and mortgage, and certificates of the discharge of incumbrances. Every registered deed or document of this nature will invalidate every prior or subsequent deed, relating to the same property, which may not be registered.

It would be unjust were we to omit to mention that after Act I of this year was passed, the Landholder's Society came forward and addressed a long and able memorial to Government in which the objectionable clause of the new Act, which is now about to be repealed, and certain other unobjectionable clauses which have been retained, were censured. Whether the new Act is owing to the representations of that body, as the Hurkaru supposes, or whether the brief experience of two months has shewn that with the existing registration agency, the Act could not be enforced, we know not. But the present Act is so limited in its nature, that it can be regarded only in the light of a temporary arrangement, till Government has the leisure to digest a new and comprehensive law, and to create such local facilities for registration, as shall leave every man who refuses to register his deeds without excuse. The Act makes the law regarding the registration of certain deeds stringent; this is necessary; in fact a registration law cannot be too stringent; but then it leaves the old clogs on registration untouched, and it establishes no machinery for universal registration. All leases of any value ought to be registered. It is the non-registration of them which diminishes the value of estates. We think we speak within bounds when we assert, that if purchasers had an opportunity of knowing the exact circumstances of an estate, and the extent to which it was encumbered with leases, the value of landed property would be increased twenty per cent. As soon as a suitable apparatus can be established in every district, registration should be rendered universal, peremptory and compulsive, however contrary to the habits and feelings of the people. The machinery will pay for itself, and form no charge on the state. Mr. Bird's administration, so to speak, will be immortalized if he should succeed in introducing a measure, which, independently of its effects in augmenting the value of property, would do more to introduce peace and security, and to lessen the amount of litigation, than any other plan which could be devised.

APPEALS TO THE PRIVY COUNCIL.—The Legislative Council has at length published the draft of a Regulation which devolves on the Appellant the expense of preparing two copies of all papers and proceedings connected with Appeals to the Privy Council, including the charge for translating into English those documents which are in the Native language. The preamble of the Regulation declares that this measure is just and necessary. The Hurkaru seems to doubt the assertion, and intimates that the Landholders' Society will be down on Government on the subject. We are curious to see the arguments by which the Committee of that Society may endeavour to prove that this expense ought not to be borne by the parties who prefer the appeal. Whatever argument is brought to bear on the subject of appeals to England, will apply with equal force to all inferior appeals in this country. If it be right that the state should assist an appellant to the Privy Council, by sharing the expense of his appeal, it must be equally right and just, and necessary that it should grant the same aid from the public purse to those who appeal from the Moonsiff to the Judge, or from the Judge to the Sudder. If this principle be once admitted, and the wishes of the appellant be allowed to regulate the duty of the state, there can be no reason why Government should not also defray a portion of the vakeel's fees, or indeed of any other charge connected with the management of an appeal.

The Regulation of 1798 on which the practice which it is now intended to abrogate was built, does not declare, in so many words, that the expense of translating and transcribing papers in such cases shall be borne by Government. But as it made no provision for the appellant's defraying these charges, while at the same time it required him to pay the expence of the suit in England, and of making any copies of the papers he might desire for his own use, the practice grew up of drawing the expense of the two copies which were sent home from the public treasury. While the minimum of appeals remained fixed at 5,000*l*., the appeals were few and far between, and the expense was little felt by Government. But several years ago it pleased Her Majesty's Privy Council—doubtless with the laudable desire of giving the natives of India the inestimable blessing of English justice to a greater extent than they had previously enjoyed it, and thus of drawing more business to the Cockpit—to reduce the value of appealable suits to 10,000 Rupees. This necessarily multiplied the cases of appeal more than five fold, and made the demand on the public funds a serious consideration. With this increased facility for appeal, abuses began to grow up in this rank soil. An appeal was lodged in numerous instances without the remotest intention of prosecuting it, simply to annoy the respondent, and to bring him to terms, by the dreary prospect of a law suit at the distance of half the globe, of which it was impossible to foresee the termination. This process of intimidation cost the appellant the sum of Two Rupees, and security for the costs in England. When this had been furnished, the Sudder Court ordered the translation and transcription of papers to commence, and it frequently happened that they had no sooner been completed, than the respondent compromised the matter with his opponent, and agreed to accept less than the sum which had been decreed him, and the appellant filed his razeenama, and withdrew his appeal, leaving Government saddled with all the expenses which had been incurred in the preparation of the documents. To such an extent has this privilege of appeal been abused to defeat the ends of justice, in the manner thus described, that if we are rightly informed, an appeal to England has become the rule, and non-appeal the exception. It is not necessary, nor is it just that Government should foster this system of legal chicanery, by taking on itself the expense of preparing the documents. It is proposed therefore to require a deposit of money equal to the expense likely to be incurred, before the appeal is declared to be admitted. This rule will effectually check fictitious appeals, without obstructing those in which the appellant, with a bold confidence in the justice of his case, resolves to submit it to the investigation of the Privy Council.

PROGRESS AND PROSPECTS OF PUSEYISM.—The intelligence brought by the last Mail regarding the prospects of the Established Church, both in England, Scotland and Ireland, is in the highest degree ominous. In Scotland, a large body of the most pious and zealous ministers and laymen have seceded from the Establishment in a body, and thereby given it a shock from which it will in all probability never recover. In Ireland, the Roman Catholic population has been organized against the Protestant Establishment, by the ablest demagogue of modern times; and unless the agitation can be put down by military power, there is little prospect that it will cease, while the grievance of which the people complain—that of supporting an establishment to which they do not belong,—continues to exist. A quarter of a century ago, the Papists might have been satisfied to leave the Protestant Church its endowments, if their own Priests and Bishops had been taken into the pay of the state; but any such proposal at the present stage of disaffection, would be viewed as an index of fear, and only serve to give fresh impulse to their demands. In England, the Church is torn with dissensions from Penzance to Berwick; the great majority of the Clergy are said to be Puseyites both in doctrine and practice, and the uniformity to establish which two thousand ministers were ejected in the days of Charles the Second, and Dissent created, has ceased to be any thing but a name. In all these commotions it is the principle of Establishments which is placed in jeopardy, and whatever change they may produce in the views and feelings of society, it can scarcely be favourable to the Established Church of England and Ireland. Those who are sincerely and conscientiously attached to its communion, cannot escape the painful conviction that its integrity would be as deeply affected by the triumph of O'Connel and his Irishmen, as by that of Dr. Pusey and his Tractarians.

It is true that Dr. Pusey has been debarred from preaching in the University for two years, but this step will neither silence his party, nor check its increase. On the contrary it may possibly invest him with the sanctity of a martyr, and give new importance to his doctrines. Every such exhibition of force, either proves completely successful in subduing the refractory, or it serves to invigorate them. In the present instance it is likely to produce this latter effect. The objectionable doctrines maintained in Dr. Pusey's sermon, we gave in our extracts last week. It is said—though we have not been able to discover the fact in our files—that of the six members of the Board of Heresy, three were favorable to his views, and that the condemnation of his sermon was carried by the casting vote of the President. Dr. Pusey has entered his protest against the decision of the Board, and complains that he has been condemned unheard. This has given occasion for the remark, that if such be the case, he has only had meted out to him the measure he meted to Dr. Hampden some years back. The condemnation of their Chief appears to have produced the same effect among his followers that the outlawry of O'Connel would produce among the Repealers. The Tractarians are in a fury. The misfortune is, says a Puseyite organ, "that matters cannot end here." It is to be hoped they will not. Every well wisher of the Church must be happy to see any probability that the battle will be drawn to a head, and the controversy brought to a distinct issue, whether the Articles and Liturgy are to be interpreted in a Catholic or a Protestant sense. A second victim, according to the Puseyites, has been already selected by the Vice Chancellor in a Mr. Morris, who is to be summoned, it appears, before the Board of Heresy, for having in a sermon preached at Christ Church, declared his belief, that Archbishop Laud was then interceding for the English Church. "If," adds this Puseyite journal, "such sermons as have been heard continually within the University are repeated, denying as has often been done, Regeneration in the one Sacrament, and the Real presence in the other, or the Apostolicity of orders, we can only have arrived at the commencement du fin."

The excitement at Oxford has been increased by an action for damages, brought by the Rev. G. Macmullen, against Dr. Hampden for preventing his obtaining the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. The Regius Professor proposed these two theses for the candidate to maintain. 1. That the Church of England does not teach, nor can it be proved from Scripture, that any change takes place in the elements in consecration in the Lord's Supper. 2. That it is a mode of expression calculated to give erroneous views of Divine Revelation to speak of Scripture and Tradition as joint authorities in the matter of Christian Doctrine." Mr. Macmullen, who is a disciple of Dr. Pusey, refused to maintain the theses, and claimed the right of selecting his own subjects, which being denied by the Regius Professor, he was unable to obtain his degree, and forthwith instituted an action against the Professor—a proceeding admirably calculated to strengthen the bonds of discipline in that learned and Conservative University.

The good Bishop of Norwich has shocked the Tractarians by a sermon he preached at the anniversary of the Gospel Propagation Society at St. Paul's Cathedral. The most satisfactory account of the Sermon is given in a Puseyite journal. "It was enough to affect a Christian to tears to see the exhibition which was made by one of the Bishops of the Church from the pulpit of St. Paul's Cathedral on Tuesday last, the 10th of May....The Bishop of Norwich from the pulpit of St. Paul's, denied, totidem verbis, the apostolical succession of the priesthood of the English Church; he denied it to be the necessary mark of a true Church; he denied that it could be traced with any certainty." The journalist expresses a fervent hope that the Society will not permit the sermon to be printed with its annual Report, adding, "should it appear there, the hand-writing is upon the wall, declaring that the days of the Society are numbered."

The tears here referred to are tears of regret. It is right therefore to bring out to view on the other hand, an event which is enough we suppose to affect such a Christian with tears of joy. We allude to the opening of a Puseyite Church at the Land's End. "Our readers will have seen, in our last publication, the specimen of what the efforts of the Cambridge Camden Society are intended to produce, recently given at the opening of a new chapel at Penzance. There was "the approach to the chancel by three bold and well-executed granite steps." Then a rail, "or rather screen;" and within the rail, three more steps. Then the reredos, and seven sedelia, and the credence and piscina. Then, "on the first altar-step are two elegant candelabra, five feet and a-half high, containing candles of wax, four feet and a-half high;" making ten feet in all. Then, "the service is read from a lectern, which is situated on the upper chancel-step." "The Litany is said from a faldstool, placed on the second chancel-step, and looking towards the altar." "The lessons are read from a brass eagle, which stands on the pavement of the choir."

"We have then a description of how no fewer than nine clergymen contrived to divide the service among them; the whole "effect" of which is said, again and again, to have been "impressive," and "most impressive;" but of which, it is abundantly obvious, the chief peculiarity must have been, the distracting and dazzling effect of the whole glitter and parade, and perpetual changing of the dramatis personæ, inevitably making quiet and abstracted devotion almost impossible. Three of these clergymen, we are sorry to say, were members of the Church Missionary Society."

The Bishop of London, whose memorable charge appears to have given new heart to Puseyism, had been employed during the month of May in giving admonitions to his clergy relative to certain innovations on established usages, which are styled a restoration of ancient practices. These admonitions were subsequently converted into injunctions. The preaching in the surplice, which the Bishop had previously enjoined, had been in many instances dispensed with, owing to the strong repugnance of some of the clergy and nearly all the laity to it. Of the new injunctions, the principal item referred to the "restoration of the weekly Offertory, by which the offerings and oblations of the people, should be collected every Sunday, and placed on the altar, to be at the disposal of the Bishop." Archdeacon Hale, who enjoys the entire confidence of the Bishop, has entered into a calculation that a revenue of no less than half a million sterling might thus be raised. The collection will of course be accompanied with the prayer for the Church Militant; and certainly at no period, was it more necessary to offer up, not only weekly, but daily, the supplication contained in it, that "it would please God to inspire the Church with a spirit of truth, unity and concord." But the innovation has met with much stern opposition, more especially on the part of the laity, to whose exertions at the present crisis the Church must look for its salvation. The laity object to this weekly demand on their funds as seriously affecting their means of assisting the various objects of secular and religious charity which they have been accustomed to support. To this and other innovations, Sir W. Baynes, and seventy-three of the parishioners in St. Paul's Chapel have sent a very spirited remonstrance. In their letter they state. "It is not necessary for us to particularize these novelties, or to inquire whether at a remote period they were in use; if it be said they are trivial and of no moment we see less occasion to harass our feelings, and to widen that schism which your Lordship need not be told bids fair to shake to its centre the Church of England; but, on the other hand, if these alterations in the service to which we have been accustomed be important, we cannot disconnect them from those obnoxious and insidious doctrines which have been promulgated in the Tracts for the Times, and which need not be said are embraced by a large portion of the clergy of the Established Church."

They conclude by entreating that his Lordship "will allow the congregation of St. Paul's Chapel to have the Church Service as preached to their fathers, without mutilations or additions, which, though they may appear trivial, the undersigned can only view as the insidious advances of those doctrines which they firmly and conscientiously believe could only lead, if adopted and enforced, to the re-establishment of Popery and the overthrow of the Church of England."

The particular object of this weekly collection is not clearly stated, but from some hints thrown out in the papers, it would appear as if his Lordship intended it for a Mission to China, which is to begin with the establishment of a Bishop at Hong Kong.

Next to Dr. Pusey's suspension from the pulpit, the most important event of the month, in reference to the progress of Tractarianism, is the defection of its most influential advocate, the Quarterly Review. For several years past, the weight of this important periodical publication has been cast into the scale of the Tracts; but a change has come over the spirit of its dreams. The rapid spread of this sect, its nearer and nearer approximation to the doctrines of Rome, the increasing arrogance of its pretensions, which if submitted to would bring back the times when the Church trampled the State under its feet, combined with the alarming strife and distraction which it has introduced into society, and which threaten the very existence of the Establishment, have aroused the fears of this Conservative organ, and it has sounded the note of alarm to the people of England. From some indistinct allusions in the papers before us, we are led to infer that the article, which is written with great spirit and vigor, is from the pen of John Wilson Croker. Whether the hand which penned it be lay or clerical, its intrinsic boldness and excellence, and its appearance in so popular a journal, will give it extraordinary influence, and serve to hasten the crisis, which cannot come too soon. Our own copy of the Quarterly Review is now at Suez, waiting for the arrival of the Hindoostan Steamer; for the following quotations from the article on Puseyism we are indebted to the papers which have reached us.

"The zeal of the writers grew hotter and hotter at the flame they excited, till at last growing blind at the blaze, they have burned their own fingers, and very nearly, if not actually, set fire to the Church."

"They have been carried away into excesses in matters of both doctrine and discipline—and all in a Popish direction—which appear to us quite extravagant."

"Open defection, even when we suspect it to be the result of an irregular intellect or a morbid vanity, is less deplorable and infinitely less dangerous than the masquerade orthodoxy whose heart is already reconciled to Rome, though its hands are still willing to carry the bag and take the sop, and to participate in the communion of the Anglican Church, as Judas did at the Last Supper."

"The reader sees that all these additional ceremonies have the same Popish taint as the others we have commented on, and are intended to give to the elements something of anticipated sanctity, and confer on the table the character of a sacrificial altar."

"Next we arrive at a series of innovations introduced by the Tractarians and their imitators, which, in fact, deserve no other title than fooleries, and are individually so puerile that, if it were not as symptoms of a Papistical spirit, we really should be ashamed to waste time and paper in exposing them."

The Reviewer's protest against all movement is thus expressed :—

"Our first and main objection to it (bowing to the east) is, that it is another of the series of attempts, great and small, by which the Tractarians are endeavouring to introduce Romish forms into our Church. We object to the trifles we have just been discussing because they are parts of a system; we should equally object to this practice, even if it were also a trifle, as another part of the system."

On the use of the Surplice the Reviewer remarks :—

"May we not venture to deplore that, because a few clergymen have thought proper to interpret the Rubric about the Church militant prayer in a way different from the usage of at least a century and a half, and then dislike the consequent trouble of changing their gown, the Church of England is to be involved in obsolete, yet, when revived, thorny and angry controversies as to the old rivalry between that 'rag of Popery,' the white surplice, and that 'badge of Calvinism,' the Genevese gown."

The confusion introduced by the Tractarian is next denounced :—

"It is easy to make a jumble and confusion, but not so easy to set it right again. It is not seemly that a preacher should be enjoined to wear a white gown at one end of London-bridge, and a black gown at the other; which must be the case till the Bishop of Winchester shall have adopted the Bishop of London's views, or, which we rather hope, the Bishop of London may reconsider the case, and revert to what has been, we think we can show, the undeviating practice in parish churches at least since the Reformation."

And finally, the subject is closed with the following entreaty :—

"If, as we believe, the whole Episcopal bench, and the vast majority of mankind, are agreed that the greater part, if not all, of these deviations from the established usages of the Church are frivolous, unwarrantable, and, in their consequences, dangerous, let the venerated depositaries of authority honestly and roundly, and with one voice, say so, and save, if possible, those who heedlessly practise them from the sin,—and the Church from the peril,—of a schism about trifles and toys,—nosegays, curtsies, and candlesticks."

THE CHAPLAINS.—The Englishman stated on Friday last, that he had been looking into the state of the subscription lists of the various institutions supported in this country by voluntary subscriptions, and was struck with the decline of bounty on the part of the Clergy who were once the chief supporters of many of these charities. The reason, says he, is obvious. The clergy are no longer paid as they were. The augmentation of the numerical strength of the Chaplains was accompanied by a reduction in the salaries of their respective grades." Our contemporary has we think been misled on the subject. The salaries of the Chaplains have never, as far as we have heard, been subject to any serious reduction. Full Chaplains receive the same allowances they did twenty-five years ago, that is from 8 to 900 Rupees a month. We are not certain that the salaries of the two Presidency Chaplains were not curtailed on the appointment of a Bishop and an Archdeacon, but with this exception, if it be an exception, the salaries have not been affected by any subsequent change. The allowances of Assistant Chaplains, were not made up by any deduction from the salaries of the older Chaplains then on the list; they formed an additional charge on the state to the full of the salaries.

Neither has there been any real decline of bounty on the part of the Clergy to our charitable institutions; nor were they at any time the chief supporters of any of the charities, with the exception perhaps of small local charities. If our contemporary alludes to the munificent donations of Mr. Brown and Dr. Buchanan, he must bear in mind that their pecuniary resources were derived, not from their allowances as Chaplains, but from their well paid offices of Provost and Vice Provost of the College of Fort William. Those who have been identified as belonging to the same school, gave liberally and nobly, but not because they were in the receipt of larger allowances than their successors. If their names appear more conspicuously in the list of donations, it was because the number of institutions which demanded their aid was exceedingly limited. At present the number of public institutions, and the calls on the clergyman's purse, have been so greatly multiplied, that the amount he can subscribe on each occasion appears comparatively small. If however we had an opportunity of summing up the unostentatious charities of the clergy of the present day, we are certain our contemporary would have no reason to complain that the exercise of this Christian virtue had diminished.

The Editor proceeds to speak of the necessity of having not only a numerous, but a high caste clergy in this country. If by high caste clergy he alludes to a Puseyite clergy, we should say, from a reference to some of the appointments which have recently been made in the grade of the Assistant Chaplains, that his wishes are likely to be realized. Not only have we had these high caste clergy sent out ready made from England, but some of those who came out of an inferior caste, have subsequently risen to that higher order which is thought so desirable. Perhaps however we are doing violence to the views of our contemporary, in supposing that he considers a high caste clergyman necessary to cope with a high caste brahmun, and his allusion may possibly apply to the mental endowments of the Chaplains, under the augmentation rule. In this case also we think his opinion is open to correction. Doubtless the Company have had some very "hard bargains" among the Chaplains, as they have in the Civil, Military and Medical departments; but among those who have arrived within the last two years in India, there are men of equal learning, and equal talent and zeal, with those whose names are found on the list thirty years ago. We cannot expect to find a cluster of men like Brown, Buchanan, Martyn, Corrie and Thomason, in every lustrum; but to assume that there is any general and perceptible inferiority in the clergymen now appointed, which would place them in a disadvantageous contrast with their predecessors, would be contrary to the result of observation. A Chaplaincy in India is not in the list of clerical prizes; and those who have prospects of rising in the Church at home, would probably refuse an Indian appointment. But if the salaries of the chaplains were trebled, it is much to be doubted whether we should have men more endowed with Christian piety, zeal and humility, or even with University learning, than we can expect under the present system of moderate allowances. Rich Chaplaincies would become objects of ambitious competition, and would in all probability be used as counters in the game of politics. Men who were sent out here to make rapid fortunes would consist of those who had more interest than gifts; and although they might be men of higher caste, of more patrician birth, and of nobler connections than those who accept the office at present, it is not certain that they would apply themselves with more assiduity to the discharge of their duties, or enlarge their charity in proportion to their means.

THE UNION BANK agitation is on the wane, and will probably not be revived till the period of the next half yearly meeting comes round. The meeting which was made special to consider the propriety of altering the Rules of the Bank in various respects, was held on Saturday last, when not one of the proposed alterations was carried. The qualification of a Director was not raised to double the amount of qualification necessary for a Director of the Bank of Bengal; neither was the Bank allowed to advance money on its own shares, nor were the Directors vested with discretionary power to buy up the shares of the Bank; and the propriety of allowing proxies in certain cases, was not admitted. The object of those who signed the requisition to the Secretary, appears to have been defeated, almost with their own consent, for never were measures urged with greater feebleness and indecision. We believe this result is mainly owing to the exertions of the press, and so far as those measures were likely to be detrimental to the Institution, the Proprietors owe a debt of gratitude to the fourth estate, which we fear they are ill disposed to pay.

We hear it repeated, that these discussions by the press are injurious to the Bank, and are calculated to shake the confidence of the public in its stability. But if the assertions so repeatedly made in the public journals could be fairly met, and proved to be utterly groundless, by a reference to figures, their interference, so far from doing harm, would serve to increase the stability of the Bank. If the press had been as faithful four years ago, as it is at present, much of the distress and anxiety which is now felt, would have been averted. The capital of the Bank would not have been diverted into channels from which it cannot be recovered without much risk and difficulty; advances would not have been made upon produce not in existence; goods would not have been hypothecated to the Bank and left in possession of the borrower to be pawned to other parties. And however distressing to individual feelings; however detrimental for a time even to the interests of the Bank, this unceremonious agitation may be, yet it will probably be discovered in the end to have averted far more mischief than it may have created.

The remarks of the Press, more especially of the Star, were embodied by Mr. Turton in a series of questions, of which he required an answer from the Directors of the Bank. Mr. Grant responded to the call, and offered various explanations of the balance sheet, which served rather to strengthen than to remove the impression that the statement which had been published in the papers, was intended to cover and not to reveal the untoward position of the Bank. The Directors have evidently aimed in that document at making the best of a bad matter. Mr. Grant's explanation disclosed some matters which would otherwise have remained unknown; he acknowledged that the mode of keeping the accounts would admit of much improvement; and he confessed his inability to assign any reason why the interest on the Government Securities, to the amount of Twenty-one lakhs and seventy thousand Rupees, belonging to the Bank, had not been drawn, though the reason was plain as a pike staff;—the paper had been impignorated to a sturdy Association which would not take the trouble to draw out and pay over the interest.

The object of every discussion on the subject of the Union Bank ought to be to restore, and not to impair its credit; and it becomes those who have taken part in these discussions, to consider whether any good can be expected from prolonging the agitation. Every one is perfectly aware that by the predominating influence of Directors seeking their own relief, the funds of the Bank have been directed into dangerous channels; that the object of the Institution—the support of commercial transactions,—has been defeated, by locking up its capital in mills, factories, mines, and other profitless speculations. That these proceedings will not be repeated, may be safely gathered from the energy of public reprobation which the disclosure has called forth. The object now is to retrieve the affairs of the Bank; to recover with the least loss, the funds which have thus been placed in jeopardy, and to re-establish public confidence. It is the part of wisdom therefore to bring these discussions to a close, and to place a generous reliance in the Directors whom the proprietors have chosen; and in the effect of that public opinion which has been so unequivocally expressed. The Directors have a serious task before them; but we have every confidence in their zeal, their fidelity and their eventual success. The present season is favorable for liberating the Bank from its unwise agricultural engagements. If at the next meeting it should appear that any opportunity of disentangling the institution from those indigo speculations into which it has most injudiciously plunged, has been wantonly neglected; that any fresh measure can be traced up to a wish to continue the speculation, or that the funds of the Bank have been devoted as heretofore to the relief of distressed firms on insecure pledges, it will then be time for the public to come forward and make its voice heard. Meanwhile the Directors should be allowed a season of repose for the undisturbed performance of the duties committed to them.

THE EDUCATION CLAUSES OF THE FACTORY BILL.—The reader has not forgotten that the Educational clauses of Sir James Graham's Factory Bill, in which provision was to be made by public assessment, for the establishment of state schools which were to be under the control of the Establishment, and in which no Dissenter was to be allowed to become a teacher or an assistant, were met by so determined an opposition on the part of the Dissenters, as to stagger the "unmitred Baronet," as the Puseyites term him, and to induce him to amend the Bill. But it was found, on examination, that the amended Bill had received only a few alterations in the details, and none in its principle; while its spirit was more objectionable than that of the original measure. The opposition to the Bill was not abated, but rather augmented by the revision it had undergone. Still however Sir James Graham announced his determination to carry it through the House, evidently hoping that a counter demonstration would intermediately be got up. But in this he has been signally disappointed. A petition in favour of the bill was, it is true, presented from Manchester, with 23,000 Church signatures, but the value of it was completely neutralised by another petition from the same place, with 90,000 Dissenting signatures attached to it. The Baronet is said to have been coquetting with the Wesleyans, which may or may not be true, but we find they are immovable in their opposition to the Bill. The day originally fixed for the consideration of the amended Bill was Monday, the 22d of May. It was then postponed to Friday, the 26th, then to Monday, the 5th of June, on which day Sir James Graham stated that he should be prepared to proceed with it that day fortnight. Meanwhile, the House continues to be inundated with petitions, and it is fully expected that the number will reach 15,000, and the signatures amount to three Millions by the day fixed for the debate.

The Englishman, when alluding to the remarks we offered on the subject on the arrival of the last mail, expressed some surprize that we had given no editorial opinion of the measure. We thought the general tone of our observations, and the exultation with which we dwelt on the opposition it had encountered, would have been sufficient to indicate our own views. But lest he should again suppose that we are in any measure favourable to it, we would distinctly state that the plan of raising funds for national education by taxation, and of excluding all but Churchmen from the office of teacher, and placing the whole system under episcopal control, is open to the most serious objections. The claim of the Church to be the sole instructress of a people, among whom two-fifths, at least, have separated from her communion, cannot be admitted. We are fully convinced that the voluntary efforts of private communities are not sufficient for the education of a nation; that they are too feeble to cope with the evils of national ignorance. Private individuals and bodies have assuredly done more in England than has ever been done in any age and in any country, by unofficial agency. It is owing to their exertions, among Churchmen and Dissenters, that England has been kept from degenerating into absolute barbarism. But the experiment of the voluntary system has only served to point out more emphatically the duties of the state, and to demonstrate that national education must be supported by national funds, and that it must be made compulsory. But in the present divided state of England, and more especially in the distracted state of the Church, while its due weight is given to episcopal agency in the system, it must not be allowed to absorb every other influence. If the Dissenters are to pay for the Schools, they will reasonably object to any arrangement which shall exclude them from all share in the management of them, founded on the assumption that they are a tolerated but proscribed sect. The Bill, it is said, makes every concession which could be expected; but the very term concession, especially in reference to districts, the seats of manufacturing opulence, in which the Dissenters constitute the overwhelming majority, implies a degree of degradation on the one part, and of supremacy on the other, which cannot fail to wound the feelings of the mind.

But it is the growth and prevalence of Puseyism in England which has given its bitterness and pungency to the opposition manifested to the Bill. The principles of the Oxford School are now described as having pervaded the majority of the Establishment. The feelings of a Puseyite to a Dissenter exhibit perhaps the highest instance of intense contempt of which the human mind can form an idea. The contempt of the 'Son of Heaven' for the outside barbarians—of a Mahomedan for an infidel,—of a Brahmun for a chandal, is mild compared with the feelings of superlative contempt which a full grown Tractarian feels towards a Dissenter. Can any man wonder that Dissenters should so strongly object to entrusting the scheme of national education for which they are to pay, and in which the welfare of their own families is bound up, to such keeping? Whatever might have been the propriety of placing the Church at the head of public instruction at any former period of our history, assuredly the present is not the time at which any friend of peace and religious liberty would think it prudent to do so. But there are other considerations which forbid it. In doctrine, the heart of the Puseyites is at Rome. They abhor the "odious Reformation," and all that Dissenters hold dear of Christian truth; at the same time, so important do they consider trifles that they scruple not to introduce a schism in the Anglican Church about "trifles and toys, nosegays, curtsies, and candlesticks." Is it to such men, so unsound in doctrine, so puerile in conduct, that the business of public instruction is to be confided? We beseech the reader not to imagine that we write thus under the influence of sectarian feelings; if that were the case, we should exult over the progress of Puseyism, which is the firmest and most successful friend of Dissent; but we feel painfully that whatever unprotestantises our beloved country, effectually destroys its happiness, its peace, its glory, and disables it from the performance of those high duties in an uncivilised and heathen world which Divine Providence seems especially to have confided to its instrumentality.

The Bill cannot pass. With the Scottish Church rent in twain, and the Establishment emaciated almost to a skeleton by the life blood which has been drawn from it; with the English Church divided against itself to a degree which almost betokens the arrival of the period when, in the emphatic language of Holy writ, it cannot stand; with Ireland demanding the Repeal of the Union, in the hope of stripping the Saxon Church of its endowments, and restoring them to the Church of St. Patrick; with Ireland in a state of insurrection, requiring the presence of 25,000 troops, and a fleet of observation, as though it was the country of an enemy, Sir James Graham will not be so insane as to push through a measure, against which fifteen thousand petitions signed by three millions have been presented, and which cannot be carried into effect, without the cordial co-operation of those who are its uncompromising antagonists. He evidently wants only a decent pretext for giving up the Bill, and backing out of the foolish scrape into which he has been drawn by his Clerical prompters, who will long rue the day when they urged a measure which has served so unequivocally to demonstrate the strength of Dissent, and to shew the country that whenever the Dissenters are unanimous on any question touching their religious privileges, the Church is powerless, and the Parliament submissive.

MOULMEIN.—We have received Moulmein papers to the 12th of July. They announce that all differences with the Burmese authorities at Martaban had been successfully adjusted by Major Broadfoot, and the navigation of the river freed from all interruption through his exertions. The papers publish a series of Proclamations issued by the Commissioner to the number of eight, during the progress of these negotiations, for which we cannot afford space. It is sufficient however to announce the result to which they have led. The imposition of an excise duty of fifteen per cent. on timber, the staple production of the province, requires to be reconsidered. It may possibly appear to the controlling authorities here that the removal of the impost would be more advantageous to its interests than the retention of it.

It is manifest that the success of Major Broadfoot's exertions has been owing to the vigour which has marked them. The Burmese Cabinet will not go to war with us, even on a great pretence, much less for a few rafts of timber. Our triumph in China has settled the question of peace or war, not only with the Burmese, but with the other Indo-Chinese nations, for the next ten years. Any encroachments which the Burmese officers may make in the frontier provinces, will be disavowed and punished, as soon as a vigorous remonstrance is offered. We owe it to the peace and security of our own provinces, to use the advantages which we have thus acquired, for their benefit, and to resist with firmness the very first attempts to encroach, which the Burmese may exhibit. Major Broadfoot deserves credit for the energy of his conduct, which has thus been crowned with success. But in proportion as these exertions by the new Commissioner appear commendable, the punishment which has been inflicted on the previous Commissioner for having adopted the same measures, though not perhaps with the same energy, appears unaccountable and unjust.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, JULY 27.

— The Star of the 25th instant, has a long and able article on the Salt Company, written with a perfect knowledge of the subject and in lively and vigorous style. We recommend it to the especial notice of our readers. It will be found among our extracts.

— The convention with France regarding the conveyance of letters by way of Marseilles, which was announced by the last mail, has by some oversight not been made public by the post office authorities, and the last Calcutta Gazette still contains the old announcement of three years standing, that all letters sent by way of Marseilles will be charged 2s. 8d. under a quarter of an ounce. As a double mail will be despatched this day week to England, one by the Hindoostan, the other by way of Bombay, it is important that the public should bear in mind the new arrangements which we copy from the Star.

"Most of our readers will rejoice to hear that under the new convention with France the postage for letters to England viâ Marseilles has been reduced to 1s. 10d. for letters under a quarter of an ounce; and to 2s. 3d. for those under half an ounce—but on the other hand newspapers are to be charged 3d. instead of 2d. each as formerly. This increased postage on Newspapers has occasioned some remonstrance which it is stated will probably have the effect of reducing it to the former rate of 2d. Arrangements are in progress for the convenience of persons posting letters in England for places beyond India, as China, Australia, &c. &c. and the late regulation of the Post Office prohibiting such letters being sent by the India overland mail has been cancelled."—Eastern Star.

— Mr. A. F. Smith, the Sheriff of the year, has presented the Jail with a number of books calculated to amuse and instruct. This library is intended equally for the unfortunate and the guilty, the debtor and the culprit.

— The Hurkaru states, that the last express reached Madras on the evening of the 18th, just four days before it reached us; the difference of time is said to be disproportioned to the distance of space. The distance between Madras and Bombay is 763 miles; the transmission of letters therefore in six days is at the rate of five miles and a quarter an hour.

— The Managers of the Military Orphan establishment have resolved to maintain the Boys' school, instead of placing the wards at other institutions. As the expense of the establishment was excessive beyond all precedent, owing to the very small number of boys educated in it, it was proposed to break it up and send the lads to England, where they would be better educated for the same sum. The plan would also have had the advantage of detroying an odious and galling distinction now made between those born in and out of wedlock. The Court of Directors however refused to sanction the arrangement, and the question therefore came up whether the present expensive establishment should be kept up, or a more economical and equally efficient plan adopted. The managers have it seems resolved on the former.

— The Theatre at Prince of Wales' Island is about to be sold—to defray the arrears of wages, due to the peon who had charge of it.

FRIDAY, JULY 28.

— The Star of this morning has a very spirited and humorous translation into Hindoostanee of Lord Ellenborough's speech at Barrackpore. It is intended for the use of the native officers, to whom it is important to convey the fact that his Lordship is the Friend of the Army. The concluding part of the translation, in which Lord Ellenborough's determination to throw off all parade, and live like a country gentleman at Barrackpore, is peculiarly happy, and almost superior to the original. Though we have given the whole speech elsewhere, we cannot refrain from quoting again this well turned peroration. "Our ub hum yihan ek sirah kooch aram lenge, Inshallah! myn dowlut bur turuf kurta hoon; myn sultanut kinare ke rukhta hoon; girist ke tor pur myn ata hoon; girist ke tor pur toom se milta hoon: Mem Sahib log kee sulamut,—bus!"

— The last Delhi Gazette seems to hold out some hope of an accommodation between the Rajah of the Punjab and his refractory minister. The son of the minister, a young man of excellent abilities, has been sent to persuade his father to return to Court. This he may probably effect, and the storm may blow over for the present, but only to burst with greater fury at no distant period. The relative position and strength of the parties, now that mistrust has been manifested, forbid the hope of any permanent reconciliation.

— Mr. Cochrane, formerly of the Calcutta bar, who proceeded to Bombay two or three years ago, and met with much success, has now returned from England, to which he had gone, and has determined to give Bombay the benefit of his talents, which, considering the overflowing state of the bar in Calcutta is a wise determination.

— The King of Delhi has given Mr. George Thompson a document in Persian, handsomely engrossed and framed, in which he is styled "the wise, the high in rank, the well wisher of either side, the deputed of the Shah of Hindoostan."

— At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Fergusson, Brothers and Co. held in pursuance of the orders of the Insolvent Court, it was resolved to recommend Mr. R. C. Jenkins to act as assignee in conjunction with Mr. O'Dowda. It was also resolved to give the Assignees a remuneration of five per cent. which, as the estate is valued at Fifty lakhs of Rupees, will be a handsome purse of two lakhs and a half of Rupees.

— The Delhi Gazette states, that Alee Mahomed as well as Shere Mahomed, has succeeded in crossing the Indus, and reaching the Soleman mountains. Scinde is therefore quiet while the river overflows it. Should the Ameers succeed in raising the Hill tribes, there may be some more honours for our troops in the next winter, but the Belochees will do little in the plains against disciplined troops.

— Lord Ellenborough has presented Capt. Scott, who was Commodore of the fleet which brought his Lordship down, with a silver tankard as a token of approbation of the particular zeal and attention manifested by him. Lord William Bentinck presented a similar token of his approbation to Mr. Tudor, who first introduced the blessing of Ice into the country.

— The Hurkaru states, that Mr. Long has been admitted as an authorized pleader in the Sudder Court. But the Editor does not say in what language he is to plead; if in English, then the rule of the Court regarding the use of Oordoo is suspended. But in whatever language he may plead, the admission of European barristers into the Native Courts will be the beginning of a new and happy era. In England the improvement of our Courts has been far more owing to the bar than to the bench.

SATURDAY, JULY 29.

— The Bombay Times states, that the schism in the Scottish Church has extended to that town, and that it has been resolved to set up a free Presbyterian Church, and bring out a free minister.

— The Police of Calcutta has taken the field in earnest against the unlicensed Punch Houses in Calcutta; and three men have been brought up on the charge of keeping them, and have been fined on their conviction, the first in the sum of 50, and the two others in the sum of 40 Rs. each.

— The Board of Revenue for the Western Provinces, it is said, has applied to the Commissariat for 600 cases for packing up their records, preparatory to their moving up to Agra. There can be no longer any doubt that the Sudder Court and the Sudder Board will be removed from Allahabad to Agra in the ensuing cold weather.

— The Gentleman's Gazette mentions a series of operations recently conducted in Lower Scinde, under the judicious arrangements of Mr. J. G. Lumsden, Political Agent in Cutch, and Col. Stalker, commanding the troops in that province. The first attack was made on the Fort of Deepla, across the Runn which was taken possession of and blown up. Meetee was occupied on the same day. It contained eighteen large guns, nine of them brass. The force then advanced to Wanga, which was occupied on the 10th. Nawakote, one of the strongest forts in Scinde, was taken on the 13th, the enemy dispersing as our troops advanced. It contains good barracks, has two wells and ten guns, four of them being brass. The fort is 330 feet square. In consequence of these successes, it appears that the mail communication between Hydrabad and Cutch, had been completely re-established. All these operations have taken place in Shere Mahomed's territories, he himself being a fugitive in the mountains of Belochistan.

MONDAY, JULY 31.

— The Delhi Gazette states, that the Lieut. Governor of the North West Provinces has replied to the King of Delhi's application regarding Mr. George Thompson, that he might have free access to the Palace, and that His Majesty was at liberty to appoint him his Agent and depute him to England; but that he was not to confer a Khillut upon him;—that is, he is not at liberty to perform an act of sovereignty.

— We have much pleasure in stating, that the statement published in the Hurkaru last week, regarding the detention of the dead body of a debtor by the bailiffs, till it was released by the payment of his debts, is discovered to be without foundation. Four bailiffs of the Court of Requests have addressed a letter to the Commissioner, denying the fact of their having ever executed a writ on the corpse of any individual, or recovered any money from the friends of the defunct before the remains were allowed to be removed for interment. The Editor of the Hurkaru also acknowledges that he had been misinformed on the subject. From the zeal with which the matter has been taken up by the Commissioner, there is every reason to hope that so disgraceful a proceeding will not be permitted.

— The Madras Athenæum states, that Sir Hugh Gough was to leave Bangalore for Madras on his route to Calcutta, to assume the command of the army on the 15th of July. His Excellency cannot therefore be here much before this day week. We perceive that General Smith, the Adjutant General of the Queen's Troops, has already passed through Delhi, on his way to join Head Quarters in Calcutta.

— A Commission has been sitting for some days in Calcutta, to enquire into the sanity of Baboo Doorgachurn Sein, before Messrs. Prinsep and Leith as Commissioners. The Jury found him not of unsound mind, but of weak intellect and recommended him and his property to the protection of the Court. At the close of the inquest, Mr. Seppings, the foreman of the Jury, stated that he and his brother jurors had determined to devote one half their fees to the Seaman's Hospital, the other half to the Free School.

— The Star states, that the H. C. Steamer Queen is ordered to proceed on an early day next month to Bombay, with treasure. Lord Ellenborough does not proceed in her, as some of the papers intimated.

— Sir Robert Harry Inglis will be happy to learn, that Lord Ellenborough visited the Catholic Nunnery in Calcutta, on Friday last, the 28th instant, where he was received by the Most Reverend the Vicar Apostolic, and conducted to a throne surmounted with a Royal crown, which had been prepared for his Lordship. A suitable address was presented to the Governor General, who accepted it with great pleasure, and assured the Vicar Apostolic that it would always afford him great gratification to co-operate in every way in his power to the welfare of the Establishment.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 1.

— A writer in the Hurkaru, under the name of Standfast, has come forward in defence of the Political officers employed in Affghanistan, and he has executed his task admirably. But there is one fact to which he alludes altogether new to the public. He says, that while Jellalabad was besieged, a Council of War was held to discuss the propriety of a retreat, and that it was chiefly through Major Macgregor's arguments that the plan was abandoned. Of course every thing that occurred in that garrison is now the property of History. Is it a fact then that a Council of war was held to sanction a retreat? If so, where are its records? Have they been abstracted, or are they in the public archives? Who supported this plan of a retreat? Who opposed it? It is to the man, or to the men who successfully opposed it, that the salvation of that force is to be attributed.

— We yesterday denied on the authority of four of the bailiffs, that a dead body had been seized by the bailiffs for debt; but we seem never to know when we have got the truth. A gentleman in the Hurkaru comes forward this day and positively asserts that the body of Mr. Higginson was detained for a debt of 25 Rupees by the Bailiff, who said it should be detained till it stunk. This bailiff is on sick leave; but he is to be confronted with his accuser on Friday next. The Commissioner, Mr. Brietzcke, has determined that there shall be the strictest investigation of the subject, and of course the severest punishment of the guilty, if the crime is brought home to him.

— The plot thickens at Gwalior. On the night of the 16th July, all the men under Col. Jacob's command, and those under his son, went over to the Usurper. All the Christian officers of the Brigade are placed under arrest and are to be dismissed! Col. Jacob, and Col. Baptist, who was previously dismissed, are said to be enormously rich, and will have little cause to regret their separation from the Gwalior army. They say that three hundred guns are undergoing repair, that the utmost activity is apparent in the arsenal; and the conjecture of course is that these exertions have reference to objects the British Government will not approve of.

— A letter addressed to the Athenæum at Madras, on the subject of the new chartered Bank, gives us the singular fact that of a capital of thirty lakhs of Rupees, not more than three lakhs and a half are held by the Merchants of the town, and that seventeen lakhs are held by the public servants of Government.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

VISIT OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE LORD ELLENBOROUGH TO LORETTO HOUSE AND ST. THOMAS' CHURCH.

On Friday the 28th Instant, the Right Honourable the Governor General honoured with a visit the Loretto Convent. On his arrival at the establishment, his Lordship was received by the Most Revd. the Archbishop, Vicar Apostolic, and conducted to the spacious and splendid drawing-room, where the Religious Ladies and their Pupils were assembled. At the southern extremity of the room, a throne surmounted, with a Royal Crown had been tastefully prepared. Whilst his Lordship was proceeding to take his place upon the Throne, the National Anthem, God Save the Queen, was exquisitely performed on the Piano by one of the Nuns, and the music accompanied with a very happy effect by the voices of four of the young Ladies of the Institution. At the close of the performance, the Lady Superior arose and after paying her respects to his Lordship read the following address.

MY LORD,—We the sisters and pupils of the Loretto Institution beg leave to tender to your Lordship the tribute of our profound respect—we gladly profit of this occasion—to convey to your Lordship our grateful acknowledgements, for the distinguished honour you have conferred upon us by condescending to visit our Seminary. We humbly hope that the course of instruction and the arrangements adopted in it will be found to deserve your Lordship's high approbation, with the earnest prayer, that your Lordship's administration may augment the glory of the British Empire and the lustre of your own fame. We beg with profound respect to remain your Lordship's most obedient servants.

Signed on the part and of the Pupils,

DELPHINA HART, Superioress.

Loretto House, July 28, 1843.

To this address His Lordship graciously replied:—I accept with pleasure the address presented by the Sisters and pupils of the Loretto Institution.

It will always afford me great gratification to co-operate in every way in my power to the welfare of this establishment.

The Lady Superior next submitted to his Lordship's inspection some specimens of fancy needle work and drawings executed by the pupils and begged his kind acceptance of a beautiful drawing of shells and feathers prepared by a member of the community. From the drawing room the noble visitor proceeded to visit the childrens' dormitory, the schools, and the range of baths lately erected. With each of these apartments, his Lordship expressed himself highly pleased. Of the dormitory, in particular, he more than once remarked, that he had not seen, in Calcutta, a room so admirably adapted for the purpose for which it was employed. The orderly arrangements of the dressing room annexed to the dormitory drew forth also his marked approbation. Such excellent arrangements, his Lordship remarked, were exceedingly well calculated to accustom the pupils, betimes, to habits of regularity and order. From the convent Lord Ellenborough passed under the newly built semicircular verandah to the Church, every part of which his Lordship examined with much attention. After a few minutes delay, during which the 19th Psalm, for the preservation and happiness of the Sovereign was opened and performed on the Organ by the Sisters, assisted by some of the children, the Right Honourable the Governor General retired, evidently much gratified by his visit to the Loretto Seminary. We know that it will be in accordance with the wishes of the Loretto community, to profit of this opportunity, to add, that they feel deeply grateful for the distinguished courtesy, condescension and affability which Lord Ellenborough displayed on this occasion, as well as for the kind interest which his Lordship evinced for the success of their Institution.—Calcutta Star, July 31.

THE BENGAL SALT COMPANY.

We promised in a recent paper to continue our notice of the Calcutta Joint Stock Societies whereof we have already considered one, the Assam Tea Company. The next most obvious of these associations is the Bengal Salt Company, a concern in which much capital has been invested, the returns upon which have been as empirical as the curative doses of a homœopathic doctor. We have taken some trouble to enquire into the history of this Company, which appears to have been somewhat as follows.

Mr. George Prinsep, a brother of the late Member of Council, was, as is well known, a member of the firm of Palmer and Co. on the failure of which he had to recommence in business. He was an ingenious enthusiastic man, with much of the perceptive acuteness remarkable in the members of his family, but of a temperament unfortunately sanguine in engaging upon speculations in which the theory of success was vivid, the weight of experience nil. Now it is easy to say in general justification of the proceedings of a speculative man, that, 'without daring nothing is done,' or that, 'speculation is the soul of experiment' or so on ; but in all this, one essential thing is requisite, and that is judgment. A cool judicious calculator can afford to experimentalise, for before he makes his essay he has not only considered the consequences of his own attempt, but has critically examined the trials made by other men ; he has estimated at their proper valuation the casual influences, which in the one case have originated success, and in the other been rife with the germ of ruin : he has not looked alone to the supposed merit of his peculiar scheme, but, considering as well the existing local method of arriving at the end which he in his way proposes to accomplish, he has bethought him of the reasons which may have deterred men from preferring to an apparently rapid and economical system (as perhaps his own, which presents the show of obvious advantage), some rude plain primeval mode of arriving at the same result. A man of such a temperament will not say, 'I have devised what man here never devised before,' but, 'why was never such advice as my own put previously into operation?' To such a person we would concede the title of speculator, as his just due. This is the schemer upon solid grounds, the man who sees a reason on every side of him for the thing he does, and can cite it when called upon to do so. The other description of undertaker of new projects merits no better name than that he takes from the abstract title of the thing he occupies himself about : he is a pure projector. The difference between the two men exists in the relative power of such to judge, not of actual only but of antecedent facts ; the one goes not by personal and—being judged of personally, or by the test of a man's own mind applied to his own experiment uncertain trial,—but by the bearing of other systems opposed to his own : the other is biassed by his own system, or his own fancy only. It is Galileo with his new world-theory showing up the established errors of the astronomic bigots of old, or the superficial adventurer who, like worthy Sir Humphrey Gilbert, would carry off shiploads of the micaceous sands of Virginia for gold, "because it glistered."

Unfortunately the Salt Company was misled by such a projector as we have above sketched. With him the rude native process was not the result of experience, but the effect of ignorance. The Bengalees made Salt as they did, not because it was the best and cheapest way the country and the climate admitted of, but because they knew no better ; and therefore he proposed by extensive works, and complicated machinery to bring about results, as respects produce, ten times as great as ever had been effected by simple means and manual labour. The salt manufacture in Bengal is, we believe, according to the native process a mere boiling of the brine in small earthen pots over separate fires. Mr. George Prinsep projected the same manufacture on a grander scale : he devised terraces of masonry for evaporating the watery particles, and inspissating the brine : iron pans of large size for boiling it, and an economy of fuel by application of one fire to a large surface. His plans, his experiments, and his general system were set forth in taking language, and the result was that a body of men was readily found to invest money as a company in carrying out the scheme he laid before them. Before however the Company could commence operation, the projector was no more, and his brother, Mr. William Prinsep, took up the undertaking, which was, we believe, largely supported by the encouragement of the Government : under this gentleman's management as Secretary, the company fixed upon an eligible spot in the pestilential Soonderbuns, and there laid down brick terraces, and raised up brick chimneys, had plans for furnaces, and pans for boiling, reservoirs and salt stores, and a contract with Government itself. They erected, we understand, a complicated concern for the inspissation of brine, with a steam engine to pump up water, and in fact every possible device was brought into play by which money could be experimentally expended. It was all experiment in fact, and no margin was left for the possibility of failure. There was no reserve fund, there was no statement of risk, there was nothing but implicit confidence on the part of the executive Officer of the Company, and total ignorance on the part of its members. The funds have melted away, the machinery has never worked, the terraces are too low, the chimneys are too high, the location of the works breathes the essence of malaria ; some of the shareholders have paid up nearly in full, others have, we are told, paid next to nothing at all, the produce has been very short, the bills exceedingly long, and the great Bengal Salt Company is a very great bubble.

This has been the result of projection. The originator of the scheme was a man of warm imagination : his supporters were persons who had pleasant visions of fifteen per cent. dividends : as respects the subject matter of the undertaking, they were aware of only two great facts, viz. that salt is salt, and that brine is brine ; whence they deduced the conclusion, that as the latter may be produced from the former, and profit made thereon, so money might be invested in the process. What the rationale of that process was they took on credit, and the result of their confidence has been any thing but the advancement of the credit of the Company. We are exceedingly sorry for it. This same salt manufacture is one of the untried sources of wealth with which India abounds. Those who have stood over a Lancashire salt pan, and have seen the simple and economical mode in which the article is therein produced, may well smile at the abortive attempts of man, who in this country attempts to supersede a still simpler and cheaper process by Steam engines, and square acres of brick terracing. In India manual labour is to be had for next to nothing against it what is the cost, not of making only, but of maintaining and of working a steam engine ? The calculation depends less upon the cost of the engineer's labour than upon the risks on his life. You may buy the man's services for two hundred rupees a month, but the wealth of worlds will not secure them to you. Your Birmingham John Brown dies of your Soonderbun fever, pay him what you will, and your works are stopped ; whereas your Soonderbun fever-proof native salt-boiler lives, and lasts. He with his earthen pot makes a hundred weight of salt ; you with your stagnant reservoir, and powerless engine and the season without an ounce of it. Who would fix a Steam Engine in the Pontine Marshes, and hang the venture of his fortunes on the life of the engineer ? If no one, as certainly no one would, attempt so wild a risk, why should you do in India, what in Italy you would scout as next to madness, and send John Brown aforesaid as your only stand-by into the Soonderbuns to work an engine on which your only hope of produce can depend.

The question of the Salt Company's existence as Company is we fancy pretty nearly settled. We only trust that if the speculation be continued, those may take it up who will do so upon practical grounds, and lead it to another conclusion.—Cal. Star, July 25.

We have received a letter signed B. H. S. but as we see that the same letter has been simultaneously sent to the Hurkaru, in which paper it has appeared, we are constrained to decline inserting it.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

WILD RASPBERRIES AT DARJELING.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—Were you ever at Darjeling ? No ? then have you missed one of the "luxuries of the East." The ground raspberry that ripens in July and August covers a mountain, and furnishes fruit enough for a legion. It is beautiful, to see beds of the creeping plant profusely enamelled with scarlet fruit, so bountifully provided by the hand of nature. It is acid, but strongly resembles in flavor the cultivated raspberry. The Doctors speak highly of its salutary qualities, and prescribe it as follows ; walk to the ground—say 2 miles off, and gather a pint of the fruit—more or less, to this, add half a pound of sugar and a pint of milk or water. To be taken daily. The effect is said to be as wonderful as the remedy is agreeable !

Upon my word, Mr. Editor, this is a charming spot, and the guide-books say truly that it is almost impossible to speak too highly of its climate. An individual of simple habits may live as comfortably and cheaply here, as in the plains. A couple of bachelors may occupy a house and live at the rate of 60, 80 or 100 rupees each, all expenses included. The monthly charge at the Hotel, for room, table, and attendance, for a single person is only 100 Rs. The official residents are kind and hospitable ; and the Society in general is unaffected and harmonious.

Pray, Mr. Editor, if your health ever unfortunately require renovation, proceed to Darjeling, for as many months as you can spare.

VALETUDINARIAN.

P. S. Such is the kindly influence of the climate, that more than one gentleman, it is said, contemplate speedy matrimony. Why do not the 15 maidens, that, my correspondent writes, repine at Simlah, try this genial air ? Bachelors are obliged to fall in love with the grand and beautiful scenery, for want of their more sympathetic charms.

CHURCH MAINTENANCE BILL.—It is a matter of great surprise that the Liberal press should have taken no notice of a bill now stealthily passing through the House of Lords, which, under the simple denomination of "Church Maintenance Bill," is nothing less than a repeal of the Mortmain Act, one of the wisest and best in our statute-book. By the proposed bill, individuals are not only permitted, but encouraged, to leave all their property, whether real or personal, to the Church—a permission which, it will not require any great penetration to see, must open the door to abuses of every description. The bed sides of the dying will again be surrounded by intriguing and designing ecclesiastics; and many a rightful heir will be defrauded of his rightful inheritance by delusions practised upon the old, the feeble, and the superstitious.—Correspondent of the Chronicle.

The Puseyite Tract on Matrimony.—A correspondence has taken place between the Rev. Dr. Hook and Hamer Stansfeld, Esq., on the subject of the celebrated Puseyite Tract on Matrimony. Dr. Hook denies that it is a Leeds tract, and no evidence is yet found to prove that it was a Leeds tract, though circumstances of suspicion exist. It is right to state that the Rev. Richard Ward, of Skipton, the supposed author of the Tract on Matrimony, has in the most explicit manner denied that he is the author, or that he knows anything of the authorship. The tract, it appears, was published in the Edinburgh Witness as "A Leeds Tract;" but this arose from the editor of that paper having received it in a cover bearing the Leeds post-mark; and, on further enquiry, it appears that that particular copy was printed at Boston, in Lincolnshire. That many of the Puseyites, however, hold the offensive doctrine broached in the tract, there can be no doubt: it will be found expressed in the songs published by the Rev. Mr. Neale, of Cambridge, from which we have made selections in another column. Dr. Hook's zeal, therefore, to repudiate the doctrine will hardly be palatable to his brethren either of Cambridge or of Oxford. We have some reason to think that the disclaimer has come out in consequence of the doctrines of this tract being alluded to in a petition to the House of Commons against the Factory Education Bill.—Leeds Mercury.

The Bishop of Norwich's Sermon at St. Paul's.—(From a Correspondent.)—On Friday last, there was preached, at St. Paul's Cathedral, the annual sermon on behalf of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts; and it was attended by the Archbishops of Canterbury and Armagh, the Bishops of London, Durham, Winchester, &c., by a number of the inferior clergy, by the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, &c., and by a congregation that filled the choir. It had been announced that the psalms and anthems would be chanted by a double choir: and beautiful as were these specimens of Cathedral music, and admirably as they were given by the professional singers, never was the non-adaptation of such a mode to devotional purposes more strikingly exemplified, than in the listlessness which pervaded the congregation during these performances, not omitting the dignitaries and clergy themselves. The Bishop of Norwich took his text from 1 Cor. vi. 5. He considered the anniversary of this ancient and venerable Society a suitable occasion for setting forth the reasonableness and advantage of a Church Establishment in connexion with the State, as giving to the Church a more stable and permanent character, than could be found among the sixty sects with numerous subdivisions into which other professed Christians were split. The Church Establishment was founded on the general consent of the wise and enlightened in the nation, and with the large majority of whom as hitherto, so now, and as he was fully persuaded in all time coming, he said, "Esto perpetua." However much he admired the zeal, learning, and piety of a large party in the Church, he could not concur in their pretensions to almost divine and miraculous powers, and he disapproved of the "innovations" which had been introduced. Their claims to Apostolical Succession were rested on the transmission of priestly authority in a direct line from apostolic and primitive times. The links of the chain it was very difficult to ascertain; they were attenuated to a thread in many cases; and some of the individuals represented by them had been reprobates and monsters. He thought that the claims of the Church to an apostolic character rested on the purity and scriptural character of its doctrines. The views he condemned were too intimately associated with the Church of Rome, erroneous as that system was: though he would admit, that in different ages, many individuals of sincere piety had been connected with it, and, for a long period, it alone had been the means of communicating Christianity to various parts of the world. He admitted the abuses and slumbers which had crept over the Church of England in the 18th century; but, now that those abuses had been removed, he thought that the claims of the Church to universal support were stronger than ever. He concluded his discourse by an animated appeal in behalf of the Society. We have not heard that his lordship has been requested to print his sermon. It seemed very little satisfactory to the majority of his clerical hearers, if we may judge by the commotion that prevailed among them at the conclusion of the service. One of them expressed his opinion, loud enough to be heard, that the sermon "was a tissue of ignorance and presumption."—Pat.

The New Secretary of the Propagation Society.—Referring to the intimation we recently gave of the resignation by the Rev. Mr. Campbell of the office of Secretary of the Society for Propagating the Gospel, and the necessity of watching against the appointment in his room of the Rev. Ernest Hawkins, the Sub-Secretary, a reputed Tractarian, we now present to our readers the following notice, extracted from the Standard:—

"At a Special Meeting of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel on Friday, the 28th of April last, the Rev. Ernest Hawkins was, on the recommendation of his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury, President, unanimously elected Secretary in the room of the Rev. A. M. Campbell, resigned."

We advise our readers at large to ponder this fact. We do not believe that the venerable and aged Primate of the Church is a Tractarian. On the contrary, our belief is the reverse. But there are those about his Grace, and who greatly influence his mind, who are so, in fact, if not in name, and the result we see in the nomination of the Rev. Ernest Hawkins to the Secretaryship of the Society.

The fact is a very important one. It tends to show with whom the leading power and influence in the Society rests. It throws light on its probable future course. And will, we doubt not, speak with a strong effect throughout the Church.—Record.

British Society for Propagating the Gospel among the Jews.—The first Meeting for the formation of this Society was held on Monday evening in the Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street. There were upwards of 700 persons present, amongst whom were Mr. John Dean Paul, the Chairman; the Rev. Dr. Burden, Rev. Messrs. Redpath, J. Blackburne, Scott, Archer, J. Hamilton, &c., who severally addressed the Meeting. The Rev. Drs. Henderson, Cox, and Patterson, the Rev. Messrs. Bunting, Miller, Burns, &c., were also on the platform. It appeared that on the 7th of November, 1842, a number of ministers and others formed themselves into an Association for the purpose of establishing this Society. A Committee of that Association drew up a report, which was submitted to the present Meeting, and unanimously adopted. It stated that the Association had placed itself on a footing of friendly alliance with the Church of Scotland's Jewish Committee, who had confirmed the covenant by a vote of 500*l* in aid of the funds of the Society. (Loud cheers.) It likewise stated that it had long been a subject of regret with many ministers and members of churches in this metropolis and in the country, that no Society existed in which the friends of Israel, belonging to all Evangelical communions, might find an outlet for their liberality and a rallyingpoint for their labours and prayers on behalf of the Jews. It, therefore, called upon the Meeting to sanction the formation of the Society, and to authorize it to proceed in its labours by the employment of suitable agents, and by opening a correspondence for the purpose of ascertaining the state of the Jews. Resolutions adopting the suggestions of the Report and sympathizing with "the dispersed of Israel" having been agreed to, the Meeting separated.—Ibid.

The Church Missionary Society.—The Meeting of the Church Missionary Society, on Tuesday, was very gratifying and full of promise. It was, if possible, more than usually full. The speaking in general was as much characterized by sound sense as by deep feeling. An impression seemed to pervade the speakers and the audience that there was a coming storm, and the disposition to meet it with becoming firmness was throughout apparent

The manner in which the allusion to "the plain grammatical sense of our Articles, Homilies, and Liturgy" was received, was striking, and could not but afford satisfaction to all present.

The speech of the President was sensible and judicious, expressing strong sentiments in very gentlemanly language. The Bishop of Winchester was decided, and his description of what the missionaries of the Society should be—perfect.

Archdeacon Shirly said neither more nor less than the occasion called for: his speech was not long, but every word told, and met a heartly response as well from the platform as from the Meeting.

The remaining speakers we need not characterise. We must not, however, omit to congratulate the Society on the accession of Lord Sandon; his name and character at such a juncture are truly important. His Lordship spoke well; but, as might be supposed, rather like an individual accustomed to the House of Commons than to the platform of Exeter Hall. It is now two years since the Bishop of Salisbury, addressing the Noble President, expressed his wish that he should never again see his Lordship in the chair; adding, that in future he hoped the place might be filled by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Whatever may be thought of this proposition generally, it is impossible not to have wished his Grace's presence at the Meeting of Tuesday. That vast-assembly spoke a language not to be misunderstood; and showed a feeling of unanimity, as well as of decision, which it would be idle to misinterpret.

We trust that good, unmixed good, will result, and that the storm which so evidently lowers over the horizon will pass away like a summer cloud. Deep indeed will be the Christian responsibility incurred, on one side, at least, if anything occur to give this Society even nominally anything less of a Church character than it has at present, embosomed as it is in the best feelings of so many of the wise and good amongst our clergy, and of so large and powerful a body of the active, intelligent, and Christian population of our land.—Record.

Dr. Chalmers and the Reporters.—Dr. Chalmers has been blaming the Reporters for mis-reporting his Speech at the Meeting of the "Free Presbyterian Church." We are glad to hear it; because it indicates that he feels to have committed himself. He does not say, indeed, what has been reported as said by him which he did not utter; and the offence of his speech, a Scottish Contemporary remarks, was not confined to a sentence or an objectionable expression, but lay in the tone which pervaded more than one-half of it. The Caledonian Mercury, no prejudiced judge in such a case, says, incredulously, of the Doctor's complaint against the Reporters,—"Alas! the unfortunate Reporters have to answer for many sins, while pursuing their arduous, intellectual, and too often thankless vocation." We readily believe, that the language ascribed to Dr. Chalmers, would give as much pain to many of his seceding brethren as to those of other communions, whose fraternal sympathy he appeared so haughtily to repudiate. The speeches of Dr Buchanan and Dr. Gordon were in a very different spirit. They indicate no looking back in hopes of recall—no regret for the flesh-pots of Egypt. The separation is referred to as final. "They had not separated," said Dr. Buchanan, "from the Word of God; nor from the Confession of Faith; nor from the Standards of the Church. God's Word was before the Moderator; the Standards were upon their table; and, along with those, the ancient laws of their Church, which constituted their rule and guidance. All that they were separated from, was the power of the world, because they could not sacrifice their principles. I thank God," said Dr. Gordon, "I breathe in a better atmosphere than I have done for years back." (Loud cheers.) "I feel now that I am a freeman." Still more strongly opposed to the spirit of Dr. Chalmer's trade against Voluntaries, is the language of Dr. Candlish, (the rising man of the movement,) in reference to a contemplated meeting of churches holding the Westminster Confession. "We do not," he said, "wish it to be understood that it is only a plan of co-operation with Churches holding the Westminster Standards, else it would exclude, of course, some of our best friends. It would exclude some of our friends who have stood nobly by us, and who have done us good service; such a body are the Wesleyan Methodists. (Cheers.) Neither do I altogether despair of some method of communion and co operation with bodies not holding the Westminster Standards, being yet somehow or other connected with the commemoration, on the ground which I have already explained; that some Churches which do not agree with the Standards ultimately adopted by the Westminster Assembly, still regard the sitting of that Assembly as a boon to the Christian world. (Hear, hear.")

We hail these demonstrations of decision and catholicity as the best refutation of the injurious surmises which have been afloat, as to the ultimate intention of Dr Chalmers and his friends.—Pat.

Opening of the First of the Free Presbyterian Churches.—On Sunday the first of the new buildings of the Free Presbyterian Church, which has been completed within the last six weeks on the Lothian-road, was opened for public worship by the Rev. Dr. Candlish, for the use of whose congregation it has been erected. The structure, though plain in the extreme in its outward appearance, has really a neat and substantial look in the interior. The roof is supported by nine massive pillars, over which there are strong arches binding the sides of the building, painted imitation oak, while the walls are covered with a very neat pattern of paper to match. The pulpit is in the centre of the north side, and is also finished in the same style. The fabric, which is lighted by 23 windows, glazed in small diamond lozenges, will accommodate a congregation of about 1,300. In the centre the seats are on a level, while in the front and each side they rise gradually to the back, thus rendering the view and sound complete in all parts of the house. The Rev. Dr. Macfarlan, of Greenock, preached in the afternoon from Matthew xvi. 24. Although there was no public announcement that the opening was to take place yesterday, the church was completely filled on both occasions. The forenoon sederunt of the Free Presbyterian Assembly is to be held to-day in this place.—Caledonian Mercury.

ABSTRACT OF THE REPORT OF THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY FOR 1843.—The Report stated, that a larger distribution of the Sacred Scriptures had taken place during the past than in any former year, and that it amounted to nearly 1,000,000 copies (hear), bringing up the grand total circulated since the formation of the Society, to 15,023,000. The report of M. de Pressense, the Society's agent in France, presented the same features as on former occasions—the same obstacles, the same successes, the same resistance of man, and the same blessing of God. There were about fifteen communes in which a remarkable religious movement had taken place, in the midst of Roman Catholic population, a portion of whom had decidedly renounced the superstitions of Popery for the pure creed of the Gospel of salvation. This had been chiefly effected through the agency of the colporteurs employed by the Society. By the depot of the Society in Paris, 142,129 copies of the Holy Scriptures had been distributed, between the 1st of April, 1842, and the 1st of April, 1843, of which no fewer than 135,831 were circulated in France. This part of the Report also mentioned a mass of facts proving the great benefit of circulating the Scriptures among all classes of persons in that country, and the success which had attended the labours of the Society's colporteurs and agents. A grant of 500*l.* had been given to the French and Foreign Bible Society, and a Bible Society had been established in Calais. A grant of Bibles had likewise been given to the labourers on the Paris and Rouen railroad. From the Frankfort depot Dr. Pinkerton reported a distribution of 68,525 copies. Copies to the amount of 57,118 had been printed, and there were 33,000 of various editions in the press. From Berlin, Dr. Pinkerton wrote that the issues of the past year had amounted to 14,000, of which only about 700 were Testaments. At Hamburgh, 500 copies had been distributed to the sufferers by the late conflagration in that city. (Hear.) To the Hanover Society a fresh grant of 2,000 Testaments had been made; and to the Stade Society, of 600 Testaments. In Hungary, 57,247 copies had been distributed since 1837, and 17,086 during the past year. In Belgium, the Society's agent, Mr. Tiddy, reported that the numbers distributed amounted to 12,546 volumes, being 3,000 copies more than in the preceding year. There was also an increasing demand in that country for what were generally called Protestant versions. In Belgium, a deeply-interesting series of Bible Meetings had also been recently held, which had been attended by M. de Pressence of Paris, and the Rev. Dr. Malan, from Geneva. With regard to Prussia, his Majesty the King of that country had transmitted, through the hands of Chevalier Bunsen, a donation to the Society of 100*l* (hear), and had become an annual subscriber of 25*l*. (Cheers.) The issues of the Prussian Bible Society and its Auxiliaries, made a grand total of 1,092,321 copies. To Mr. Samuel Elsner, of Berlin, 6,874 copies had been forwarded, and a grant of 1,100 Testaments made, on the application of Peter Brown, Esq., of Copenhagen, for the Bishop of Odensee. At Stockholm, during the year 1842, 10,000 Bibles, and 15,000 Testaments, in Swedish and Finnish, had been received into the depot; and 19,935 had been issued from it. To the agency at St. Petersburgh there had been supplied 1,918 copies, and their entire issues for the past year had been 25,160, the circulation being carried on in the Russ, Slavonian, Esthonian, Polish, &c., languages. Forty thousand poor families in Finland had received through the hands of their clergy, and chiefly by the help of this Society, a copy of the New Testament. (Hear.) In south Russia, 12,357 copies had been issued up to April, 1842. In Spain and Portugal the Committee regretted that they had been disappointed in the hope that the door would have been opened ere this for the admission of the Scriptures. They, however, reflected with comfort that they had been permitted, in past-years, to plant many a copy of the Bible in Spain. To Madeira the Committee had been called to forward supplies of 300 Testaments. The Society regretted that the Church Missionary Society had been led to break up its Mission in Malta. From that spot, as a centre, 3,522 copies of the Scriptures had been issued in various languages, to Egypt, Abyssinia, Corfu, &c. From Greece, the Rev. H. D. Leeves reported an issue, during the year, of 8,428 copies, the great mass of them in modern Greek. To the depot at Athens had been forwarded 12,430 copies of the Scriptures in modern, and 1,500 Testaments in ancient Greek; the printing of this last work having recently been completed, under the care of the editorial department, Professor Scholefield, Greek Professor of Cambridge, having given the last reading to the work, which had been printed at Cambridge. The Committee desired very gratefully to record this proof of continued attachment to the Society on the part of that learned Professor. (Hear.) From Mitylene, 4,417 copies of the Scriptures were distributed last year to Smyrna, &c. There prevailed an increasing demand for the Turkish New Testament in Syria, Trebisond, and elsewhere. In India, the Society would be sorry to hear that the labours of their valued agent, Dr. Haeberlin, had been seriously interrupted by repeated attacks of illness during the past year. He had, however, been enabled to leave Calcutta in December last, to commence a lengthened journey on the part of the Society, the outline of which had been sanctioned by the Calcutta Committee, and proposed to visit, among other places, Krishnagur, Benares, Allahabad, Meerut, and Lucknow, in the hope of establishing depots there. Dr. Haeberlin had taken with him 60,000 volumes from Calcutta. The issues of the Calcutta Auxiliary had been, in the past year, 25,032, and the Calcutta Bible Society continued its very useful labours. In Madras, the Rev. F. Spring, the Society's former correspondent, had been removed by death. The Committee had sent to Madras 1,000*l.* and 1,000 reams of printing paper, for which the agency there had drawn on the Society. The total issues in Madras for the past year had been 23,968. To the Auxiliary Society at Jaffna, grants had been made of 390 Bibles and 200 Testaments, with 500 reams of printing paper. In that place, 50,250 portions of the Old Testament had been issued, and 20,651 volumes of various portions of both the Old and New Testament. With respect to China, the Committee rejoiced at the recent results of the last three years of hostility, and had passed a Resolution, that it be communicated to the Directors of the London Missionary Society that their missionaries were at liberty to draw upon the depots of the British and Foreign Bible Society in Canton and Malacca for such copies of the Chinese Scriptures as they might require, &c. (Cheers.) Special subscriptions had been kindly given, by several friends of the Society, for the benefit of China; and the Committee assured the supporters of this Institution that every opportunity for distributing the Scriptures in China would be eagerly embraced. The London Missionary Society had already in the field a body of missionaries; and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel was making arrangements for occupying the ground. Several remittances had been received, from Sydney, New South Wales, and from other parts of Australia, by the Society. At the request of the Church Missionary Society, 20,000 copies of the New Testament had been provided in the native language of New Zealand; of which, 10,000 had been placed at the disposal of that Society, and 5,000 at that of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, in consequence of the earnest demand for them in New Zealand. Five hundred reams of paper had been granted for printing the Old Testament in the language of Barotonga. The Sierra Leone Auxiliary had remitted the sum of 90*l.* 18s.; and the Cape Town Auxiliary, 182*l.* 5s. 5d., supplies having been forwarded to the extent of 900 Dutch and 1,000 English Bibles and Testaments. A grant had been made of 650 copies to the Rev. James Read, of Kat River. From Graham's Town, 92*l.* had been received; from Salem 60*l.* The Committee regretted that, with one or two exceptions, South America presented a very painful blank. From Rio de Janeiro, a remittance of 31*l.* 10s. had been received. In British Guiana, prospects were more cheering. 380*l.* having been received from the Auxiliary there, and supplies forwarded to it, to the extent of 1,895 copies. The Auxiliary at Honduras had sent over 86*l.* 18s. 6d., and supplies had been sent of 1,058 copies. Under the head of Mexico, Dr. Thompson's engagements in British North America were referred to. He had proceeded to New York in his way to Mexico, and had there met with much kindness. About 1,000 copies of the Torres Amats Bible had been sold in Mexico, and an edition of Scio had been published, and several copies sold. To Mexico, also, 150 Spanish Bibles; 600 ditto Testaments, and 20 French, and 30 English Bibles had been forwarded. Mr. James M'Murray, the new agent in the West Indies, had arrived on the 20th March in Jamaica, and had met with a most cordial reception. One of his first movements was to establish a depot at Kingston. Large supplies had been forwarded to Jamaica, amounting to more than 25,000 copies. The expediency of adopting a similar course at Antigua and Barbadoes was also suggested. Supplies of Bibles had been forwarded for all these places. The Barbadoes Auxiliary had transmitted two sums of 190*l.* each, and had ordered during the year nearly 700 copies. The Antigua Auxiliary had sent over 143*l.* and ordered 1,912 copies. Their issues had been 711 Bibles, and 362 Testaments. From Port of Spain, Trinidad, 14*l.* 3s. 9d. had been received, and 525 copies were forwarded there. From San Fernando, Trinidad, 30*l.* had been sent, and supplies requested. To the Baptist Missionary Society, a supply of copies had been given for Hayti. From the Bahama Auxiliary 40*l.* had been received; and from Bermuda, 100*l.* from Major Wright. The issues of the American Bible Society had been, in the past year, 25,767. At Toronto, in Canada, the Auxiliary had sent over 694*l.* 19s. 8d., and 9,545 copies had been forwarded to it. The Mohawk Auxiliary was doing well, and had issued 5,905 copies. The Montreal Society had remitted 100*l.*, and ordered 4,179 copies. The Quebec Auxiliary had issued 2,103, and ordered 522 copies. The St. John's, New Brunswick, Auxiliary had sent over 309*l.* 15s. 7d., and ordered 1,123 copies; and the Frederick's Town, 100*l.* The Prince Edward's Island Auxiliary had ordered 815 copies; and the Halifax had remitted 150*l*, and ordered 1,193 copies. The Yarmouth Ladies' Association had sent 48*l.* 16s. 2d. To the Newfoundland School Society, 800 copies had been granted. Under the head of domestic affairs, the Rev. Dr. Daly, now Bishop of Cashel, had been added to the list of Vice-Presidents. The entire receipts for the past year, had been 92,476*l.* 2s. 6d., consisting of the two items of 39,621*l.* 7s. for the general objects of the Society, and of 88,654*l*. 15*s*. 8*d*. received for Bibles and Testaments, including drawbacks, the expenditure had amounted to 86,964*l*. 10*s*. 6*d*. There had been 101 new Societies formed; making, in all, 2,870 in this kingdom. Grants of copies of the Scriptures had been made to the amount of 13,000 to the London Hibernian Society; to the Sunday School Society for Ireland, 23,750; to the Church Scriptural School Committee (Cloyne) 1,000; to the Irish Society, 2,000; the Baptist ditto, 1250; (Cheers.)—Record.

JERUSALEM.—We grieve to learn, says the Voice of Jacob, that the mail just arrived has brought intelligence that Bishop Alexander, and his colleagues of the London mission, have dared to desecrate the tombs of our pious ancestry on the Mount of Olives, by tearing up the head stones; they are even said to have placed crosses there! Not even the tomb of the holy prophet Zechariah has escaped, though all ages have hitherto spared it. They are also charged with having obtained possession of a court in the Jewish quarter, by bidding for it over the heads of its occupants, whom they have since then turned adrift. Three poor men, of indifferent characters, are said to have been tempted to desert to their protection, "stealing away secretly from the houses of their wives with all their property, leaving them destitute even of the inheritance of their fathers. They are now worse off than widows, for they have not been able to obtain even the letters of divorce prescribed by the law."—Pat.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BUDGET.—The House having resolved itself into a Committee of Ways and Means,

The Chancellor of the Exchequer rose to state the Ministerial plan of finance. He referred to the large measures introduced last year for the increase of revenue and for the diminution of import duties, observing, that though the imposition of the property-tax and the diminution of the import duties were contemporaneous, the new tax did not come into operation till after six or nine months from its enactment, while the remission of the old duties took effect at once; so that there was one period of the last year during which the accruing income was unequal to the current expenditure. To have postponed the reduction of the duties, when once such reduction had been announced, would have been injurious to trade in all articles affected by that reduction; and it had not been thought justifiable to meet the exigency by the only other alternative—the raising of a loan for the year's service. The revenue calculated upon by Sir R. Peel for the year, from the Customs, had been 22,509,000*l*.: in that he had been disappointed, the actual produce having been only 21,750,000*l*. A great part of the deficiency had been upon the wine duty, the wine trade having been extensively checked by the delays of the treaty with Portugal. There had also been a diminution on the estimated duty upon foreign spirits; but this diminution he hoped was owing chiefly to the improvement in the temperance of the people. The timber duty, on which there had been a remission, had produced somewhat less than had been expected from it; but the timber trade was now improving, and with it the produce of the duty. The case was the same with coffee. On the minor articles included in the tariff, the loss had been in a somewhat larger proportion. On the other hand, there had been an increase in the consumption of tea, sugar, tobacco, molasses, and pepper. There had been also an increase in the consumption of cotton and various other articles employed in manufactures, indicating a general improvement in our industry; and he was happy to say that the rate of that increase had been much accelerated since the beginning of the present year. On the estimated produce of the Excise, there had been a deficiency of 1,200,000*l*., of which Mr. Goulburn proceeded to explain the details. Upon the whole, the revenue had fallen short of Sir R. Peel's estimate by somewhat more than 2,000,000*l*. That defalcation was, however, diminished to about 1,250,000*l*., by a payment from China of about 725,000*l*. Against the deficiency thus constituted was to be set the produce of the income-tax, which had exceeded the expectation formed of it. It was not yet all collected; but it would probably amount to about 5,500,000*l*., of which about 5,100,000*l*. would be net revenue. He might now be asked in what way he intended to meet this deficiency. And he would at once declare that he had no new measure to propose. His calculation was that the causes which had occasioned the deficiency of last year were of a temporary character; that in the next and subsequent years there would be a surplus of revenue; and out of that surplus of revenue, he proposed to discharge the small deficiency of the year gone by. Until the repayment thus contemplated should be complete, the state of things would undoubtedly be an irksome one for the Ministers; but the more irksome it might be, the stronger would be the inducement to them to make every effort for keeping down their expenditure. He would next present his estimate for the next year. There were two heavy charges which did not form part of the ordinary expenses of the year—the one a payment of 800,000*l*. to the owners of the opium, and the other a payment of 1,250,000*l*. to the East India Company on account of expenses borne by them for the China war. He proposed to advance the money requisite for these two payments, and take repayment out of the future remittances from China. He then proceeded to state the probable revenue of the year under the usual heads of Customs, Excise, Stamps, and so forth, making a total estimated revenue of 50,150,000*l*.; in which, however, he included a sum of 870,000*l*. from the Chinese Government; and he followed this calculation with an estimate of the probable expenses of the year, under the usual heads of Army, Navy, Ordnance, and so forth, making a total estimated outlay of 49,387,645*l*.; which, being deducted from the 50,150,000*l*., would leave a surplus of 762,000*l*. in favour of revenue above expenditure. Under these circumstances, he had not been able, however much he desired it, to yield to any of the numerous applications which had been made to him for remission of taxation. He trusted that if there were any error in his computation, it would turn out that he had been too moderate rather than too sanguine in his estimates; especially as he now saw indications of improvement, on which he thought himself entitled to rely, in the augmented consumption and reviving manufactures of the country. He then stated the substance of several impartial returns respecting the state of industry in the three great towns of London, Liverpool, and Manchester, confirming this favourable view, particularly as to the cotton, linen, and woollen manufactures. Distress, indeed, was still prevailing in other branches of our industry; but an improvement in the greater branches must necessarily extend itself in no long time to the others. Thus, therefore, though he was not in a condition to make a flattering statement of the country's resources, he trusted the time was not distant when the Chancellor of the Exchequer would be able to come down with a proposal for easing the industry of the country by important remissions. He concluded by moving a vote of 47,943,000*l*.

Mr. Baring asked why the money already received from China was brought into the general resources of the year, instead of being applied to meet those claims of the opium owners of the East India Company which had been excluded from the other side of the account?

Mr. Goulburn said, he thought the first claim on the China compensation money was the repayment of the cost of the Chinese war; and he had therefore applied the first money to repay a part of the expenses actually incurred in that war.

Mr. Hume contended that the diminution in the regular revenue had arisen in a great measure from the additional taxation imposed in the shape of income-tax. He was delighted that the Government had been disappointed in their expectations from the duty which they had so unwisely imposed upon coal. A deficiency was now admitted of more than 2,000,000*l*. on the computation made by Ministers last year, and when it was considered that a large sum received from China, and not included in that computation, was brought into the year's receipts, the deficiency would be found to approach 3,000,000*l*. To balance the income and expenditure now, on the principles of Sir R. Peel, it would be necessary that the income-tax should be doubled; so far were we from having yet arrived at that equalization which Sir R. Peel's supporters had boasted that we were about to realize. He saw no reason to suppose that the receipts of the next year would, as Mr. Goulburn had calculated, exceed the receipts of the last. The only way to relieve the country was to diminish our expensive army and navy, and then we might take off the income-tax and the taxes upon raw materials. The great increase in the importation of cotton was merely the result of very low prices, and of the great efforts which, at those prices, the manufacturers were making to keep their people employed. He then went into the question of free trade. He was of opinion that Sir R. Peel, after his professions on that subject was bound to carry the principles of free-trade to their full extent, or else to resign his office. The right hon. baronet had not done better than the Whig Chancellor of the Exchequer, who, at any rate, had carried on the Government without an income-tax.

Mr. Baring reminded the House that Sir R. Peel, when he stated his computation of regular revenue last year, had professed to have made it under the mark; yet it had fallen very short even of that computation. It was true that a large income-tax must greatly diminish consumption, and, of consequence, revenue; but this was a deficiency beyond all reasonable allowance. But for the receipt from China, it would have been a deficiency of almost 3,000,000*l*. and that was more than even the produce of the income-tax had been able to compensate. The new duty on coals had been a failure. When imposed last session it had been treated as a tax upon foreigners, which if it had been it could have claimed but little approbation, just at the moment when we were trying to get over our neighbours into good humour with a view to free-trade. But it had not turned out to be a tax bearing upon foreigners, but rather upon our own trade and shipping. Equally unfortunate had been the tax on spirits in Ireland. It had failed to produce revenue, and it had frightfully increased smuggling and drunkenness, and the vices consequent upon them. This had led to an enormous increase of prosecutions under the revenue laws. With such facts he trusted Sir R. Peel would reconsider his intentions, and remove a tax which yielded only 45,000*l*. in money, but produced demoralization in such abundance. He was aware that the country could not in her present state afford to give up revenue; but there were some articles on which revenue would not be diminished by reduction duty, for instance, sugar. The Brazilian treaty having failed we were free upon that subject now, and the time will come when the Government, who had given some remission upon coffee, ought to give the people some sugar to drink with it.

Sir R. Peel admitted that he had been disappointed in his computation with respect to the probable produce of certain branches of revenue. That was a disappointment to which all similar computations must be liable, as had been proved by Mr. Baring's own estimate of the produce to arise from the per-centage imposed by him upon the assessed taxes, in which estimate he had been deceived to the amount of more than 1,600,000*l*. When he himself in proposing the income-tax had adverted to that estimate of Mr. Baring, he had done so, not with any view to inculpate him for the error, but merely for the purpose of showing that no further increase of revenue could be expected from a per-centage upon the old taxes, and that it was therefore necessary to impose a new tax, namely, on income. The income-tax did certainly charge a per-centage of 2*l*. 18*s*. 4*d*.; but he believed the cheapness of all articles of consumption had more than counterbalanced that impost. He did believe from the information produced by Mr. Goulburn, that with respect to some of the most important classes of manufacture, there was an improvement in progress, which he trusted would, ere long, extend itself to other branches of industry; and he hoped that in the present state of the country the House would not force the Government to reduce taxation. The existing deficiency on the last year would now be nearly made up if the instalments of income-tax for that year had been actually got in, so that it was not a deficiency resembling that of former years, which there was nothing to compensate. As to further reductions of our military establishments, he considered them to be impracticable, and he believed that to be the opinion of almost everybody in the House except Mr. Hume and Mr. Williams. He saw nothing in what had passed since last session which should induce him to think that any other tax would be preferable to that upon income. But for the income-tax, where should we have been now? If the defalcation in the present year had been chiefly on the assessed taxes, there might be ground for arguing that the income-tax had been a main cause of deficiency; but the chief defalcation had been in the Customs, which were the sources of revenue least liable to be affected by the income-tax. He wished, most sincerely, that it had been possible to relieve the country by some remission; but, in the present state of financial affairs, that remission was impracticable.—Pat.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this Society was held on Tuesday evening at the Music-hall, Store-street. The Right Hon. Lord Teignmouth, in the absence of the Lord Bishop of Norwich, in the chair. The Report stated that in the year 1832, the number of persons charged with drunkenness was 32,636; in 1842, it was 12,338; showing decrease of 20,298. The decrease in the number of beer-shops in England and Wales, in the year 1843, as compared with the preceding year, was 2,499, and 8,839 as compared with 1839. The total quantity of malt converted into liquor in all the distilleries of the kingdom in the year 1840 was 3,947,000 quarters; in 1841 it was 3,796,000 quarters; showing a decrease of 150,000 quarters. The consumption of spirits in 1830 was not so much by 5,600,000 of gallons as in the year 1820; and in 1840, the decrease as compared with 1830 was 2,087,000 gallons. Illicit distillation had increased in Ireland, 143 persons had been charged with that crime in the quarter ending January 1842; and 1,040 persons were similarly charged in the corresponding quarter of the present year. General Sir Robert Sale, writing from Jellalabad upon the hardships to which the soldiers under his command were subjected, added—"I will not mention as a privation the European troops having been without spirits, because I believe that to be a circumstance tending to keep them in the highest health, and in the most admirable state of discipline; crime has been almost unknown, and a murmur is never heard, though they are deprived of their usual quantity of animal food," &c. The principles of the Society were progressing in Gibraltar, Malta, Madras, Calcutta, China, Sweden, Denmark, Prussia, the Hanse Towns, Hanover, Russia, Switzerland, and elsewhere. The receipts during the past year amounted to only 473*l.* 18*s.* 6½*d.*, and the expenditure to 451*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.* The Society was involved to the amount of 212*l.* 8*s.* 3½*d.* This report having been adopted, it was resolved, upon the motion of the Rev. W. Rotherey, seconded by the Rev. Owen Clarke, that the grateful thanks of the meeting be expressed to her Majesty for the kind patronage with which she had been pleased to honour the Society. Their Majesties the King of Prussia and the King of Sweden were likewise included in the resolution. A vote of thanks was passed to the Chairman, who briefly acknowledged it, and the meeting separated.—Pat.

Post-office Order Cancelled.—The recent Post-office order, having reference to the transit of letters through the territories of East India to New Zealand, Australia, the Mauritius, and other places beyond the boundary of the possessions of the East India Company, has been cancelled, by the authority of the noble lord at the head of the Post-office department. Such letters and newspapers, therefore, need not now be addressed "To the care of Correspondents in India," but may be sent in the usual way. The order was withdrawn on Saturday last.—Ibid.

A Glorious Assembly.—"This will be a glorious Assembly!" exclaimed a sleek and well fed Moderate on Thursday last, after the disruption. "How?" said his friend. "Oh!" replied the residuary, "short sederunts and long dinners."—Ibid.

Sir C. T. Metcalfe comes among us with unusual recommendations on the score of ability and experience. From many of his acts in Jamaica we gather that he possesses a very generous spirit, and freely aids public and benevolent objects out of his very ample private fortune. Respecting his policy as Governor we can offer no decided conjecture; though we suppose he will act on the constitutional principle of responsible government, and so far follow in the foot-steps of his predecessor. With political parties as such we have nothing to do; but on questions affecting religious liberty and equality, we shall always express decided opinions, and hence we hope our new ruler will not, like unhappy Sir C. Bagot, countenance the Episcopalian monopoly of our national colleges. We are jealous for freedom of conscience and fair play in religion; and for this reason we especially honour the memory of Lord Sydenham, who was freer from religious favouritism than any Governor that ever had charge of Canada.—Montreal Register.

The Marriage Act in Canada.—By the kindness of a young friend, now student at law, we are enabled to give an abstract of the law, according to which Baptist ministers, in Lower Canada, may be authorised to solemnise marriage. We draw attention to it, in the hope that every settled minister will be induced to avail himself of its provisions, and get the power to marry any couples that may desire his services. The Act prescribes no publication of banns, nor the procuring of a license; thus leaving it with each minister to take the necessary precaution against clandestine or improper marriages. In Upper Canada, where banns must be published on three several Sundays, the legal provisions are, it seems, considerably different.—Ibid.

Effects of Monopoly in France.—Every body knows that the Duke de Cazes and some of his friends are the proprietors of the Iron-foundry at Decazeville. This establishment has at present sufficient orders to occupy it for the next two years. The iron which is delivered at Decazeville at 365f. the ton, is sold in Belgium at 160f. From which it appears that France must pay for the railroads now in progress of construction eighty millions more than if foreign iron was used. It is, therefore, easy to comprehend why MM. De Cazes, Roy, Soult, &c., will not consent to sacrifice national labour to foreign industry.—Pat.

The Marquesas.—A Toulon letter of the 6th inst. mentions the departure, on the 4th, of the Uranie, 60 gun frigate, Captain Brunt, for the Marquesas Islands, with 140 passengers, including a bishop and several other ecclesiastics as missionaries. Two days previously to the sailing of the Uranie, an elegant altar was erected on the quarter-deck. The Bishop of Amathe, assisted by a numerous body of clergy, performed an appropriate church service, administered the sacrament, and pronounced a benediction upon the ship and all on board.—Ibid.

Hayti.—The Press represents the recent revolution of St. Domingo as the triumph of the black race over the mulatto. Herard, the leader of the insurrection, and his brother, are negroes; whilst Boyer, his secretary, Inginac, and the chief of his party, are all mulattos. The negro race, according to the writer, entertain a predilection for the Europeans, especially for the French, whilst the mulattos are viewed by them with the extreme of detestation. It was, indeed, the negroes who raised the great insurrection and insured its triumph. Whilst they and Toussaint prevailed, the French colours continued to float; but when the mulattos prevailed, then commenced that system of hatred to the French name which is well known. But we must let the writer in the Press relate his story:—

"In 1806, Petion founded at Port au Prince the republic of Hayti. Dying in 1818, General Boyer became his successor. In 1820, Christophe killed himself to escape from his soldiers in mutiny, and his kingdom was united to the republic of Petion. In 1822, Boyer conquered and united to his government the Spanish portion of the island, which had sought to separate and declare itself part of the Columbian republic. The relations of France with the republic are well known, as well as the treaty of 1825, which acknowledged its independence, on condition of an indemnity being paid to the old colonists. On the accession of the present King of the French, the Haytien government, who had paid but 30 of the 150 millions stipulated, thought fit not to recognise the monarchy of July. When this recognition was demanded, the answer came in language 'wanting the politeness of civilised nations.' In such a situation there were but two ways of proceeding—one to blockade and bombard, the other to negotiate. The latter was preferred; and, contrary to the treaty of 1825, that of 1838 reduced to 60 millions the 120 millions due, and recognised purely and simply the independence of Hayti, without imposing any longer the payment of the indemnity as condition."

The Press goes on to show that immense advantage can be derived from the late revolution, which has substituted negroes, friends of France, in the government, to the jealous mulattos. There is little probability that the next instalment, due in July, will be paid. A pretext will be, that Boyer has carried off the money. France can take every advantage of so fine a country in the state of an insolvent debtor; it can force a treaty of commerce upon Hayti as England has done upon China; and it ought so to manage matters, that in half a century France should reseize the Protectorate of St. Domingo, as it has acquired that of the Society Islands.—Pat.

MILITARY.

GENERAL ORDERS BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA IN COUNCIL.

Fort William, 21*st July*, 1843.

No. 154 of 1843.—The Right Honourable the Governor General of India in Council has much gratification in publishing, for general information, the following paragraphs of a Military Letter No. 9, from the Honourable the Court of Directors, to the Governor General of India in Council, dated 30th May 1843.

Reply to paras. 1 to 6 of Secret Letter from the Governor General, dated 14th March, No. 18 of 1843, relative to the Victory gained at Meeanee.

Para. 1. We have perused with admiration the account given by Major General Sir C. Napier of the Victory gained by the Troops under his Command at Meeanee, near Hyderabad, on the 20th February last, over the Army of the Ameers of Scinde.

2. This Victory won by a body of not more than 2,800 men, over a brave enemy stated to be not less than 22,000, deserves to be ranked amongst the brilliant achievements of the British Army.

3. There being, however, reason to believe that another battle has been fought, and we trust, in that case, another Victory obtained, by the Troops under Sir Charles Napier in Scinde, we have to inform you, that it is not deemed expedient to decide at present on the specific marks of honor which no doubt will be bestowed in commemoration of the bravery displayed by our gallant Army.

4. We cannot close this despatch with expressing our marked approval of the steadiness and gallantry with which the attacks of the enemy on the Residency at Hyderabad were successfully resisted by the small body of men under the command of Captain Conway, H. M.'s 22d Regiment, acting under the instructions of the Commissioner, Major Outram, whom on this memorable occasion, General Sir Charles Napier in his despatch of the 18th February, has justly characterised as "the fearless and distinguished Major Outram."

Head Quarters, Simlah, 7th July, 1843.

At a general court-martial assembled at Subathoo, on Friday the 12th day of May 1843, private Robert Archer, No. 5, of the 9th company 1st regiment of European light infantry, was arraigned on the following charge:—

Charge.—"For having, in camp, at Tumalee, on the 17th day of March 1843, feloniously, wilfully, and of malice aforethought, killed and murdered Elizabeth Archer, his wife, by discharging at her a musket, loaded with gun powder and certain metal slugs, and thereby inflicting mortal wounds upon the face, neck and back of the said Elizabeth Archer, whereof she then and there, on the same day, died."

Finding and sentence.—"The court, having maturely deliberated on the evidence produced before them, are of opinion, that the prisoner private Robert Archer, No. 5, of the 9th company 1st regiment of European light infantry, is guilty of the charge preferred against him with the exception of the words 'mortal wounds' and 'certain metal slugs,' as only one mortal wound is proved, and there is no proof whatever of the nature of the missile with which the wounds were inflicted; and they do therefore sentence him, private Robert Archer, No. 5, of the 9th company 1st regiment of European light infantry, to be hanged by the neck till he be dead."

Revised finding.—"The court having maturely deliberated, respectfully adhere to their original finding, with the exception of the word 'missile,' for which the word 'material' is substituted."

RECOMMENDATION BY THE COURT.

The undersigned members of the general court martial, taking into consideration the high character so long borne by the prisoner, which leads them to suppose that, at the time of committing the fatal act, of which he has been found guilty, he was maddened by jealousy, caused by the provoking conduct and continued irregularities of the deceased, beg respectfully and earnestly to recommend him to mercy.

Mr. Taylor begs to recommend the Saltpetre and Sugar Manufacturers, Indigo Planters and Rum Distillers above Monghyr to give the Coal a trial, as he believes it will be found a more economical fuel than wood, the Government are now paying their contractor for supplying the Steamers with Coal 82 rupees per 100 maunds, 13 annas and 1⅓ pie per maund, and when wood is supplied as a substitute which is frequently the case, 4½ or 5 maunds of the latter fuel is given as the equivalent of 1 maund of the mineral.

No. 449. Vol. IX.] SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, AUGUST 10th. 1843. {Price 2 Co's. Rs. monthly, or 20 Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.

External Commerce of the Bengal Presidency during the last Commercial Year. We have been favored with a copy of Mr. Wilkinson's Commercial Annual for the year 1842-43, and avail ourselves of the valuable information it furnishes, to present a brief view of the present state of our external commerce.

The entire value of the Imports during the past year in the Port of Calcutta exhibits an increase over the preceding year of nearly thirty lakhs of Rupees; the imports in 1841-42, having been, in round figures, Rs. 5,42,00,000; and in 1842-43, Rs. 5,71,00,000. In the Exports there is a decrease of seventy-four lakhs of Rs., the value in 1841-42 having been Rs. 8,39,00,000 and in 1842-43, Rs. 7,65,00,000. This is accounted for by the diminished export of the single article of Indigo, of which the quantity sent abroad in the last year was seventy-five lakhs less than in the preceding period. In fact, our exports are always liable to great fluctuations, owing to the variation in the produce and price of Indigo, and the unsteady value of Opium; two articles which form nearly one half our entire exports. It is quite possible therefore that the result of one year may appear more unfavourable than of the year which preceded it, though in every other article of export, except these two staples, there may in reality be a general increase. To ascertain the strength of commercial improvement it is necessary, therefore, to take a wider field of comparison than that of any two consecutive years; and in this view of the case we shall find that there has been a steady and most gratifying increase both of imports and exports. Thus, the average of Imports in the six years ending April 1838, was Rs. 3,23,00,000; the average of the five succeeding years, ending with April last, was Rs. 5,24,00,000. In the first named period, the average of our Exports was Rs. 5,49,00,000; in the last mentioned period, Rs. 7,58,00,000. During the last five years therefore there has been an increase of two millions sterling a year, or two crores of Rupees, in the value of our Imports, and the same augmentation in the value of our Exports; which proves that the capacity of the country to consume British manufactures, as well as its productive powers, have been steadily on the increase.

Of this trade, one half is connected with England. Our imports from, and exports to, England constitute fifty per cent, more or less, of our whole external commerce. If the trade from the other Presidencies which finds its way to England, bears the same proportion to their general trade, it will appear that, as a customer, the value of India to England is second only to that of North America; and that the value of the entire trade to the East, including the Straits and China, is quite equal to that which Great Britain enjoys with the United States. Nay, when the superior permanence of this trade, subject as it is to no hostile tariffs, is considered, as well as its expansive faculties, it will not be too much to affirm that it is the best foreign commerce which England enjoys.

The import of Cotton twist and cloths into India, which followed the relaxations in the Charter of 1813, had been for some time previous to 1835, stationary. It reached a certain mark, owing, it was said, to over trading; then receded, and again advanced; but in the year 1835-36, it stood no higher than 80,00,000 Rs. The manufacturers of England value a country in proportion as it takes off the produce of their looms. Hence the value of India, that is of the Indian market, had been in their estimation for several years, fixed and not progressive; but in the eight years which we embrace in our comparison, the importance of India, at Manchester and other piece-goods and cotton-twist towns has been nearly doubled. Since the year 1835 we took off in one year not less than two millions of their cotton cloth and twist. But as this may have been owing rather to the necessities of the manufacturers than to those of the consumers, the best mode of testing the increase, is to take two periods of four years each. In the period from 1836 to 1839, the average imports were Rs. 1,08,00,000; in the next four years, from 1839 to 1842, they amounted to Rs. 1,84,00,000, exhibiting an increase of nearly Eighty per cent.

In Woollens however there is little increase of consumption. In a country where the thermometer ranges two-thirds of the year above 85°, there can be little demand for the fabrics of Leeds and Bradford. In the four years extending from 1836 to 1839, the average consumption was 10 lakhs of Rupees worth, 100,000 pounds sterling; in the four succeeding years, it rose to 130,000*l.*; in other words seventy millions of people took off as much woollen cloth as a second rate town in England. China will be the country for our woollens, as soon as the people to the North of the Yang, find out how warmly and cheaply we can clothe them.

In the article of Metals, copper, spelter, tin, lead, iron, steel, and quicksilver, there has been no very perceptible alteration in the period under review. In 1835-36 the importations amounted to 40 lakhs of Rupees; in 1842-43, they did not exceed that amount. But on dividing the period into two parts, we find that in the first four years the average imports were 37 lakhs; in the last period, 40 lakhs.

Of Books and Pamphlets the importation of 1842-43, was less than that of 1836-37; having been in the earlier year, Rs. 2,35,000; in the past year, Rs. 2,31,000; but upon a comparison of the four years ending in 1839, with the same period ending in 1843, we find that there has been an average increase of 14,000 Rs.,—not worth mentioning. In the article of Millinery however there is a very palpable difference in the transactions of these two periods. Thus, we have for the average of the first four years, 5,15,000 Rs. annually of caps and bonnets and dresses; and for the last four years not less than Rs. 11,20,000. Eleven lakhs of Rupees worth of Millinery to two lakhs and thirty thousand Rs. worth of books! Philosophers, have remarked that female influence is one of the surest tests of civilization. Judging by this criterion, we shall find that the rapid strides in civilization made in the European community in India, since the year 1838, are almost without a parallel.

The consumption of Tea has been more than doubled, in the last four years. In the year 1835-36, the imports were, Rs. 1,34,000. In the past year, Rs. 3,02,000. But comparing the two periods, on which our calculations are based, we find that in the first four years the imports were to the extent of two lakhs annually; in the last four years, they averaged four lakhs and forty thousand. It is possible that some portion of this increase may have arisen from the importation of Tea which was eventually sent to Great Britain, during the troubles in China; but since the year in which the largest importation occurred, there has been a steady and considerable increase upon the average of preceding years; and we are much disposed to attribute it to the increased consumption of this article among the more wealthy natives.—Brandy was imported to so large an extent in 1835-36, (five lakhs of Rupees worth) that it required three years to consume it. Accordingly, in the next three years the entire imports did not amount to more than three lakhs and eighty thousand Rupees. But the last four years exhibit an increase, which tells awkwardly upon our temperance habits. The average of the first four years was, Rs. 2,20,000; that of the last four years was, Rs. 5,20,000; that is to say, the average of this latter period exhibits a larger importation than the year 1835-36, in which the market was glutted. As the habit of drinking brandy is decidedly on the wane in the European community, we can attribute the increased consumption of this "liquid fire and distilled damnation," as Robert Hall designated it, only to the increase of intemperate habits among the natives. But the Import of Wines, red and white, Port, Sherry and Champaign exhibits almost the same progressive augmentation. Of the period we have chosen for comparison, the importation in the first half averaged Rs. 7,67,000; in the latter half, Rs. 12,20,000. Of this wine, we fancy that a large portion has been decantered into native stomachs.

The importation of Salt from abroad, has steadily increased during the past five years, as the following schedule will exhibit.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| In 1838-39, | we imported | 2,07,000 Mds. |
| „ | 39-40, | 4,38,000 |
| „ | 40-41, | 5,71,000 |
| „ | 41-42, | 6,14,000 |
| „ | 42-43, | 8,93,000 |

yielding Government a clear custom revenue in the last year of twenty-seven lakhs of Rupees. Whether the revenue from the manufacture of salt in Bengal has been reduced to this extent we cannot say; but if it has not, this sum will stand as a clear increase of revenue. This progressive increase of importations, shews that the objections of the natives to all salt except that manufactured in their own province has been gradually giving way. It is proper however to remark that of this entire quantity of nearly nine lakhs of maunds, not ten maunds came from England; the great bulk was imported from Bombay.

We will only detain the reader among the Imports for another moment, with the butts and hogsheads of Ale. In the consumption of this article there is little perceptible difference. In 1836-37 we imported 10,781, and in the last year, 10,164 hogsheads. In 1840-41, the importation rose to nearly 15,000 hogsheads, but that was evidently a year of speculation. Although however there has been little mutation in the quantity of beer, during the last few years there has been a complete change of brewers. There are many now living who can recollect the time when Hodgson reigned without a rival in this market. There may be some alive who can even recollect the time when he spread dismay through India by announcing that he was about to repair his brewery, and should be obliged to curtail the supplies. But Hodgson is gone, never to revive; a worn out firm, like a worn out superstition, never has a second lease of life. In the last year, Hodgson,—who was said at one time to clear 3000*l.* a year from the profit of the casks which he insisted upon supplying for his own beer, because the beer kept so much better in them,—sold five hogsheads, and his return from a country which was once all his own, was One Hundred and Seventy-five Rupees! The market is now in the hands of Bass and Allsop; but they have a formidable rival in Saunders, a brewer unknown to India eight years ago, but who in the last year supplied us with 1485 hogsheads. His is a rising mark, though the competitors for our custom have in the last eight years increased from twenty-one to forty-seven, and even Brother Jonathan, among his other notions, has indulged us with ninety-six hogsheads of true republican Ale.

In treating of the EXPORTS from this Presidency, our first duty is to shed a tear over the grave of the now defunct trade in Cotton piece goods, once the great source of wealth to India, and the envy of Europe. In no one instance has the uncertainty of all human possessions and prospects been so decidedly exhibited, as in the value of our export trade of Indian made cotton piece goods. In the years 1816-17, the value of the Cotton goods imported into India from England, the produce of our steam machinery, was Rs. 3,17,602; a little above Thirty thousand pounds sterling. In the year 1842-43, the importation of Cotton cloths and twist had advanced to nearly two crores of Rupees; two millions Sterling. But exactly in proportion as the British article has been making progress in this market, has the Indian manufacture been losing ground in the markets of Europe. It is instructive to trace its steady, unchecked, progress down the inclined plane, as the following statement of the export will exhibit:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1816-17, | Sa. Rs. | 1,65,94,380. |
| 1817-18, | „ | 1,32,72,854. |

| 1840-41, | „ | 4,64,645. |
| 1841-42, | „ | 1,76,294. |
| 1842-43, | „ | 1,69,618. |

In the Article of Raw Cotton, there has been also a steady decline, unchecked except in the last year. In the four first years of the period we have chosen, namely from 1835-36 to 1838-39, the export was, on an average, 3,64,224 maunds annually; in the last four years it does not present an average of more than 1,61,900 maunds, and unless the American gentlemen sent out by the Court of Directors, should succeed in improving the quality of the Cotton, it will probably experience the same gradual decline as our Cotton fabrics.

Of Raw Silk, the exportation has on an average increased within the last four years over the preceding period; for though the quantity exported in 1842-43 was not quite equal to that of 1836-37 (69,00,000 Rs.) yet the average of the first period was 50 lakhs of Rupees worth a year; of the second, 66 lakhs annually. In the article of Silk Piece Goods, the export has been declining for some time, owing partly to the improvement of machinery at home, partly to the dishonesty of manufacturers in India; who have endeavoured to put off their customers with an inferior article made up to the proper weight by paste, and rendered smooth and plausible by ironing. Judging from the progress hitherto made, we should be led to conclude that it will require at the least another hundred years to teach the natives of India, that 'honesty is the best policy.'

We close this protracted notice of the work by a reference to the article of which the improved export has been the most decisive and manifest during the past eight years; we allude to that of Sugar. In 1835-36 the quantity exported to England amounted in value to 16,89,958 Rs.; in the last year it had increased to Rs. 1,48,35,773, that is to nearly One million and a half sterling in value. There has been no instance of such growth in any article of commerce at any previous period. There has been no developement of the resources of India, to be compared with this sudden increase. Last year we supplied England with one-fourth the sugar she consumed; and there can be no doubt that India, would in time, be able to supply the whole of the home demand, if the prospects of the trade were not rendered so uncertain, by the vacillation of the Ministry at home in regard to this staple article.

It only remains for us to offer a brief remark or two, on the subject of Duties collected in Calcutta, which, under the operation of the new Tariff have increased, since 1831-32 from Rs. 6,42,000 to Rs. 27,80,000, without creating any inconvenience in the country. The abolition of the Transit duties has been felt throughout the country, from Delhi to Calcutta, as the greatest and most meritorious act of this Government since it obtained the sceptre of India. At the period of that abolition, which was concurrent with the establishment of higher duties, it was affirmed that Government would lose nothing by that act of generosity; that the continued maintenance of custom house stations on the North West frontier, for the collection of duties on goods coming from foreign states into our territories, and the establishment of higher duties on the import and export of articles in Calcutta, would amply compensate for any loss which the abolition might occasion. We regret that we have not the means of bringing this prediction to the test of facts. We know that in the year 1831-32, the whole amount of the transit duties, and of the sea Customs,—exclusive of the charges of establishment—was, Rs. 43,29,000. In the last year, the Collection of Sea Customs in the Port of Calcutta alone was, 27,80,000 Rupees; from this sum is to be deducted the expense of the establishment, and to it is to be added the receipts from the frontier customs of the North West Provinces. It is probable that the whole sum then sacrificed to promote the convenience and prosperity of the country may have been entirely made up; but even if that should not be the case, the actual loss cannot be much above five lakhs of Rupees, or 50,000*l.* a mere drop in the ocean of Indian revenue.

REMITTANCES TO ENGLAND.—The Governor General has notified in the last Calcutta Gazette, that it is the intention of the local Government, if the measure obtains the sanction of the Court of Directors, to discontinue advances upon the hypothecation of produce sent from India to England, as a means of remittance, and to depend entirely upon the sale of bills in London on the Indian Treasuries. This early intimation of the intentions of Government is given with the view of enabling those whose interests may be involved in the present system, to make due provision against its discontinuance. Both the object and the spirit of this notification have elicited general approbation; and the merits of Lord Ellenborough will stand high with the commercial community for this determination to abolish a system so detrimental to their interests. The interference of Government with the Calcutta market for produce, which was regulated by no rule but the exigencies of the state, tended to give an uncertainty to all mercantile calculations, and to disturb the natural current of trade; and it has long been the anxious desire of the great body of merchants, that this powerful, and, in effect though not in design, capricious customer, could be kept from interfering with these operations. Their desires are now likely to be consummated. Yet it seems very singular that Lord Ellenborough, immediately on receiving from the Court of Directors and the Board of Control the two letters published in Friday's Hurkaru, in which they distinctly refuse to bind themselves by any promise to relinquish the system of remitting money on the hypothecation of goods, should come forward and make this announcement to the mercantile community, as though he were certain of overcoming with equal ease the repugnance of the Court and the Board.

In the course of the enquiry instituted by Parliament, at the close of the last Charter, great anxiety was manifested lest the Company should find themselves unable to make the necessary territorial remittances to England, if they relinquished their commercial transactions in India. Those who were examined on this point, Mr. Holt Mackenzie, Mr. Palmer, and Mr. Bracken, maintained that no difficulty at all, would be experienced; that the entire withdrawal of the Company from the trade of India would give it fresh activity, and that the idea of an understanding among the leading merchants of Calcutta to force the Company to their own terms of exchange, was out of the question. They do not appear to have contemplated the early arrival of a period when the Company would be able to dispense even with advances on goods, and to obtain the whole sum they required to bring home, by the sale of their Bills on the Indian treasuries. But during the last ten years, the trade of India has experienced so large an augmentation, the two cities of London and Calcutta have been so closely approximated by steam communication, and the intercourse between India and England has been so vastly extended, that the remittances from this country may be provided for in a single morning in Leadenhall Street. The advantages to the Company of adopting this as the sole channel of operations, whether we regard the facility with which it may be effected, or the security which attends it, are great; but not greater than the convenience the merchant will experience when relieved from the presence of so powerful a competitor in the exchange market. The advances on produce will now be regulated on mercantile principles, and the current of operations will not be disturbed by the intrusion of the State. The remittances made from this country to England, must of course, consist of its produce; only that produce will now be sent home by private individuals instead of being transmitted direct by Government. In whatever point of view we regard this measure, it appears to be sound and satisfactory.

With the close of the system of advances, the functions of the Import Warehouse keeper, will cease, and the last link between the Merchant and the Sovereign will be dissolved. This office has latterly been paid rather with reference to the claims of the individual who held it, one of the oldest servants on the Establishment, than to the importance of his duties. The Company will now cease to give to the appraiser of Indigo and Silk, a salary equal to that enjoyed by a Secretary of State in England. The Import Warehouse keeper has for sometime been doing duty as a supernumerary Member of the Board of Customs, and his duties will now be confined we suppose exclusively to that Department.

PRIVATE AUDIENCES.—A brief notification from Capt. Durand, the Private Secretary of Lord Ellenborough, in the last Calcutta Gazette, announces that the time honoured privilege of private audiences, which the members of the service have continued to enjoy during every successive administration, has ceased. Those who have any object of individual interest to advocate with the Head of the Government, are required in future to send in their applications in writing. The old practice has probably been found an inconvenient tax on the time of the Governor General; but it is an inconvenience inseparable from the eminence of his station. Lord Ellenborough has probably also found that the invidious duty of saying No, oftener than Yes, may be performed more agreeably to his own feelings, by a letter, than in person. It falls to the lot of few men to be able to deny with such grace, that the suitor finds the suavity of the refusal almost compensate for the chagrin of his disappointment. But however convenient it may be to the Governor General, this innovation is so contrary to the gracious condescension of his predecessors, and runs so entirely counter to the wishes and feelings of society, that it will be extremely unpopular. Every man admitted to a private audience on matters connected with his own interest, always provided himself with a good stock of arguments, which he intended to array with much dexterity, and enforce with great eloquence. And though in the majority of instances he was disappointed, he still had the satisfaction of reflecting that he had enjoyed an opportunity of personally urging his claims. Under the new system, that intercourse between the members of the service and the head of the Government which was advantageous to both parties, will be destroyed. The suitor will receive a cold and formal denial through the Secretary, whose duties in this respect, will be so uniform, that much of his valuable time might be spared by having lithographed forms of refusal ready for use. We are certain the prohibition will be found generally distasteful, and create a strong hope that the next Governor General, whenever he may come, will revert to the practice of former rulers, and give a share of his personal attention to the requests and grievances of the public.

STEAM PROJECT.—Our correspondent S., the steady and untiring advocate of Steam communication direct from Calcutta, Madras and Ceylon to Suez, has sounded the note of alarm in our own and other journals, on the disclosure of a project for depriving us of this advantage, just at the time when it had been placed within our reach. He has drawn from the columns of the Monthly Times published in London, the evidence of a conspiracy against our interests, of which that paper appears to have undertaken the advocacy. The matter had escaped our notice, as it appears also to have escaped that of the Hurkaru; for the only occasion on which any Editor can be supposed to consult the Monthly Times, is when the other monthly journals do not happen to arrive in time. The character of that paper has been so completely altered since the first number appeared, that we feel ashamed whenever we reflect on the commendation bestowed on it. The Editor seems entirely to have forgotten that when we open with eagerness any of the Monthly London Journals published for circulation in India, we do not expect to find three editorial columns, filled with the most bitter and reckless party invective. But it is not merely the partizanship of this unsafe guide, which fills the mind with regret; the most momentous subjects are treated with a degree of flippancy which makes us turn for relief to any other journal that may be procurable. As the organ of the Peninsular and Oriental Navigation Company, in the operations of which our interests are bound up, however, it has an importance it would not otherwise possess. The articles which have successively appeared in it regarding the deviation of that Company from its original design, are apparently put forth to feel the public pulse. The object now proposed is to send the steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, from Galle to Bombay and from thence to Suez, during eight months of the year, and thus save the Government of India the expense of maintaining a complement of Steamers at Bombay. It is intended during four months of the year, in the height of the monsoon, to send a little steamer from Bombay to Galle with mails and passengers; and to employ the same vessel in bringing back the mails from Aden.

The objections to this plan, are numerous; first and foremost stands the breach of faith which it involves with the Indian Subscribers to the Peninsular Company, who were induced to take shares with the express understanding that the vessels should proceed to and from Calcutta direct. It is true there was no stipulation that the vessels should not go out of their way to call at Bombay, or at the Mauritius, or at the Cape; but this silence arose from the perfect confidence which the public reposed in the good faith of the Association, and from the evident improbability that any such deviation would ever be dreamt of. In the next place, this alteration of the route of the vessel, will occasion a delay of at least five days, possibly of a greater number, during which all the passengers from Bengal, Madras and Ceylon will be subject to heavy charges on board. It will also protract the receipt of our letters, papers and parcels for five days; to us a most serious inconvenience. This can only be obviated by sending them through Bombay; in which case we shall be saddled with the same exorbitant charge for postage, from which we now suffer so severely. In fact, if this plan be adopted, all letters which demand speed must be despatched by way of Bombay, and the advantages we now enjoy by the establishment of a steam communication with our own doors, will be in a great measure neutralized.

But these arguments will we fear weigh little with those who have the disposal of the question in their hands; we mean the rulers of India. The measure will probably be carried without the slightest reference to the inconvenience it may occasion to the community. All that the Government at home in Leadenhall-street or in Cannon Row cares for, is the monthly transmission of about 40lbs. weight of despatches to and from India, in the shortest space of time, and at the smallest expense. On the question of steam navigation, the Court of Directors have shewn from first to last—except in the one instance in which Mr. W. B. Bayley prevailed on them to grant 20,000*l.* a year for the establishment of a line of steamers between Calcutta and Suez—a narrowness of mind and of views, which will be remembered in after times to their deep discredit. During Lord W. Bentinck's administration, they threw every possible obstacle in the way of establishing any monthly communication at all between India and England. Repeatedly did they reprimand that statesman for having employed the Hugh Lindsay in navigating the Red Sea. They appear at that time to have adopted it as a fixed principle, that the greatest calamity which could befal the Company would be the approximation of England to India. When the necessity of establishing a monthly communication was forced on them by circumstances, and by the example of the civilized world, they still clung tenaciously to the project of limiting the communication to one port; and every attempt to extend the advantage to Calcutta, was repelled with scorn and indignation. When at the beginning of this year, Lord Ellenborough endeavoured to establish a regular intercourse between Calcutta and Suez, by the despatch of one of our redundant Steamers, the Court is understood to have peremptorily forbidden the repetition of the attempt.

S. seems to think that the plan now proposed will produce no great saving. The Company have evidently formed a different idea. It is in the hope of being able to discontinue the despatch of their own steamers from Bombay to Suez, and thus to save the whole expense it entails on them, that they are so eager to force the new arrangement on the Peninsular Company. It is a mere money question with them. They reason thus: "We are now constrained to give the Peninsular Company Twenty thousand Pounds a year, for keeping up the communication between Calcutta, Madras, Galle and Suez. If by making some addition to this bonus we can prevail on them to go out of their way and take up the Bombay Mails, we need not send steamers from that port, and we shall save all the expense they now cost us." How far the Peninsular Company is ready to go into this plan, we cannot say. If the Monthly Times represents their views correctly, they would appear to be so favourable to it as to require little coaxing from Leadenhall Street. But if they were as much opposed as they are probably favourable to it, the plan is proposed by those who can make it worth their while to yield, and yet be themselves into pocket. Yet it seems strange that the Government of India, with ten or twelve steamers on hand, for which they can hardly find adequate employ, should thus covet the use of Steamers which have been established for the especial benefit of the two Eastern Presidencies, and endeavour to turn them out of their natural and legitimate course.

But why should the Hindoostan and Bentinck Steamers be turned out of their course at all? Under the proposed plan, the communication between Bombay and Suez must be maintained during four months of the year by an auxiliary steamer to be dispatched to Galle with mails and passengers. Why should not the same plan be adopted with the same vessels during the remaining eight months of the year, and a branch Steamer be sent from Bombay to Aden to carry out and bring home the Bombay mails and passengers? There would be common sense in this arrangement. It would be fair to us; fair to Bombay; fair to all parties; and would probably cost Government but little more than the scheme which is now proposed. Instead of making all the passengers from Bengal, Madras and Ceylon, together with all the letters and covers go five or six hundred miles out of their way to a single port, it must strike every one as a more rational plan to send the heavy steamer with her freight on as rapidly as possible to her destination, and to meet her at Aden, by a small steamer with the passengers and letters from Bombay. It is more rational that Mahomed should go to the mountain than that the mountain should be constrained to go to Mahomed.

THE PUNJAB.—The Delhi Gazette informs us that the dispute between Shere Sing and his powerful Minister, Dhyan Sing, has been accommodated for the present without a resort to arms. The Minister, either thinking that the time for raising the standard of rebellion had not arrived, or dreading the possible interference of the British Authorities in favour of his master, has come down from his mountain fastnesses in Jumboo, and made his appearance and his submissions at the Durbar. But the terms in which he ventured to address his sovereign evidently shew that he is fully aware of the strength of his position. He promised to render a faithful account of the sums he had abstracted from the public treasury, at some future time, which will of course be regulated by his own convenience. He complained of the ill offices which some of the chiefs were doing him at Court, and he was assured that no one should be permitted to slander or to injure him. He even ventured to upbraid the king in the presence of the whole Court, with his inordinate love of the chase, and his intemperate habits, to which he attributed the disorganization of the Government. It must be evident that no prince would have put up with such open reproaches, if he had not been conscious of his own weakness, and no subject would have dared to offer them, unless he had great confidence in his own power. The return of the Minister at the earnest and abject entreaty of his sovereign, serves to establish his authority on a firmer basis, while it reduces the sovereign to the rank of a cypher in his own Court. Unless Shere Sing can manage to form a stronger party among the chiefs of the country, all real power will henceforth centre in the powerful Minister; and the deposition of the impotent monarch becomes only a question of time and circumstances. The triumphant attitude which Dhyan Sing has now been able to assume, can scarcely fail to create new occasions of irritation and discord, and the appeal to arms, though suspended by concessions on the one hand and discretion on the other, cannot long be averted. If the integrity of the Government of the Punjab be once fairly disturbed, and it be distracted with intestine discords, it must speedily drop into the hands of its more powerful and envious neighbour. When a fair and honourable opportunity is presented of making the country British, it will not be left unimproved by those who are restrained from the attempt by no political or military considerations. Some such opportunity cannot but turn up, whenever it becomes the seat of a civil war; and as it has fallen to the lot of Lord Ellenborough to extend our boundary to the Indus in the south, it will probably belong to the administration of his successor, to give our empire a corresponding expansion in the north; and thus to bring us again in contact with the Affghans, by giving us possession of the country beyond the Indus, to the foot of the Khyber pass, at the same time that we obtain the command of the five rivers, and make Cashmere contribute her exquisite wools to the looms of Yorkshire. The pear is ripening gradually, and must drop into our mouths at no distant period.

THE SOMNATH GATES.—The last number of the Journal of the Asiatic Society, contains a report of the Officers assembled by order of General Nott to report on the state of the Gates brought from Ghuzni. It would appear from this valuable document, which will be found among our extracts, that they are really and truly the Gates which Mahmood of Ghuzni carried away from the Temple of Somnath to adorn his own tomb. It is not the least remarkable circumstance of these trophies, that they should have remained in so high a state of preservation, during so long a period, notwithstanding the danger to which they were exposed, in their journey across India, and subsequently when buried in the ground. The Committee state that "the upper portions of the gates still retain much of their original carving, which is in high relief, of beautiful execution, and in a wonderful state of preservation." We are also told that the tomb of Mahmood of Ghuzni has been for ages a place of pilgrimage, almost of adoration, to Mahomedans, and that the gates were objects of especial attention. This would prove that the loss of these gates is probably a greater source of grief to the Mahomedans beyond the Indus, than the acquisition of them is a matter of exultation to the Hindoos within the river, who know little and care less about them. Of the Mace which the Governor General ordered to be brought away with the gates, the report says nothing. It was not to be found; and the popular opinion is that it was borne off as a trophy by the first British conqueror of Ghuzni.

But what is to be done with the Gates? It is very manifest that they will never be sent across the country to Somnath, to be placed in any restored temple. The voice of England has forbidden it; and indeed Lord Ellenborough's own feelings on the subject must by this time have cooled down to indifference. They are entirely lost to the world, while they continue to be entombed in the Fort of Agra. What more fitting repository for them than the Museum of the Asiatic Society? As trophies of our victory over the Affghans who had so signally discomfited us, there is a degree of political importance attached to them, and they ought to be deposited in the metropolis of our Empire. As the most ancient wooden gates, perhaps, in existence, and as the only memorial we have of the conqueror who first broke up the Hindoo empire, and planted the crescent in the room of the trident, they possess a degree of historical and archaiological interest, which points out the Asiatic Society as the fittest body to enjoy the custody of them.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 3.

— Sir Hugh Gough arrived at Madras from Bangalore on the 21st ult. His Excellency intended to embark on the Samarang for Calcutta.

— The latest accounts from Bombay lead us to fear that the monthly Steamer may take her departure without our Mails. Though we are perishing here for want of rain, there has been so great a redundancy on the road to Bombay, that the progress of the Mails has been greatly impeded. Neither the Express nor the Mail of the latest safe day had arrived on the 18th, and the despatch of the Steamer was postponed to 6 P. M. The Mails had not arrived at 4 P. M. and it was resolved, if the Governor General's Express arrived during the night, to despatch the Steamer—leaving the whole of the letters of private individuals behind. Most fortunately the Governor General's Express did not arrive during the night; and at 5 A. M. the next morning another notice was issued stating that the Mail would be kept open till 4 P. M.

— General Simpson of H. M. 29th Regiment goes to Bombay in the Queen Steamer, to be placed at the disposal of Sir Charles Napier for employment in Scinde.

— Last night's Calcutta Gazette contains the draft of an Act, which may truly be called an Act for a General Jail Delivery without oyer or terminer. It ordains that whereas prison discipline has been made more strict of late, every man now in jail is to be let off one-fourth the remainder of his period of confinement; and that in future, every man is to be sentenced only to three-fourths of the legal term of imprisonment. We may offer a few comments on it next week. At present we would only observe that some of those who are fond of looking on every occasion at the lame leg of Government, have remarked that since the abolition of corporal punishment, the jails have been crowded beyond their capacity of comfortable accommodation; and that two alternatives were before the Supreme Council; the one that of enlarging the prisons: the other that of letting out some of the jail birds; and they have wisely and economically adopted this latter alternative.

— The Hindoostan Steamer goes full; if possible more than full. Among the passengers are two of the gentlemen who rendered themselves memorable in Affghanistan, Captain G. Lawrence, and Major Rawlinson. Sir John Peter Grant, Mr. W. P. Grant, and several others, go to Galle in the Steamer, and from thence to the new and charming Sanatarium of Neuralia which will shortly become rather a formidable rival of Darjeling.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 4.

— Our Mails have gone by the Bombay Steamer. It seems that the Government express, arrived after some of the public mails of the last safe day, the 5th July. Those of the 6th and 7th had also arrived and were quite in time for the Steamer, which was originally advertised to start on the 18th, but did not quit the harbour before 3 P. M. on the 20th. At half past two all the missing Mails from Calcutta came in, and were sent on board.

The Delhi Gazette states, that Dost Mahomed has thrown the "infamous" Ameenoolla and his sons into prison; and that Khan Shereen Khan, the head of the Kuzelbashes, had fled to the Hazarah country. Dost Mahomed does not appear to be firmly fixed on his throne; the nobles still continue to indulge in the national propensity of intrigue.

— The papers mention the death in Calcutta of of Mr. T. B. Scott, at the age of 57, after having run a very long and useful, but latterly, we fear, unfortunate course. He was the printer of the India Gazette, we should think, thirty years ago, at a time when that ancient establishment was in its glory, and the profits were such as a member of the Board of Revenue might have envied. But the Auctioneers took away their catalogues; the price of printing came down twenty, thirty, fifty per cent. Samuel Smith and Co's. Directory superseded Scott and Co's. older work, and Mr. Scott was thrown upon his wits, and eventually the Press itself was brought to the hammer. In any typographical History which may be written of Calcutta, Mr. Scott will deserve honourable mention.

— The Governor General has considerately ordered that the troops and officers for the monthly relief sent from Barrackpore to Town, shall be accommodated with the use of Steamers. Two Steamers came up from Calcutta on Wednesday afternoon, and the next morning took down the troops in two cargo boats. In the evening they returned with the boats filled with troops which had been relieved from Fort and Town duty.

— The Governor General has also ordered the gun which used to be fired at eight in the evening in winter, and nine in summer, to be fired at noon every day. A noon day gun is convenient; but why could we not have had the convenience of both?

— A Buggy Mail is just advertized for the first time to start from Meerut to Delhi and Delhi to Meerut on the 1st of next month. It will continue to leave either station each day at 3 P. M. Accommodation is afforded to passengers at the rate of 16 Rs. a head.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 5.

— At the last Meeting of the British India Society there were twenty members and visitors present, and it was resolved to send thirty questions to the interior of the country. We wish there had been a little more discretion in drawing them up. One of them runs thus, "What, in the opinion of the Ryots, constitutes the necessaries, the comforts and the luxuries of life?" What distinction can a poor ryot draw between luxuries and necessaries, who if he is found to be enjoying anything that will bear the name of a comfort is soon squeezed dry. It was said that Mr. George Thompson had written to a member of the Society complaining of the "croaking of the Press on his accepting the appointment of Ambassador from the King of Delhi." Certainly the acceptance of that appointment, after the professions made in Calcutta, was very singular. Mr. Thompson cannot surely have been so foolish as to complain of the remarks of the press on the occasion, which were remarkable chiefly for their lenity.

— The affair of the arrest of a dead body in Calcutta by a Bailiff, has been thoroughly investigated at the Court of Requests, by Mr. Brietzcke, who is anxious to clear the Court from so unfavourable a charge, if untrue; or to punish it, if true. The investigation has not ended in substantiating the charge. The Hurkaru has promised to give fuller particulars on Monday.

— The Bombay Times has some very pertinent observations on the refusal of Lord Ellenborough to grant compensation to the Cabul Captives for the loss of their baggage. They lost indeed every thing but their lives and their honour, in the service of their country; and the resolution to refuse them any relief, after the heavy pecuniary sacrifices they have incurred, is harsh and ungenerous.

MONDAY, AUGUST 7.

— The last Delhi Gazette quotes letters from Sukkur to the 18th of July. They supply no news. The country is under water, and quiet. The two refractory chiefs, Shere Mahomed and Ali Mahomed, had crossed the river and betaken themselves to the mountains. All opposition has ceased, and unless the Belochee hordes can be prevailed on to leave their mountain homes, cross the river and make a fresh effort to recover their hold on the country, it may be found to submit as peaceably to our rule as Bengal did.

— Since the period of Queen Caroline's trial, in which the witness gave evidence to whom the soubriquet of non mi ricordo was applied, we question whether there has been any examination in a Court in which the deponent exhibited so short a memory as Mr. Charles Brownfield the Pawnbroker, who has taken the benefit of the Act. His discharge was opposed by Mr. Leith, on Saturday last, on behalf of Messrs. Mackillop, Stewart and Co. The amount of his transactions was between 20 and 30,000 Rs. a month; a business of three lakhs of Rupees a year. Yet he had not an account book, nor a scrap of paper. He could not remember whether he had been at Serampore or not this year, or when he went to Chandernagore, or how long he remained there, nor when he returned. He did not recollect at what house he lived at Chandernagore, or the name of the owner, or where he went after he left that settlement, though he thought he went to Calcutta; but what was most remarkable of all was that he could not tell whether he had a short memory or not. The only thing about which he appeared to have any kind of fixed and certain notion was that natives would not advance money unless they had the goods in their possession, in which matter they are certainly wiser than a certain Institution not twenty miles from Serampore.

— The Delhi Gazette says, that the Nuwaub Hussun Aly, the uncle of the present Nuwaub, being dissatisfied with his present allowance of 3000 Rs. has resolved to enlist the services of Mr. George Thompson, with the hope of getting more. If Mr. Thompson resolves to undertake the cause of all those who have any thing to complain of, or any thing to expect, he will soon find his hands full of engagements. He will find in fact that there is no end to grievances in India.

— Sub-Assistant Surgeon Chunnum Lall has been presented with a pair of shawls of the value of 250 Rs. by Mr. Joseph Skinner, as an acknowledgment of his services. This young man was brought up at the Medical College in Calcutta, where he was distinguished for his professional acquirements.

— Standfast, the correspondent of the Hurkaru, says that we have misapprehended him; that he did not say "that a Council of war had been held at Jellalabad, about retreating, but that discussions were in those days frequent within the walls of the beleaguered fortress, and that a retreat to Peshawur was proposed; and that he is not at liberty to mention the name of those who urged the step; nor does he think that any advantage would be gained by the disclosure." In this he is acting not only with consideration, but generosity. The Hurkaru, in a note says that the fact mentioned by Standfast is unquestionable and that he could name the parties to whom allusion is made. Does the Hurkaru mean, only that "discussions were frequent," or that a Council of war was held, the proceedings of which were recorded? In Sir Robert Sale's Narrative of events at Jellalabad, there is no mention of a Council of War. It is important, highly important in a historical point of view that this fact should be known, if for no other purpose, at least that we may ascertain whether the honours which have been given to some, and the neglect with which others have been treated, be just or not. We will not lose sight of this Council of War.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 8.

— His Excellency Sir Hugh Gough's arrival from Madras in the Samarang was announced by Semaphore yesterday. He was expected to land yesterday afternoon, and the troops were accordingly in readiness.

— An advertisement appears in this morning's Exchange Gazette from Messrs Carr, Tagore and Co. stating that the Steamer Assam with a flat in tow would be dispatched to Allahabad on the 18th, and that during the present scarcity of freight in consequence of the Government Steamers not being able to meet the public wants, this was an eligible opportunity, &c. &c. It appears then that the Assam paid in her last trip. We are happy to see any prospect that internal steam navigation will become an object of private speculation. Government cannot be expected to supply the wants of the public in this respect to their fullest extent.

— The Sheristadar of Dinagepore is, it seems, going to bring an action for libel against the Hurkaru, for saying that he had amassed a large property, though in the receipt of a small salary; and had been at length dismissed. The man had better be content to remain in obscurity with what he has gotten, than tempt public scrutiny. We have a list of his estates before us, and a memorandum of his pay during the period in which that property was accumulated. If the state of that district and its administration should become matter of public observation through means of an action, all those who provoked the enquiry will rue it to the end of their lives.

— The number of letters and covers sent by the last Mail from Bombay, was 49,980; namely letters, 30,143; papers 10,837.

— The firm of Messrs Wooler and Co. Bombay, has stopped payment for 5 lakhs of Rupees.

— The Hurkaru publishes a letter from a correspondent signed Dewy Digge, stating that in a certain district, name not given, "the Magistrate has taken it into his head to leave the station, and to hold his Court at B, some thirty miles off. Hundreds of unfortunate suitors already far from their homes are obliged to follow him in the heat of a July sun, and the middle of the rains, without a place to lay their heads in." Looking farther into the letter, we find the under current of motive in which the charge may probably originate. The writer has had a summary suit which has lingered seventeen months—no wonder his patience is exhausted—and he considers the Magistrate actually tyrannical to Europeans. The removal of the Court however to a distance of thirty miles to suit the Magistrate's convenience, if true, must be a matter of notoriety. We have heard of such fantastic tricks; but we are satisfied that Mr. Bird has only to be made acquainted with the fact that any Magistrate has wantonly inflicted such injury on the suitors in any district, to relieve him of his public duties.

— There has been some discussion in the papers about the sale of Fergusson and Co's. Union Bank Shares 200 in number, at 860 Rs. each, which is 140 Rs. below par. Mr. Roberts, the Broker, declares that he has found many buyers but no sellers at that price. The two brokers who correspond with the Englishman affirm that these shares have positively been sold for 800. On this ticklish subject, in which the interests of so many are involved, we say nothing. We give statements as we find them.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 9.

— Mr. Roberts, the Broker, has come forward in his own name and affirmed in the Hurkaru that the whole of Fergusson and Co's. Union Bank Shares, amounting to 500, have been bonâ fide sold for 960 Rs. each.

— Sir Hugh Gough landed yesterday morning about half past six with all honours.

— By the Water Witch intelligence has been received from China to the 26th of June. The Imperial Commissioner, Keying, had arrived at Canton, and was expected at Hong Kong on the 24th, where he was to be received with the highest demonstrations of the Treaty. It was understood that the ratification had been fixed for the next Tuesday, after which it was expected that a Steamer would be dispatched forthwith to Singapore. and Bombay. A Criminal and Admiralty Court had been established at Hong Kong.

— The Hindoostan Steamer starts to-morrow morning at sun rise, with a full complement of passengers.

— The Marine Board, it is said, is to be abolished, and a Marine Superintendent appointed on a salary of 3000 Rupees a month. Mr. Greenlaw is to be Marine Secretary upon a salary of 2000 Rs. a month. The Star of this morning seems to think that the office and the pay of the Master Attendant will be merged in that of the Superintendent, and that it will be conferred on Capt. Rogers. The Marine Board has been the same as the Customs Board, and the Salt Board, and the Opium Board. In all such cases, the Board is a cypher, and the Secretary, the integer; or as some will have it, the Secretary is the manager, and the Board his skreen.

— A sale of Assam Tea took place yesterday, partly on the part of Government, partly of the Singphos. The samples of some of the Government Pekoe were peculiarly good, but the general run of the lots was decidedly inferior. All shippers from the previous sales have burnt their fingers at home.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

No. 1093.
FORT WILLIAM,
FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT,
The 4th August, 1843.
NOTIFICATION.

Notice is hereby given that the Government of India has recommended to the Home Authorities, the expediency of discontinuing as soon as possible the present system of making advances in India upon the Security of Goods to be hypothecated to the East India Company.

The Governor General in Council is of opinion, that the full supplies required to meet the wants of the Home Treasury can be raised in England by the Hon'ble the Court of Directors by the Sale of Bills on India, without any necessity for the intervention of the Government in the Indian Markets, and he is desirous of relieving the trade of India from the irregular intrusions of a competition that is governed principally by the Political Exigencies of the State.

The Governor General in Council is aware, that private interests may be injuriously affected by the sudden discontinuance of any system that has been long in operation, and he issues this timely notification of his views upon a subject of the gravest importance to the Mercantile community connected with the trade of India, in order that they may not be unprepared for a change of measures, which the Government of India is urging strongly on the attention of the Home Authorities, and will be ready to carry out at the earliest convenient opportunity.

By order of the Right Hon'ble the Governor General in Council,

J. A. DORIN,
Secy. to the Govt. of India.

THE AFFAIR OF THE ARREST OF A CORPSE.

The investigation into the affair of the alleged arrest of a corpse, by a Bailiff of the Court of Requests, was held on Friday. Messrs. Law, Cliff, Watson and Stanistreet were separately examined by Mr. Brietzcke, at considerable length. The Bailiff, Shields, also put in his statement of the matter, and likewise a letter from the undertaker, who declared that he had not met with any opposition when removing the body. On the whole it appeared, that the Bailiff did not positively keep the body in custody until the money was paid, which has not to this day been paid. The fact seemed to be, that Mr. Higginson had been arrested before his death, and while a prisoner of the Bailiff, had died. The Bailiff, with a view to get out the money which he thought he would be held responsible for, perhaps showed a few airs of authority, and talked of keeping the corpse and so forth, but he does not appear to have actually resisted the removal of the body.—Hurkaru, August 7.

MALACCA.

To
The Right Reverend Father in God Daniel,
Lord Bishop of Calcutta and Metropolitan of India.

My Lord,

We the undersigned Protestant Inhabitants of Malacca beg to represent to your Lordship that in consequence of your Lordship's promise and undertaking that our Church should never be without a minister in case we complied with your Lordship's proposal to consecrate Christ's Church at this settlement (which, before was open to the preaching of the Gospel by Protestant Ministers of every denomination,) to the services of the Church of England, we made no hesitation in complying with your Lordship's wishes.

It is, however, a matter of regret to us to have to remind your Lordship that ever since the departure of the Reverend Mr. Norgate in December last, we have had no divine service performed in the Church, and that we are deprived of the necessary rituals of Baptisms, Marriages and Burials, so essential under the blessing of God, to a Christian community.

We therefore feel it to be our duty to suggest to your Lordship the expediency of providing us as early as practicable with a Minister, especially now that the removal of the Anglo Chinese College to Hongkong, has left us without even the services of an ordained Minister of any Christian persuasion, excepting Mr. Sames, a Dutch Missionary, whose whole time is devoted to the Benevolent Institution, in which there are not less than 250 Boys.

With the greatest respect
we have the honour to be,
Your Lordship's most obedient servants.
(Signed by 113 residents in Malacca.)

BENCOOLEN.

The Friend of India compares the economical management of Singapore with the profligate extravagance of Bencoolen; but the latter was not even a place of general, much more of free commerce. It was one of the cherished monopolies which enabled the Company to supply the nation with pepper, by the aid of a differential duty, at about four hundred per cent. above prime cost. It would have been hard if such an establishment should have yielded profit only to the proprietors of India Stock, and left no opening for patronage to the Directors. A Bencoolen Civilian on his arrival, got about as much pay as a Judge of the Sudder does now, which it must be owned was little enough for such a dreadful banishment. We hope the Dutch manage it better. Singapore is a good model of an economical establishment, and shews what can be done, when there are no spare funds to make ducks and drakes of. The settlement is even charged with various expenses which do not belong to it, such as the maintenance of convicts, which ought to fall upon the thief-producing countries, and magnetic-observations which should be paid for by the Admiralty. There would then be a surplus, which we think ought to be in the first place applied to the construction of permanent defences, sufficient for the protection of so valuable a commerce in case of sudden hostilities. We know that the utterly defenceless state of the island, was accurately reported to a foreign Government by a Commander who visited the place on purpose, because we had his remarks from his own lips. In case of a maritime war there, a sudden visit from a hostile squadron might do incalculable mischief before any force could arrive for its protection. We are not friendly to expensive fortifications in countries where our forces are sufficiently numerous for defence, but a mere outpost, the seat of a most valuable commerce, is sure to attract hostilities if merely for the sake of plunder, and ought not to invite such a visit by its reputed weakness. We have been informed that a very moderate expense would suffice to make one harbour secure against a coup de main, and as a powerful expedition, if directed against the British possessions in the east would certainly have more important objects in view than Singapore, it would not be requisite to take more expensive precautions.

The success of Singapore ought, one would think, to have encouraged the British Government to seek out other suitable stations for the extension of its commerce, now threatened by the jealousy of all its immediate neighbours. Aden under an equally free system ought to become the seat of an equally important trade, or at least to engross all the trade which now goes to the neighbouring native ports. But it is already burthened with duties, and unless they are removed, the principal inducement to an extended traffic will be wanting.—Englishman.

CABUL.

It is not right that we should pass over the reported events at Cabul without some casual remark. Dost Mohummed is, as would appear from the Delhi Gazette, consolidating his power upon a basis as firm as the frail tenure of authority in so disturbed a land can admit of. If, as is said, Persian influence begins to make itself felt in Khorassan consequent upon the reported murder of Shah Kamran of Herat by his Vuzeer Yar Mohummed, there is no doubt but that the power of the Khujjurs may be extended still further, and that the darling project of the Persian Monarch, the virtual subjugation of Candahar, and its dependencies. may be again entertained with some hope of carrying the same to successful completion. This possibility leads to speculation as to the part which the present Ruler of Cabul may take in the event of the establishment of such political influence on his immediate frontier. His brothers, the former chiefs of Candahar, sought an asylum at Tehran when driven by our arms from their own seat of power, and they have become, if not Persianized at any rate the servants of a Persian interest. Thus they, though Soonnees in their creed, have identified themselves with the Sheea sect in the matter of political interests, and the curious question arises as to whether a purely Soonnee people like the Affghans, will submit to allow the supremacy of those of the opposite sect, should their chief, Dost Mohummed, suspected by them already of an unorthodox bias, take part with a power which comes in force accompanied by members of his own family, to establish domination in a country of which he is by common consent, the lord.

It is difficult to suppose but that in the course of events the Indian Government may be again invited to deep implication in the troublous politics of Central Asia. We can only trust that the interference, if interference there must be, will not again assume a character involving the permanent establishment of British power or the semblance of it, beyond the Indus.—Star, Aug. 4.

SHERE SINGH AND DHYAN SINGH.

"It appears by our later advices from the Punjaub, that for the present, the breach between the Maharajah of Lahore and his all-powerful Prime Minister has been patched up, after a series of negociations on the part of the Sovereign, which must have been as humiliating to the Monarch himself, as they seem abject to us, and to which he found himself reduced from the attitude assumed by certain Sirdars on whose attachment to himself he had doubtless calculated. The state of the army too was found such as to render it impossible to adopt any hostile steps with any probability of success. The whole transaction has therefore turned out to the manifest advantage of Rajah Dhyan Singh, whose power has been increased to that extent, that he ventured to take upon himself to lecture his Sovereign in round terms in open Durbar for his propensities, which he represented as reflecting disgrace on himself and all around him. The promises of rendering a faithful account may be taken for what they are worth and will be kept when Shere Singh is in a condition to enforce them, and, therefore, instead of gaining advantage from the breach he created, the Maharajah has only lost more ground in every respect than he previously possessed. Dhyan Singh is Maire du Palais at Lahore. It is possible that the apprehension of Shere Singh's applying for assistance to the British Government, in case of lengthened differences, may have led the Minister to appear to yield to his master's entreaties with somewhat greater alacrity than he otherwise might have done, and the fear of such interference, at the entreaty of the Monarch, may keep him in check for some time longer, but to any one who has studied the course of events it must be evident, that the days of Runjeet Singh's dynasty in the Punjaub are numbered, and the sceptre, with which he swayed his extensive possessions must ere long pass, in appearance even, to other hands. Dewan Sawun Mull has established himself perhaps firmly enough to declare himself independent, whenever that day may arrive, while Kashmeer will fall an easy prey to the grasp of Golab Singh, whose position at Jumboo, almost commands the beautiful valley. These are the events which may be expected, provided no interference of any kind on the part of the British Government takes place. Such an occurrence would, of course, have a very material influence on the destinies of the Punjab, but how to be brought about appears a difficulty, as there is in reality at present no political treaty, with the exception of the one of general amity of 1809, in existence between the Government of Lahore and that of British India, the only one of a closely connecting nature which ever existed, the tripartite, which placed Shah Soojah on the throne of Kabul, having virtually expired with that Sovereign on the 5th April 1842, and it has been subsequently formally annulled at the express desire of the Lahore Government at the time the interchange of visits took place between Rajah Dhyan Singh and Mr. Maddock on behalf of their respective Governments. The inclinations of the Minister are known to be opposed to his policy in regard to the British whom he detests, and he would therefore be too happy to give vent to the former if he could do so without any great sacrifice of the latter. All these intricacies cause us regret the more that in making the arrangements for the Government of the N. W. P., the Governor General should have deprived the public servant above all other in these provinces best capable of handling it with judgment and discretion, of the power which the authority, near the scene of intrigues, ought to have been intrusted with. It is a question how far even we should be warranted in interfering on the requisition of Shere Singh, against the wishes of his principal Sirdars, with the Minister at their head, though of the policy of our doing so, and extending our influence to the shores of the Indus from Mithenkote to Attock, no question can be entertained, and it will, we trust, be adopted, as soon as there is an opportunity of doing so; how soon that opportunity may offer remains to be seen.—Delhi Gazette, 29th July.

THE PUNJAB.

July 5th.—Rajah Heera Singh informed the Maharajah that his father had, at his earnest request, left Jumboo, and arrived at Lahore on his way to join his Highness. Similar news were received from Prince Purtab Singh. Sirdar Tej Singh wrote from Peshawur to say that two tribes of Gilzyes and Burukzyes, having refused to pay the tribute, he had sent 2 battalions with 100 Cavalry to bring them to order, and he had no doubt he should be able to make them pay. The Killidar of Phulor reported the completion of the works under his charge, and that 10 guns had been mounted on the bastions. The Maharajah gave orders to make the ditch round Umritser puckah, and thenceforth to keep it full of water from the Canal.

July 6th.—Lugga Singh and Seel Singh, Teilwallas, reported by urzee that they had proceeded to Jumboo, in compliance with the commands of His Highness, and had persuaded Rajah Dhyan Singh to return with them to Lahore. A hurkaru arrived from Jumboo with an urzee from Rajah Golab Singh, to the effect that he had recovered his health and completed the ceremonies of his son's marriage.

July 7th.—The Royal camp left the city of Umritser this day and was pitched at the Kunjeree-ka-phul. Orders were sent to Sirdar Lena Singh to place sentries over the mine of lead which he had discovered, and to send some specimens of the ore for the Maharajah's inspection.

July 8th.—The Maharajah returned to Lahore this day under the usual salute.

July 9th.—The Durbar was held at the Huzooree Bagh this day. Rajah Dhyan Singh presented himself, and having embraced the feet of His Highness, was asked why he had gone to Jumboo, to which the minister answered that there were several reasons, which induced him to do so; the first that he was anxious to see Rajah Goolab Singh who was ill, and also to be present at his nephew's marriage. He further begged to represent that His Highness's constant devotion to the chase and the bottle, during the greater part of the day, had a baneful effect on the state, and reflected disgrace on the Minister as well as the Monarch, and with regard to the accounts and nuzzurana required of him, they were all forthcoming, and all he possessed was the Maharajah's. He took occasion at the same time to remark on the jealousy which many of the Sirdars entertained towards him. The Maharajah replied that he should be protected.—Delhi Gazette, July 26.

THE SOMNATH GATES.

Report of a Committee assembled by Order of Major General NOTT, to report on the state of the Gates brought from Ghuznee.

Camp near Peshawar, 8th November, 1842.

Considering the great age of these gates, the probable injury sustained by them in their displacement from the temple of Somnauth, and transport to Ghuznee, the circumstances of their having been taken down and buried during the invasion of Affghanistan by Changhiz Khan, to preserve them from destruction by the troops of that conqueror, and their subsequent disinterment and re-erection, they must be deemed in good preservation. Great care has been observed in their packing and carriage since their removal from the tomb of Mahmood at Ghuznee, and they do not appear to have sustained any material damage from their transport thus far on their return to India.

The tomb of Mahmood of Ghuznee has been for ages a place of pilgrimage, almost of adoration, to Mahomedans, and the gates objects of especial attention; it is not therefore matter of surprise, that the lower portions of the gates within the reach of a man's hand have suffered greatly; the carved work has in some places disappeared, small portions having probably, from time to time, been abstracted as relics. Here and there pieces of carved wood, perhaps of the same antiquity as the gates brought with them from Somnauth, dissimilar in pattern, have been used to replace the original carving, and in other places inferior material and workmanship have been employed to repair the fabric. But the upper portions of the gates still retain much of the original carving, which is in high relief, of beautiful execution, and in a wonderful state of preservation.

The gates appear to have been formerly decorated with plates of some precious metal, fixed to the wood work round the carved compartments by small slips of iron. Many of these slips still remain in regular patterns, over the top of the gates, lower down they have altogether disappeared.

The frames of the gates are in double folds hinged in the centre, their height is eleven feet, and their aggregate width nine and a half feet.

The gates are surrounded by a framing composed of small pieces of carved wood, united by numerous joints in regular pattern. This portion of the work, though of great age, seems of more modern and slighter manufacture than the gates themselves. The exterior dimensions of their framing (now in four separate portions,) are sixteen and a half feet in height, thirteen and a half in width. The framing is in very fair preservation, excepting near the ground, where seats seem to have existed on either side the gateway, and the portions of the framing in this position, to the height of a man's shoulders, have been fairly rubbed away. The construction of their framing, and the numerous joints of the work render it peculiarly liable to damage from travelling over rough roads, or from frequent removal.

We are of opinion, that it will not be difficult to restore all essential portions of the gates that are now wanting, and to fix them in serviceable condition in any building destined to their reception; but some judgment would be required to make any repair or restoration harmonize with the air of extreme antiquity possessed by the original portions of the gates.

In consonance with the Major General's request, we have the honor to forward herewith sketches of the gates, with the dimensions accurately entered on the face of the drawing.

The Major General having desired the Committee to state their opinion as to the expediency of conveying the gates in a frame adapted to elephant carriage, we beg to state our apprehension, that such a mode of conveyance might be productive of serious injury to them. The wood is extremely dry and brittle, and the greatest care is requisite to guard against the more delicate portions of the work being even touched. The gates are not heavy; they do not probably exceed 500lb. in weight, and we estimate the entire weight of the gates and framing at less than half a ton; but their surface is great compared with the scantling of the frame-work, and the swaying motion of the elephant, and the necessity that would exist for daily loading and unloading the animal, could scarcely fail to open the joints and dislodge the frailer portions of the work, however carefully secured.

We would, therefore, respectfully suggest, that a car with a double framing between which the gates should be placed, and to which they should be secured by wedges well padded, measures being taken to prevent the entire weight of the gates falling on any portion of their own frame-work, might be expediently prepared at Ferozepore to receive them, such car being adapted to elephant draft. But the gates alone should, we think, be thus carried, the framing being transported to its destination packed as (with the gates) it is at present in felts and tarpaulins. In any case, we would recommend that on their arrival at Ferozpore, both the gates and framing should be carefully examined, and some strengthening by ties and braces given to the slighter portions, to guard, as far as possible, against the chance of small pieces becoming dislodged, and perhaps lost on the road.

In examining on this occasion the framing surrounding the gates, the Committee observed a Cufic inscription carved in the wood, with a copy and translation of which appended to our report, we have been furnished by Major Rawlinson. We think that it will give an interest to this document, if we attach to it a translation of the inscription on Mahmood's tomb, with which we have been favored by the same distinguished orientalist. Lieut. Studdart has also enabled us to annex a drawing of the Sarcophagus, with an exact copy of the Cufic inscription thereon.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—The following letter, and the note by the Editor appeared in the Bengal Hurkaru of the 3d Instant.

As you must be well acquainted with the rules and regulations of the Court at Serampore, I have to request, you will be pleased to inform me, (as the parties are all Mahomedans and reside at Serampore,) if the case will be decided at that place by the Mahomedan law—and if the view taken by the Editor of the Hurkaru be a correct one.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

Calcutta, 6th August, 1843.

An answer in your next Thursday's paper will greatly oblige.

Note.—The rule followed by the Court in Serampore is the same as that laid down in Regulation 4, 1793, Section 15. All suits regarding inheritance between Mahomedans are decided according to the Mahomedan law as far as it is known and understood.—ED. FR. of IN.

To the Editor of the Bengal Hurkaru.

SIR,—A Mahomedan woman adopts a son and on her death bequeaths the whole of her property to him, with this condition, that the Executor is to allow him a certain sum monthly out of the principal, and he is to enjoy the rent of the Landed Property; but never, on any account to dispose of the said property. Within a year or two the adopted son also dies, leaving a widow, without any issue, and executing no will whatever. By the Mahomedan law, is the adopted son's widow, or the Mahomedan woman's blood relation (brothers and sisters) entitled to the property?

Your obedient Servant,

2nd August, 1843. AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

Note by the Editor.—As the Mahomedan woman had heirs she could not, by the Mahomedan law, (Vide McNaughten, Chap. VI. of Wills, Prin. 2) bequeath more than one-third of her estate to any person. The adopted son had therefore no claim even to the provision made for him, much less can his widow claim any thing through him.—ED. Bengal Hurkaru, 3d August.

ASSISTANT MAGISTRATES.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—What is become of the reconsideration about the Deputy Magistrates, that was to take place on the 21st June last? Is the augmentation of the Darogahs pay, intended to commute the benevolent institution of the Deputy Magistracy? The people have now fallen to think seriously upon the subject, and engaged themselves to the study of Regulations. I most sincerely wish the Governor General of India will graciously embrace the opportunity to contribute, to the prosperity of India for its deserved sons, and thereby render his name immortal.

I am, Sir,

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH ENGLAND.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—It is said that coming events cast their shadows before them. I hope most sincerely that the shadow, in the Monthly Times of 6th May and 6th June last, of an eventual change in the route of the Steamers of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company from Calcutta will not be found to verify the adage.

I think, however, it behoves all those who are interested in a direct communication between Calcutta and Suez,—touching only at places in the direct line—to be alive to the matter, if possible, in time to prevent that change, if it should be in agitation, which from the manner in which it is mentioned in the Monthly Times, the organ it may be said of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, I very much fear is the case. In the Monthly Times of the 6th May the question is somewhat elaborately discussed, as if the writer was sensible that he was proceeding on unsound premises.

The writer, after referring to the resistance made at Bombay to the extension of the communication to the other Presidencies, observes as follows:—

"In the January number of this journal it will be seen there is no disposition at present on the part of her Majesty's Government to do more than they can help towards a communication with the East; though the Western interests are sufficiently strong to obtain an outlay of the public treasure to the extent of £320,000 annually, to aid the communication with that less important portion of our empire!

From Suez to Calcutta viâ Bombay, the distance is 5,260 miles—from Suez to Calcutta, direct, 4,770, or 490 miles more steaming, supposing the boat to touch at Bombay from Suez on its way to Calcutta—and also on its way from Calcutta to Suez—landing at Bombay a light mail on its outward voyage, and receiving a light mail on its homeward voyage—rendering, in fact, this portion of the post similar to that by the Marseilles route in Europe. Under such a plan, this advantage would be gained:—the largest possible revenue would be collected from private capital, and, though the demand would even then be considerable from the public purse, it would be much less than if both lines are to be maintained independent of each other, and consequently it would be more likely to be obtained from the Lords of her Majesty's Treasury.

During the months of June, July, and August, branch boats would convey the Bombay mail to Galle; from thence proceed quietly to Aden, and there receive during those months the mail and passengers from England for Bombay."

This speaks plainly enough, and, considering the quarter from which it emanates, requires that the people of Bengal and Madras should be on the alert.

The Monthly Times of the 6th June again says in a somewhat similar article, "we are of opinion, that at present a monthly Communication between Suez, Ceylon, Madras and Calcutta, viâ Bombay would be sufficient."

On the 6th May, referring to the former quotation, he observes:—

"We are aware of objections to this arrangement; but we have carefully examined them, and unless others can be urged than those we at present know of, we greatly incline to this plan for future operation, and urge all parties to unite in a strong pull to obtain it. We may return to this subject in a future number."

He does not refer to the objections; as indeed he scarcely advances any grounds for the change.

All that appears is that there is no disposition on the part of Her Majesty's Government to do more than they can help towards a communication with the East; but it is not at all shown that more would be required of them to carry out the resolution of the House of Commons of 1834, namely, eventually to establish the Communication "according to the combined plan suggested by the Bengal Steam Committee," the sum total of the public expenditure over the receipts for postage being equally divided between the Governments of England and India, than is necessary on the plan viâ Bombay. This it is only said it would be the case in so many words, but there is no proof of it; and before I refer to the objections to the plan, I shall endeavour to shew that little more would be required from the Government on one plan than on the other; or at all events not sufficient to weigh in comparison with the amount that will be necessarily required under the proposed plan viâ Bombay.

It is admitted by the advocate of the change that it cannot be carried out during four months of the year, but that during that period the direct route to Suez must be taken; it is, therefore, only for two-thirds of the time that he proposes to change the route. Now during the remaining one-third there must be maintained, according to the writer's own admission, a vessel to proceed to Galle from Bombay with the Mails for England, and thence to pass to Aden, to await the return of the Steamer for Suez, in order to carry the Mails and Passengers to Bombay, so that it is only the additional expence of the smaller vessel on her run to and from Aden during eight voyages that is saved by the change; while, on the other hand, there is the additional charge of the larger Steamer, consequent on her going out of the direct route to Aden, increased by the necessary Port charges of Bombay: and on a balance being struck it cannot possibly amount to a sum at all worthy of consideration, seeing that the writer himself is looking to obtain from the two Governments, 15 lacs annually to run every month from Bombay alone, and 20 lacs to add a monthly communication to proceed from Calcutta via Bombay!!

It is, therefore, ridiculous to talk of so much more being required from the Government by the direct route from Calcutta to Suez, Bombay, joining on at Aden and Galle, according to season, than by the plan now proposed, so as to cause the Government to adopt the one, and refuse the other.

But the objections to the change are breach of faith, and delay to the people of Madras and Calcutta in the receipt of their letters.

Although it was not expressly stated there was a clear tacit understanding, on the transfer of the shares from Mr. Curtis' Company to the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, that the communication should be direct from Calcutta; and, without a breach of public faith, that Company cannot be a consenting party to the change: and it is for the Shareholders of Bengal and Madras to say in how far they will without remonstrance allow it to take place.

It is proposed that the Steamer, during the eight months, shall carry the bulk of the Calcutta and Madras Mails to and from those places respectively, picking up on her way to Suez a light Mail at Bombay, and dropping a similar one on her return.

The number of days she is to remain at Bombay is not mentioned; but it is quite obvious that as by this mode the latest day for writing will certainly be via Bombay, the greater part of the Calcutta and Madras correspondence will still require to go across the Continent of India, unless in using the term "Light Mail" the writer intends that Government shall limit the correspondence across the Continent—in itself an evil. It is beyond all doubt that whatever letters the Steamer may bring to Madras and Calcutta under the proposed plan, whether the bulk or not, they will reach their places of destination respectively three or four days later than they would if brought direct from Aden.

To this is to be added, the inconvenience to the* numerous passengers from Calcutta and Madras. Besides the lengthened voyage they will have the trouble and expense of going into Bombay, and if the latter is borne by the Peninsular and Oriental Company, it will go still further to establish my argument, that so much more cannot be required from the Government of England and India, on the original plan over that now proposed as to induce the Government to refuse to grant it.

The question is one of great public importance; and, I think, requires that the Press of Bengal and Madras should take it up preparatory to the adoption of such other measures as the Bengal and Madras Shareholders in the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and the public in general may see fit to pursue to avert the change.

S.

* I shall perhaps trouble you further on this point, in aid of my argument in favor of the direct route. All that is necessary to say now is that, besides going full during her last two voyages, the Hindoostan has now eighty passengers for Suez and twenty-five for intermediate places.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE FREE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—At the meeting on Saturday, the 20th instant, several Reports were given in respecting the present resources and future prospects of the Free Church.

MR. A. DUNLOP gave in the Report of the Building Committee. He said,—As Convener of that section of the Provisional Committee intrusted with the oversight of the building of Churches, I have now to submit an Interim Report on the subject. The two objects which the Committee most particularly had in view were, that the buildings should be erected with as little delay as possible, in order that those congregations who came out from the Establishment might be supplied with places of worship,—that they might be erected with as little expense as possible consistently with comfort,—and that they should be all of a similar form, and erected at the same expense over the whole kingdom. It was necessary, in following out this plan, that in those places which, from their size, and the number or the wealth of their inhabitants, might be able to supply themselves with more splendid erections than those contemplated and recommended by the Committee, a considerable degree of self-denial should be exercised until such time as necessary and comfortable shelter has been provided for all those in country districts who require it; and I feel assured that nothing would tend more to promote the comfort of our brethren throughout the provinces and country districts, than that their brethren, and the ministers in large towns, should not expend their funds upon their own comfort, or give way to the very natural desire to have the house of God in an ornamented condition, till all their brethren have, equally with themselves, decent places of worship. (Applause.) I trust this system will be acted upon everywhere, and that we shall not be actuated by any such feeling of selfishness, if I may give it that name, so long as there is a single parish throughout the country in which a decent place of worship has not been provided. In following out this object we have obtained plans, of which a specimen is to be seen in the Lothian-road. Though, from the novelty of this kind of erection, the supports being chiefly wood, it has been said that the connecting screens will not be sufficiently safe, yet I have the fullest assurance that there are not the slightest grounds for apprehension, but that they are equally secure with others, and that they last a much longer time than from their appearance we would be apt to imagine. There are districts of the country in which, from the situation, the wood pillars and brick screens would not answer, and to suit these circumstances we have got another set of plans prepared by Mr. Cousins, a very able architect in this place, and an ardent advocate of our cause. (Applause.) We have also received another plan from Mr. Westmacott, of London, who is architect to the Building Committee of the Privy Council, and who has had a great deal of experience in the building of schools. He suggests that we should build ours like the old English parish churches. There has been another artist who has given plans,—Mr. Hay, of Liverpool,—the principal feature of whose plan was, that the roof was to be arched, instead of being supported by beams. There is one particular point which deserves our especial attention, and that is a plan for securing a cheap and perfect ventilation. We have had the advice of an able individual, Dr. Reid of London, formerly a citizen of our own, who is of all others the best calculated to give advice on this subject, and who is now employed in superintending the Houses of Parliament, particularly in reference to ventilation and heating; and who, notwithstanding the great press of business on his hands, has volunteered as his contribution the supply of plans for this very necessary purpose. (Applause.) He then went on to say, that there were some districts subject to a painful state of matters in which a place could not be found where God could be publicly worshipped. It was matter of great surprise as well as of deepest regret, that, at this period of the day, when the doctrines of toleration were supposed to pervade all mankind, or at least all in this country, they should find landed proprietors refusing to their people, though not differing from them in matters of faith or doctrine,—though admitting the efficiency and devotedness of their pastors,—and the good effected by their labours—to allow them a foot of ground where they might erect fabrics in which to worship God and hear the word preached (applause)—telling them they were at liberty to leave their estates,—that they were not adstricti glebæ, slaves bound to the soil, taking credit to themselves that they were not,—though they attempted to put chains on the people's consciences. They might leave the homes of their childhood and the place of their father's graves, but they should not have a place to worship their God. He ardently hoped that this course would not be persisted in, but if it should they had made provision for it. There were two plans by which it was proposed to obviate this difficulty. The first was, that large tents had been provided, which would hold about 500 people, and which did not weigh more than four hundred weight—so that they might be carried from place to place in a small cart or boat, along the sea shore, from farm to farm, so that when driven from one quarter, they might escape this tyranny by transporting them to another. (Loud cheers.) In other places, it was proposed that some old vessels be anchored off the shore, in which the Gospel might be preached as occasion served (cheers), so that if not in the Queen's highway, yet in the world's highway, (loud cheers), they may be allowed to hear the Gospel declared, and then at least the proprietors could not take away the shelter of the promontories and little bays along the coast. (Loud cheers.) His Reverend Friend (Dr. M'Farlan,) who sat beside him, had just told him, that in Greenock they were on terms for the purchase of such a vessel. (Applause.) He could not think that this state of things would last, now that this has taken place. He could not believe that any man, with a heart, any Scotchman, would persevere in such a course of conduct. (Hear, hear.) It would bring down the indignation not only of our own country, but of the world. (Applause.) And even were it so, he did not believe that the Legislature would allow such tyranny to be persisted in.

Dr. Candlish gave in the Report of the Committee on the Statistical or Ecclesiastical Section of the Free Church. After mentioning the steps they had taken to ascertain the opinions of the different ecclesiastical bodies, he said, there have been various interesting facts brought out in these communications,—facts that must go, as far as facts can go, to convince an ungodly world of the reality and power of Christian principle. I cannot but repeat here what I have stated at other and smaller Meetings, that it is humbling to those whose sacrifices are comparatively insignificant—humbling to witness men making up their minds to leave the homes where they have dwelt in love and peace for years, and not merely to remove to some other town, or street, or cottage, but to be under the necessity of sending their families sixty or seventy miles from them, while they themselves must look out for some prophet's chamber, and occupy it in solitude, that they may still be near, and minister amongst their flocks. What more convincing proof of the sacrifice can be given than this, that for the purpose of visiting his people, we find a man making his home in a yacht, in which a cabin has been fitted up, living far apart from his family,—sailing from island to island, and from bay to bay,—having no home upon the land, but compelled to live upon the bosom of the deep? (Hear, and loud applause.) And yet these men make up their minds to such a sacrifice for the sake of the truth. The marvel is, that they seem unaware themselves of the sacrifice they are making; and they speak of these new arrangements just as they would speak of removing their houses from one street to another,—they speak of them with the same coolness and the same indifference with which you and I would speak of removing ourselves and our families to another part of the town. This is a part of the high and holy principle with which they are actuated,—this calm determination to meet and overcome every difficulty which is interposed in the path of duty. (Applause.) In our recent conferences with our brethren of the different Synods, we have endeavoured to come to an understanding as to the way in which their parishes may be best supplied; and in the great majority of instances, we are anxious that the ministers should remain in their present charges, and provide for the religious instruction of their own congregations. But we have found instances in which this is impossible, and in which not even the contrivance of a yacht can be available to continue the constant access of a minister to his people. In these cases it will be necessary that he should be transferred to another place, from which he may occasionally visit his people, and supply their wants by a succession of missionary tours. We shall be necessitated to fall on such plans, as shall enable a minister not only to supply his own people, but to move to different parishes around him, and afford to the population, as far as possible, the means of grace; and we hope to be enabled to show how all the people adhering to us in this country may be supplied with ordinances by ministers specially intrusted with the duty. A minister, for instance, will in many cases not only have charge of his own people, but many others around him, and, with the addition of a preacher assisting him, will afford supply on Sabbaths as regularly as possible. Here it may be right that I should mention a suggestion which has been made, and which, when duly matured, may be of vast practical importance and utility. In the Highlands especially, we find a universal opinion prevailing amongst our brethren, that it is indispensable that we should immediately take steps for reviving the order of readers or catechists, to whom might be entrusted the duty, under proper superintendence, of supplying occasional religious services. This, according to their Report, will often be a more effective way of providing the means of grace than we could otherwise hit upon by the employment of all the probationers in our service. In particular, I may mention that in some of those districts the employment of readers or catechists is rendered all the more desirable, because of the religious movement which has there recently begun, and which appears a manifest symptom of the outpouring of the Spirit of God on the revival of his work; and there are some of our brethren whose labours God has signally honoured. Amongst others, I cannot forbear the pleasure of referring to one of our brethren, whose exertions, both in his present and his former parish God has signally owned, and who, while connected with the Establishment, endured not a little persecution on that account. I allude to the former minister of Snizort, now the pastor of Bracadale. (Applause.) We have been accused of agitating Scotland by our tours through her different districts; but I hold in my hand evidence, if faithful testimony be of any weight at all, that while this holy man, and others purely minded, like himself, have been labouring largely in the different districts of the Highlands, and have been instrumental in bringing people to the Free Church, they have been still more instrumental in awakening them to the truth of Christianity. In these tours, Moderator,—in these missionary excursions—which our brethren have been making, we have a specimen of what we must all do in our state of freedom. These are the results which by the blessing of God, we may expect to follow on our labours. This testimony comes from entire districts in the Highlands; it comes from entire Presbyteries; it is their testimony, and it is enough to overbear all we have suffered, and all we have lost. It is their testimony that the breaking up of the Establishment is the dawning of the bright day of Gospel light on the people hitherto in darkness. (Immense applause.) The etiquette of parishes is no more to be observed. All that is valuable in the parochial system will be maintained, but we will have a better parochial economy. We will revive the order of deacons, and with our other means cultivate the country piecemeal; and one glorious result of this abandonment of parochial subdivisions is, that the man of God shall go freely forth over the country, without asking whether he trenches on a Moderate district or no, and proclaim to all, the Gospel of Christ. (Hear.) We shall send forth our evangelists in the spirit and on the errand of Timothy and of Titus, to plant our Church. I have only another remark to make, for, as I have said, this is not the time to enter into minute details. We have been endeavouring as we went along, to arrange not only, to the demand, but as to the supply which can be provided for the various districts; and for this purpose we must ascertain the number of preachers which are available fo them. In considering this subject, we have found that some ministers may be employed with great advantage. For instance, we have found that there is a great want of Gaelic ministers in the Synod of Argyle, and we propose to let loose upon it some of the Gaelic preachers from other parts of the Highlands. (A laugh, and applause.) We have endeavoured to take a note of the available preachers, and we find that in various Presbyteries where there is a great demand, there is a scanty supply; and it is absolutely necessary to put our hands to the work, to relieve all our available preachers from their present occupations and entanglements, and set them to work in preaching the Gospel of Christ over all the land. (Applause.) There is only this consideration, that some of these preachers, and some of the most devoted amongst them, hold the situation of parish schoolmasters. We have had the position of the parish schoolmasters under our most serious consideration, and a Committee was appointed on schools as well as on colleges, to inquire maturely into the matter. But in the meantime it does not seem desirable that parish schoolmasters adhering to our principles should take any precipitate steps in quitting their present position. It is not clear they can be compelled to do so. Unquestionably they lie under no moral obligation to do so. Their adherence to our Church does not amount to a forfeiture of their situations; and even though it did, they should wait at least till the arm of the law is brought to bear on them; for it is not our duty lightly to take any steps that may throw the education of our youth into the hands of those whose principles we have condemned. He concluded by suggesting that they might with advantage give those candidates for the ministry who were thought competent an immediate license to preach, without waiting for the usual formalities.

Dr. Chalmers, as Chairman of the Committee of Finance, made the following statement:—The direct donations from individuals amount to 61,673*l*. 5s. 3d. There is another channel through which donations come—they come to us through the medium of the Auxiliary Associations which are planted and planting in all parts of the country. I shall give an account of the state of these Associations presently; but, as I have mentioned that the donations are kept distinct from the annual contributions, I may here intimate, that in the matter of donations, we have received, through the medium of these Associations, the sum of 28,523*l*. Then comes the produce of what we call the "collecting week," which, we have ascertained, amounts to 14,576*l*. And summing all these into one, we find that the total of the donations actually reported amounts to 104,776*l*. 5s 3d. (Great applause.) This, you will remember, is for the Building Fund, except in some few instances, which have been most carefully marked, where the donations go to what we call the Sustentation Fund, which is distinct from the Building Fund, but the general rule is, that the donations go to the Building Fund, and the termly payments to the Sustentation Fund. Before stating the amount of the offers which have come to our knowledge in the second of these forms, that is, through the medium of Associations, let me first observe, that the number of these Associations, according to the latest information, is 687 (loud applause)—687 Associations in various parts of Scotland. Of these, 239—and the reports are coming in very rapidly—of these, I say, 239 have reported their termly subscriptions; "termly," I call them, because they may be given yearly, or half-yearly, or monthly, or weekly—all of which go to the Sustentation Fund; and they, it is found, amount, putting them all together, multiplying by 52—the weekly into the annual sum—these 239 Associations have reported as the total of their subscriptions which go to the Sustentation Fund, the sum of 17,525*l*. Again, 264 Associations have reported their donations to the General Building Fund, amounting to 28,523*l*. I have already stated, with regard to the Building Fund, that it consists of three distinct items—the direct donations made to the Committee—the donations given through the medium of the Associations, and the produce of the collecting week—which altogether amount to 104,776*l*. 5s. 3d. Whereas the amount of the direct contributions going to the Sustentation Fund, and inclusive of those from Glasgow, come to 22,606*l*. 1s. 8d., and of those coming through the medium of the Associations, as reported, 17,525*l*., giving a sum total actually reported, of 40,131*l*. 1s. 8d. (Great applause.) Now, recollect that reports are daily pouring in upon us—that of these Associations, some are not above two or three weeks old, and that some reports which have come in give no return at all; for they say, "we will not give in a return till we have thoroughly canvassed our district;" so that the great majority of these Associations—upwards of three hundred of them, all busily at work—have not made any report whatever, either of donations or of annual subscriptions. And, therefore, it is necessary that we should advert to those Associations which, although in existence, have not yet reported, and in doing so, we shall take as the ground of our calculations the average of those which have actually reported, multiplying that average by the number which have not yet reported, which will give us the whole sum which we are warranted to expect from all the Associations now in operation. The number of the Associations which have not yet reported, is not, I think, to be wondered at, if you consider, in many instances, their recent formation, the time required for going through and thoroughly canvassing a neighbourhood, and the efforts which have to be made in raising the money which has been tendered. To proceed, then, with our calculation: 28,523*l*. of donations, from 264 Associations, will give rise to an average of 108*l*. from each Association. Then there are 239 returns from Associations in behalf of the Sustentation Fund, and these amount in all to 17,525*l*., an average this of 73*l*. Therefore each Association contributes 73*l* a-year, and also presents a donation of 108*l*.,—and this supplies sufficient data for computing the whole amount of donations we may expect from the Associations now in existence, and also the amount of their annual produce. And in order to remove any impression from your minds, as if in all probability most of the richer Associations have already reported, being nearer at hand, and that it is only the poorer Associations that are in reserve, let me assure you that the truth is very much the reverse. (Hear, hear) We have got our reports chiefly from the village Associations, and from the Associations in agricultural parts of the country,—indeed, upon making inquiry this morning, they told me that only one or two returns had been received from Edinburgh; only two from Greenock; only one or two also from Glasgow; and the same from Aberdeen. (Hear, hear.) So that we have reason to believe, the average will be fully sustained; it is, indeed, continually fluctuating. We have an average struck every morning when the returns come in (laughter)—the first average was as low as 65*l*., and in course of time it became as high as 78*l*., but there has been a little regress since, it being now 73*l*. I confidently anticipate, however, that the average will be fully sustained in the returns of the Associations that are to follow—for experience has already made it palpable, and is making it more and more so every day—that these Associations will prove the sheet anchor, as it were, of the financial prosperity of our Protesting Church—their individual contributions may be small, but the aggregate produce of them all will come to a much mightier sum than you will arrive at by casting up all the donations which the rich throw into the treasury. (Great applause.) Well, then, taking the average donation of the Associations which have already reported as the ground of our calculations, we find that the total amount of the donations to be expected from all the 687 Associations now at work, is 74,080*l*., from which if you substract 28,523*l*. already reported, you have in prospect 45,565*l*. not reported. Then the total of the yearly subscriptions which, on the same principle, you may reckon on from these Associations, is 50,078*l*., from which if you substract 17,525*l*. already reported, you may yet fairly expect 32,553*l*. from these Associations, busily at work, but which have not yet reported. This calculation enables me to present the following summation of the whole. First, 45,565*l*. to be added to what is already reported, viz., 104,776*l*. 5s. 3d. of donations for the Building Fund, will present a grand total of 150,341*l*. 5s. 3d. Then by adding the sum of 32,553*l*. to be expected in the form of annual receipts not yet reported, from Associations which have as yet sent no returns,—adding that to the sum already reported of 40,131*l*. 1s. 8d. will give us the grand total of annual receipts, 72,687*l*. 1s. 8d. (Great applause.) I know that some are fond of slumping the one of these funds with the other; but it is better to keep them separate, for they are quite heterogeneous—the one being a mere donation, the other an annual subscription, and far greater, consequently, in point of value. But as a proof of the zeal of the country in our cause—and remember we have only been a very few months in operation—let it be understood that the application which we have made to a generous population, has been responded to with an intensity and force to which we can give a numerical expression—for by adding the one sum to the other, we are able altogether to present you with the truly magnificent sum of 223,028*l*. 6s. 11d. (Loud and continued cheers.) Now, that this average, and therefore the total amount, will not only be upheld, but greatly increased, we are warranted to hope from two considerations: first, because within the sphere of each Association already formed there are so many individuals, more or less, and, in some instances, a very great number, who have promised either to begin their subscriptions for the first time, or to subscribe far more liberally than they have yet done, in the event of the disruption taking place; and, secondly, because we have reason to expect, with equal confidence, that the incredulity which has kept so firm a hold of so many understandings, shall at length be overborne by an ocular demonstration of the actual reality, which it can no longer withstand, and it is very likely that you will not only get an increase in the amount of your subscriptions from the Associations already in existence, but also from the great positive increase in the number of Associations, seeing that the country may be said to be still little more than half organised. We have further to add, that besides the sums which we have had it in our power to report, we have been made aware of the exertions which are making in many different localities, and of the liberalities there received for the sustentation of their own peculiar minister. There is a great deal done that does not come our way at all,—a great deal that we do not hear of, and which, not being formally communicated to us, is not entered as a constituent part of our General Fund. We can have no doubt that under the strong impulse of an affection for the Christian good of their own neighbourhood, and, let me add, of a natural as well as Christian affection for their own ministers, there have occurred many instances of generosity which are not yet reported, and which will, in all probability, remain untold, until that day which shall reveal all hidden things—that day on which we must all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ, and be reckoned with for the things done in the body, whether they be good or evil. I will not enter at present, indeed I am not prepared for doing so, on the matter of practical suggestions; that I will defer till our final Report is brought up, after the various Meetings of Committee which I have already mentioned, where it will be fully considered. I beg now to detain the Assembly with one general observation. Had the goodly result which I have to-day presented to you been a few months ago spoken of as either possible, or probable, the anticipation would have been regarded, as in fact my expressed conviction at that time generally was regarded, as a vision of Utopia. (Laughter.) We know not what the feelings of such are now, when, instead of presenting the matter to the eyes of their understanding, we place it before the eye of their senses. Sure we are, it has been far easier practically to do the thing, than it was to convince the people that the thing was practicable. (Laughter.) The difficulty lay not in the doing of the work when begun, but wholly in getting it begun—not in the execution of the process after its commencement, but in overcoming the incredulity which stood as a barrier in the way of its commencement. It was in virtue of this incredulity and consequent inertness, that a whole quarter of a year was lost to the cause of our financial preparations. And though now we are entered on the work, and have advanced so far with a gathering and growing prosperity, there is not one instance, we believe, of any man having made what he himself feels—though others may think so—to be a romantic exertion, and very few have the feeling of having made a romantic sacrifice. The whole result has been arrived at by a series of the easiest and most practicable stepping-stones; and let us hope that many of the incredulous will learn from this,—and it will be a great enlargement of their practical wisdom, —will learn to discriminate for the future between the Utopian on the one hand, and the experimental on the other, and how to pronounce aright between the utterances of a sanguine imagination, and the words of truth and soberness. (Great applause.) After some further remarks to the same effect, he said,—Before I conclude, I have one thing to state, to which I would request the attention of any of our Voluntary friends who may be here present. I don't know anything that has more annoyed me than the report of the speech I gave from the chair, in which I am represented as saying, that I can hold no communion with those who hold the Voluntary principle. Now, I said no such thing. I don't ask them to renounce their principle, and all I ask at their hands is, that they will not ask me to renounce my principle. It was a point of difference between us; but I expressly said, that it was a point upon which we could agree to differ. We can hold communion with those who think that there should be no connexion between the Church and State,—though we can hold no communion with those who think that there should be such connexion, even though the State should send its influence to the theology of the Church, so as to make it different from the pure theology that comes directly to us from the fountain-head of truth. I hope that this explanation will suffice for the removal of any misunderstanding that may have been excited from the perusal of this very grievous misreport, which, I must say, has annoyed me exceedingly. I say that we may be engaged in a common cause and that there may be a common coadjutorship. There is room for us all; and, while walking side by side, and making attempts upon the vast out-field of our population, we may take a lesson from the missionaries, who, from the time they arrive in a foreign land, forget their differences, which are all absorbed in a great common object,—the Christianizing of the people of the country where they labour. Agreeably to the excellent distinction that there is a difference between co-operation and incorporation, we are, perhaps, not yet come the length of incorporation; but, in the meanwhile, there may be the most cordial, the most entire co-operation. It would be a noble thing if the members of all Evangelical denominations would desiderate this to the uttermost. Look at the Saviour's prayer in the seventeenth chapter of John, where the success of Christianity in the world is made to hinge, not merely upon a real and vital, but upon an ostensible union among Christians such a union as that the world, in virtue of seeing it, would be turned to the faith of the Gospel; and therefore, I say, that there should be no barrier in the way of an ostensible union of co-operation, although it may be the work of years before that union can be so complete as to come to incorporation. I have only to say, that there is room for us all—for our own labourers, and those of other Evangelical denominations; and I trust we will forget all unessential differences, and join our forces, and make common cause upon the masses of irreligion and profligacy that have of late so accumulated in these lands.—Record.

LONDON RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.—WILLIAM JONES, Esq. the Corresponding Secretary and Superintendent, then read an abstract of the report. It briefly referred to the operations of the Society and its auxiliaries in China, Java, Burmah, Assam, India, Ceylon, Australasia, New Zealand, South Sea Islands, West and South Africa, Spanish America, West Indies, New Providence, the United States of America, British North America, Newfoundland, Labrador, France, Switzerland, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Hungary, Carinthia, Lower Saxony, Wirtemberg, Iceland, Denmark, Russia, the Mediterranean, and adjacent countries. In noticing the home proceedings, the committee expressed their regret at the retirement of Mr. John Davis, the Society's superintendent, the duties of which office he discharged for nearly twenty-four years, in a faithful and conscientious manner. The following grants of publications were reported:—For Sabbath-day circulation, soldiers, sailors, and rivermen; Home Missionary, District Visiting, City and Town Missions, Christian Instruction, and other kindred societies; British emigrants, prisoners, hospitals, workhouses, railway workmen, fairs, races, foreigners in England, special occasions at public executions, convict-ships, and other important objects, amounting to 1,677,936. Grants to Scotland, Wales, and Ireland, 302,557. The value of the foregoing grants is 2,668*l.* 18*s.* 106 libraries have been granted during the year to schools, destitute districts, and union-houses; also a grant of books, value 60*l.*, at half-price, has been made to form libraries for the police. The report further stated the proposals of the committee for the formation of factory libraries, and the issue of cheap books, and their efforts to counteract those principles which are opposed to the Reformation. The new publications of the year were 218. Publications circulated amount to 16,469,551; making the total circulation of the Society, in nearly 90 languages, including the issues of foreign societies assisted by the Parent Institution, to amount to nearly 377,000,000. The total benevolent income of the year amounts to 4980*l.* 15*s.* 10d; special donations received for China, to 31st March, 1,747*l.* 4s. 4d; proceeds of sales, 43,064*l.* 14s. 9d. Gratuitous issues amount to 6,649*l.* 7*s.* 1d.; being 1,668*l.* 11s. 3d. beyond the amount of benevolent contributions, without any charge or expenses whatever thereon. Legacies, 999*l.* 19*s.* Total receipts, 52,605*l.* 7*s.* 9d.—Pat.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—The Rev. R. Ainslie then read the report, which began by referring to some general matters that have engaged the attention of the committee. A tract had been addressed to the policemen of London, and a copy given to every one of them—above 6,000 in all—a body of men exposed to great temptations, and with few opportunities of attending public worship, even if disposed. Each division of the police force had also been supplied with a library, the expense being divided between this Society and the Religious Tract Society. The suppression of the fairs near the metropolis, and of the profligacy of the Almonry and other places, and the subject of Sabbath desecration, were then referred to, and the steps taken were stated. The Society had now eighty-two missionaries employed; were there four hundred, they could only visit each family among the humbler classes once in about four weeks. After narrating several particular cases at length, the report proceeded to classify the results of the year's labour, as follows:—1. Cases of outward reformation of dishonest, intemperate, profane, and wicked persons; these were 486 in number. 2. Persons who formerly made a public profession of religion, but had lapsed into a state of iniquity: 111 such had been reclaimed. 3. Children sent to different Sabbath-schools; the number was 2,898. 4. Instances of benefit and usefulness among the neglected poor in the time of affliction and death; 532 persons had died, not one of whom had any spiritual instruction or consolation, but from the lips of the missionaries; 1,409 adults visited had died, and 363 of these cases were truly hopeful; the number of visits paid to the afflicted and dying was 27,197; a black man, a Mahomedan, had been converted to the Christian faith, and died in a good hope; this was the second instance of the conversion of a Mahomedan in London, the first being one of the men who brought over the giraffes to the Surrey Zoological Gardens. 5. The prayer meetings held in the houses of the poor were 8,606; persons induced to attend public worship, who before neglected it, 1,268; forming a large congregation if collected together; tracts given away, 411,824. 6. Persons met with in health, and truly converted, as is hoped, though they have not yet publicly united themselves with any Christian Church; the number of these was 206; there were also 141 instances of persons met with in affliction, now recovered, and giving evidence that their affliction was sanctified to them. 7. Persons that had been led, through the instrumentality of the Mission, to make a public profession of Christianity; these were 163. The total number of visits paid by the missionaries was 364,369. The missionaries had formed a fund, from which the widow of one of them dying would receive about 40*l.*, but there was no provision for a superannuated missionary; on this subject a resolution would be submitted to the meeting. The receipts of the mission for the year were 6,741*l.*, 5*s.* 5d., being an increase of 1,202*l.* over the preceding year; the expenditure was 6,092*l.* 12*s.* 9d. The committee have to trust to casual donations for 2,000*l.* a-year, which they are bound to provide. An elderly female, in humble circumstances, had put by a farthing a-day, and sent, as her contribution for the year, 365 farthings; and the Tash-street Working Men's Association had paid in 44*l.* towards the support of a missionary, in St. Gile's. The report, which was much cheered throughout, concluded by asking whether any Christian could be so enslaved by laws and regulations not to be found in the Bible, and therefore laying claim only to human authority, as to refuse to assist in saving souls by what he deems an irregular method, and cover, as with a black cloud, all on whom his own church cannot or will not shed her light. (Much cheering.)—Pat.

BAPTIST UNION.—The annual public meeting of this body was held at New Park-street Chapel, Southwark, on Friday evening, April 28. The Rev. Dr. Godwin, of Oxford (chairman of the Union for the session,) presided, and the usual array of Baptist ministers and other gentlemen presented itself on the platform. The meeting was thinly attended, the weather being wet and discouraging.

The service commenced by singing the 133rd Psalm, and prayer, by the Rev. T. Morris, of Portsea. The Chairman then opened the business by a few general remarks, and called upon

The Rev. J. H. Hinton, one of the secretaries, to address the meeting. Mr. Hinton said, that one object of the Union was to obtain, from year to year, statistical information concerning the Baptist denomination at large, so as to be able to take for themselves, and to present to the public, a general view of the body with which they were connected. An attempt towards this had been made on an extended scale in 1838 and 1839, the result of which was published in the report of 1840. During the last year a similar effort had been made: and the returns, although still very imperfect, made a much nearer approximation to completeness than the former. He then presented to the meeting the following view of the state of the Baptist denomination in the United Kingdom, as derived from the returns now received:—

| Number of churches:— | | |
|---|---|---|
| | In England....... | 1310 |
| | In Wales.... .. | 257 |
| | In Scotland... ... | 73 |
| | In Ireland ........ | 36 |
| | | 1675 |

Number of churches in associations, 1006, Churches formed within the last three years, 105.

1418 churches return their number of members, amounting to 131,272, and giving an average of 92 in each church. If this average be applied to the whole number of churches, it gives a total of 154,100. This may be taken as representing a population of four times the number, or 616,400.

1141 churches return the number of Sunday scholars, amounting to 142,027. At the same ratio, the number in all the churches would be about 210,000.

600 churches report their village stations, amounting to 1527. At the same ratio, the total number would be 4151.

960 churches report a clear increase during the last year, amounting to 10,402; 179 churches report a clear decrease, amounting to 763; and 135 churches report their numbers unchanged. The actual clear increase for the year, reported by 1274 churches, is 9369.

The average clear increase in these churches during the year, is about seven and a half; or the clear increase per cent. about eight and a quarter. At this ratio, the clear annual increase of the whole body would be 12,558.

From the returns of the Associations it appears that the gross increase of the churches is to the clear increase nearly as 13 to 8; so that the gross increase of the denomination during the last year may be estimated at 20,224, or about 12 to each church. From the same returns it appears that, of the gross increase, four-fifths (or more than 16,000 during the last year) are received on profession—that is, with few exceptions, by baptism.

To be combined with this ratio and amount of increase are some antagonist facts. Within the last three years not less than sixty churches have become extinct, leaving a net augmentation of only 45. Of 1144 churches reported in detail, 314 have not had any clear increase; and of these 314, 179 have suffered a diminution. Applying this ratio to the entire number, 450 churches, more than one-fourth of the whole, must be deemed to have had no clear increase; and 224, more than one-eighth of the whole, to have experienced a decrease. These facts evince that the denomination prospers locally rather than generally, and show what might be expected, if the success now vouchsafed to many of the churches might be enjoyed by all.

The preceding calculations are liable to some modifications. Sixty churches have in three years become extinct; but, with small exceptions, the members of these have been added to other Baptist churches, and are not lost to the denomination. They go, however, to make up its apparent increase. Within three years, 105 new churches have been formed; but these were composed of members of other churches, and this number goes in diminution of their apparent loss. The returns of the associations show 1643 dismissed by letter of commendation, and 1871 received in the same method, within the last year; but this is to a great extent—almost wholly—an interchange between Baptist churches, and neither loss nor gain to the body. The same returns show 1830 excluded from fellowship, and 1013 restored to it; the latter item so far cancelling the former. 505 are reported as withdrawn; and these have generally found place in some other church of the same communion. It is not possible at present to reduce these modifications to numerical expression.—Pat.

FERNANDO PO.—We understand that the committee of the Baptist Missionary Society have purchased the property of the West African Company on this island. It consists of their settlement at Clarence, with several buildings adapted for schools and mission premises. The contract for the vessel to be employed in the mission on that coast has been obtained by Mr. John Laird, of Liverpool. Several members of Christian churches in Jamaica are expected to leave for Fernando Po during the course of the summer.—Ibid.

LANCASHIRE INDEPENDENT COLLEGE.—The services connected with the opening of the beautiful structure erected at Withington, near Manchester, under the name of "The Lancashire Independent College," took place on Tuesday and Wednesday.

This course of education is to be given under the personal superintendence of three Professors. The Professorship in Theology has been bestowed on the Rev. Robert Vaughan, D. D., of Kensington, (late Professor of History in the University of London,) who will also take the title of President of the College. The chair of Biblical Criticism has been bestowed on the Rev. Sam. Davidson, LL.D., from the Belfast Institution. Mr. Charles Peter Mason, B.A., of the London University, has been appointed Professor of General Literature. The Professors of Theology and Biblical Criticism have residences provided for them in the College. The term of study is to be five years: it being understood that each student, on entering the College, shall have an acquaintance with Virgil, the Greek Testament, and the first three books of Euclid. The College, we have been informed, will be connected with the London University. The College is erected on a scale sufficient to accommodate 52 students, but as one wing of the building will not be completed till the remainder of the funds has been realised, it is proposed to commence with 25 students. It was at first proposed to endow the institution with sufficient funds to board the students, and it was estimated that for this purpose a sum of about 3,000*l.* per annum would be required: a further consideration of the matter, however, has led to a different arrangement, and the Education Committee, in their last published report, we perceive, have recommended that six of the 25 students should be in a condition of life to support themselves (it being supposed that about 30*l.* per annum will be sufficient); that six others be received on the recommendation of the various churches, the required amount for maintenance being guaranteed by such churches; that seven should be received from an association to be established on the principle of the American Educational Societies, for the purpose of raising the necessary funds; that three be taken upon scholarships which it is intended to found; and it is expected that the remaining three vacancies will be filled up by young men whose expenses wealthy individuals connected with the body may undertake to guarantee from their private purses. The building is so contrived that by completing the quadrangle, fifty students, in addition, might be accommodated whenever circumstances shall require.—Manchester Times, Apl. 29.

TAHITI.—House of Commons, 18th May.—Lord Ashley presented a petition from the Wesleyan Society of London, praying for protection for the missionaries at Tahiti.

Sir G. Grey then moved for certain papers respecting the French occupation of Tahiti. He understood that his motion would not be opposed, and the papers it related to went only to show what were the recent proceedings of the French government, and what was more important, to calm the feelings of just apprehension entertained by many in this country for the fate of the British missionaries on the island. He could not move for these papers without bearing his testimony to the invaluable men, who for fifty years had been labouring for the promotion of Christianity. (Hear, hear.) These men had been supported by the voluntary contributions of Christians in this country, who took a deep interest in their welfare, and who looked with considerable apprehension to the establishment of French sovereignty in Tahiti. He trusted these apprehensions were without foundation, but he thought it material they should bear in mind the changes which had been effected by these missionaries. The following was the testimony of Admiral Duperre, who visited the island in 1819, and says, in a letter addressed to the then Minister of Marine; "The state of the Island of Tahiti is now very different from what it was in the days of Cook The missionaries of the Society of London have entirely changed the manners and customs of the inhabitants. Idolatry exists no longer; they profess generally the Christian religion; the women no longer come on board the vessels, and they are very reserved on all occasions. Their marriages are celebrated in the same manner as in Europe, and the King confines himself to one wife. The women are also admitted to the table with their husbands. The infamous Society of the Arreois exists no longer; the bloody wars in which the people engaged, and human sacrifices, have entirely ceased since 1816. All the natives can read and write, and have religious books translated into their language, printed either at Tahiti, Ulitea, or Eimeo. They have built handsome churches, where they remain twice in the week, and show the greatest attention to the discourses of the preacher. It is common to see numerous individuals take notes of the most interesting passages of the sermon they hear. The subjects of Queen Pomare have been already initiated in the rudiments of European civilization. The English missionaries have instructed them in the dogmas of Christianity, and have given them some notion of our arts and our laws. Their garments are like ours; reading and writing are in common use amongst them, and the children are brought up in schools on the Lancasterian plan. They possess a code which guarantees the right of individuals, as well as of property, and which establishes trial by jury. The people have only required twenty years to become the most enlightened of the Polynesian populations." He could, in addition, state one fact, which was most honourable to those men, and that was, that they did not possess a foot of land. They looked to moral and social advantages alone. He hoped that the professions recently announced by a distinguished member of the French Government—and he had no doubt sincerely entertained—would be faithfully acted upon; but he confessed he thought it was to our own government the missionaries had to look, and he trusted that the Government would not be found inattentive to their protection. He concluded by moving for the papers.

Lord Ashley seconded the motion, and cordially concurred in the praises which his right hon. friend had bestowed on the missionaries. They had achieved, he thought, the greatest miracle of modern times.

Mr. Hindley expressed a hope that the French might not be allowed to take possession of all the islands.

Sir R. Peel was ready, on the part of the Government, to confirm, by his testimony, all the praise which had been given to the missionaries. Their exertions had been very great and very meritorious. The Government, he could say, had not neglected the opportunity of obtaining from the French Government assurances of its intentions; and they were obtained in writing, so that they might be placed on the records of their country. They were to this effect: "The French Government remains faithful to the three great principles it has ever professed and upheld: first, to afford perfect liberty of worship; secondly, to give all the protection that is due to the subjects of a friendly power; and lastly, to favour the labours of all those bodies who are extending the benefits of Christianity." It was a great advantage to have obtained those official declarations from the French Government, which enabled him to lay before the British Parliament, in an official form, the solemn assurances which had been received by her Majesty's Government from the Government of France.

Viscount Palmerston said the circumstances of the case required that a clear understanding should be come to with the French Government. The differences between that Government and the Queen of Tahiti begun by a difference between the missionaries of the two religions. The French sent Catholic missionaries to Tahiti, which missionaries were expelled from Tahiti by the native Government. The French Government thought that the banishment was caused by our missionaries, and the difference arose between the French and the Native Governments, in consequence of the differences between the missionaries. He thought, therefore, that it would be right to procure a pledge from the French Government that the Protestant ministers should not be disturbed.

The Address moved by Sir G. Grey was then agreed to.—Pat.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE WEALTHIEST COMMONER.—The late Mr. Richard Arkwright was the only son of Sir R. Arkwright, the father and founder of the "factory system" as it now exists. He succeeded to all the possessions and numerous spinning factories on the death of Sir Richard, in 1792, then estimated at the value, capital stock included, of about 500,000*l.* sterling. As the profits of cotton spinning then, and for years afterwards, were counted by shillings per pound, instead of by farthings, as now, except in the finer counts, it may be safely asserted that by his extensive spinneries in Cromford, Bakewell, and Manchester alone, he could not have derived a less clear income than 100,000*l.* per annum. The extensive works at Manchester he disposed of in favour of his managers, Messrs. Barton and Simpson, who both realized large fortunes. He gave up the spinning works at Bakewell some five or six years ago, only to parties, who it is believed, had been long in his service; but those at Cromford, near his own residence, he carried on, as understood, to the time of his death. Mr. R. Arkwright, besides various other concerns highly prosperous for the most part, was the principal, if not sole proprietor, of some banking establishments in the counties of Derby and Nottingham. From taste, and not from niggardly notions of saving, he lived without the least ostentatious display; the scale of his household expenditure is supposed not to have exceeded 3,000*l.* per annum, of which the larger portion was laid out upon his gardens, on which he prided himself; so that by the natural and equable force of accumulation during 52 years, even had not 1*l.* of surplus income been re-invested and made to bear interest, he must still have been possessed of millions. He was probably the last of the historic names connected and coeval with the foundation of what are now designated the factory and power systems. The fate of those first fathers of the cotton-spinning and manufacturing system who have most contributed to its progress and prosperity by their inventions, improvements, or enterprise, has, however, been very dissimilar and unequal. The late Sir R. Peel, who may be esteemed the head, if not the parent, of calico-printing, realized and bequeathed a large fortune to his descendants. The mountain of wealth accumulated by Mr. Arkwright has already been referred to; but Hargreaves, the inventor of the "spinning jenny," died in but middling circumstances. Samuel Crompton, the inventor of the "mule" frame, which has carried the art of spinning yarn to its greatest perfection, died in poverty, notwithstanding a Parliamentary grant of 5,000*l.* in 1812, which melted away through the misfortunes of his sons in the business in which, by means of this grant, he established them. And, lastly, the late Mr. W. Radcliffe, of Stockport (whose death occurred only last year), the inventor of the "dressing-machines" and veritable father of the "power-loom" system—for, until the epoch of that invention, the power-loom was powerless and impracticable—perished in almost abject poverty; a fact reflecting no small discredit on the opulent manufacturers of Manchester, who, after plundering him of his invention, by the unscrupulous appropriation of which they enriched themselves, might surely have let fall a few crumbs from their own overloaded tables to comfort the old age and penury of the man they contributed to sink into pauperism. Nor, indeed, is such a melancholy fact more creditable to a great nation, or a Government wielding its destinies. The Board of Trade, or the Treasury, did indeed—we record the fact with the deepest feelings of sorrow and shame—at the last moment, through some indirect application, award the beggarly sum of 150*l.* Fast progressing towards his 80th year, and borne down by age, misfortunes, and infirmity, when the intelligence of this munificent token of national remembrance was broken to him it proved too much for the suffering old man; it was like mockery upon misery; and so poor Mr. Radcliffe drew his last breath on the very day, it is said, but if not, within one or two days after; the 150*l.* came opportunely and mercifully to provide a coffin and grave-stone for the dead, and save from the scandal of a parish pauper-burial.—Pat.

THE LATE DUKE OF SUSSEX.—In a letter to the Cheltenham Examiner, Sir A. B. Faulkner makes the following statement concerning the deceased Prince: —On religious subjects, I need hardly observe, he was especially communicative; and everybody knows how conversant he was with theological lore. Of all his conversations relating to religion, I recollect none more animated and impressive than in speaking of the talents of Dr. Wardlaw, whose lectures on Church and State were making a great sensation at the time. The doctor's views on the connexion between Church and State were an echo of his own. He attended his lectures, and strongly recommended me to hear him. The object uppermost in his thoughts, in comparison of which all other considerations and the policy of states weighed but as a feather, was the advancing the interests of Christianity; and no reasons of state received any quarter at his hands, which in any degree or manner tended to impair the authority or weaken the influence over the heart of a religion, which, when administered in the spirit of its Divine Founder, he designated as "the greatest boon of Heaven to mankind." Holding such a sentiment, we may easily conclude what he must have thought of the priestism, the indolence and the intolerant conduct of so many of our clergy, fenced by an irresponsibility against which the voice of the people avails so little. Intolerance, in any form or disguise, whether of direct oppression, or in the more mitigated aspect of cut-and-dry creeds and Pusey Popery, had his cordial abhorrence. With the devotion of a martyr, he disregarded all consequences, setting his face against oppression and misrule, wherever he found it, irrespective of persons, or station, or office. I never heard him indulge a vein of more earnest indignation than in speaking of some of the turn-coat patriots of the Reform Bill.—Ibid.

THE CORN LAW QUESTION.—The adjourned debate on Mr. Villier's motion was resumed in the Commons on Monday, and, after being carried on till a late hour, was finally closed by a division, in which 125 Members voted for the motion, and 381 against it: majority, 256.

The speech of the night was Mr. Cobden's, the great merit of which consisted in its plain, unvarnished, but pointed and telling exposure the hypocrisy and selfishness of the soi-disant "Farmer's Friends." So much homely truth was never, perhaps, addressed, in that House, to the ears polite of aristocratic law-makers. Referring to the Petition he had presented from 3,000 Dorsetshire farmers, signed by the chairman, a landholder, praying for the repeal of the Cornlaws, Mr. Cobden, said: "This can be no longer treated as a farmers' question. We will have it put upon a proper footing from this very night." The House laughed at this; and the Hon. Member's speech elicited frequent laughter, alternating with groans, and oh! oh! from the Conservative side, and cheers from the Opposition; but straight onward he held his course, compelling attention, and regardless of the rude impatience manifested by the young gentlemen who grace the Ministerial benches. He challenged his opponents to show what benefit the farmer had ever derived from the Corn-laws. "I have asked the question," he said, "of hundreds and thousands of farmers; and as I am now in the presence of landlords, I ask it of you." And the landlords whom he thus addressed, must have felt that they could not answer the question. They well know that the law was passed for their own interest and protection alone, and that all the promised profits of the deceived farmers have been absorbed into rent. Mr. Cobden told them plainly, that the League were making friends with the farmers, who are "growing sick of the political landlords;" and that, with the aid of the farmers, they would carry the repeal. "Whatever might be the fate of the motion," he said, "however small the minority in its favour, it will not have the slightest effect upon the progress of public opinion. The League will go on as they have hitherto done. In the course of our agitation, we may probably dissolve Parliaments and Ministries; but still public opinion upon the subject cannot be checked; and if there be any force in truth and justice, it will go on to an ultimate and not distant triumph." Bold language, but not more bold than true; and of its truth, coming events which cast their shadows before, will be the sure expositors.

Mr. Cobden's speech had no effect of course on the division, for rarely indeed is a single vote determined by any force of argument or power of eloquence in that House. It seems, however, to have told; and the forlorn hope of the Corn law squirearchy, the Post, is ludicrously pathetic on the occasion:

"Melancholy," remarks our Contemporary, "was the exhibition in the House of Commons on Monday. Mr. Cobden was the hero of the night. Towards the close of the debate, he rose in his place, and hurled at the heads of the Parliamentary landowners of England, those calumnies and taunts which constitute the staple of his addresses to farmers. The taunts were not retorted. The calumnies were not repelled. No: the Parliamentary representatives of the industrial interest of the British empire quailed before the founder and leader of the Anti-Corn-law League. They winced under his sarcasms. They listened in speechless terror to his denunciations. No man among them dared to grapple with the arch-enemy of English industry. No man among them attempted to refute the miserable fallacies of which Mr. Cobden's speech was made up! . . . Melancholy was it to witness, on Monday, the landowners of England—the representatives by blood of the Norman chivalry—the representatives by election, of the industrial interests of the empire—shrinking under the blows aimed at them by a Manchester money-grubber; by a man whose importance is derived from the action of a system, destructive in its nature, of all the wholesome influences that connect together the various orders of society."

The Post forgets one chivalrous Norman, who stood up against the Saxon commoner—the wise and whiskered Col. Sibthorpe.—Pat.

Mortality Tables.—The quarterly table of the mortality in 114 of the principal town and city districts of England has just issued from the General Register-office. The return is derived from 114 districts, 33 of which comprise the metropolis, and the remaining 81 districts comprise the principal towns and cities of England. At the last census (June 6, 1841) the enumerated population of the 114 districts was 6,534,535, or nearly four-tenths of the total population. The average annual number of deaths registered in the 114 districts was 163,193, or 47 per cent. of the total deaths registered annually in England. The population in these town districts increased from 1831 to 1841 at the rate of about 1,74 per cent. annually. The mortality attained its maximum in the year 1840, and was the lowest in the year 1842. Out of 100,000 persons living in the towns and cities of England, about 2,658 died in the year 1840, and only 2,420 in the year 1842. The reduction was 238 in 2,658, or 9 per cent. on the rate of mortality. Upon an average 2 61 in 100 (or 1 in 38) living died annually in the three years 1838, 1839, and 1840; and 2.43 in 100 living (or 1 in 41) died annually in the two years 1841 and 1842. The average number of deaths registered in the five winters—1838, 1839, 1840, 1841, and 1842, was 45,144. After a correction for the increase of population, the winter average applicable to 1843 becomes 47,542. The number of deaths which occurred in the winter quarter 1843 was 43,466. In the metropolis the mortality is still less than the average, and the deaths in the quarter by epidemic diseases (2,071) were 363 less than the average of the five preceding winters. The epidemic diseases most frequently mentioned by the registrars in the country are typhus, scarlatina, and hooping-cough.—Ibid.

Vested Interests of the Wesleyans in Education.—The Wesleyans have embarked a large amount of capital in the work of Day and Sabbath-school education. Without Government aid, they have built and furnished a great number of schools, and have supported them in a state of efficiency by their free contributions. Of Wesleyan Day-schools, there are in England and Wales—

Boys' schools, 119, being a reported increase in two years of . . . 52
Girls' schools, 115 . . . . 75
Infant schools, 28 . . . 4
Total number of children, 18,533 . 7,071

Of Wesleyan Sunday-schools, there are in England and Wales—

3,522, being a reported increase in two years of . . 78
Libraries, 1,018 . . . . . 27
Teachers, 70,551 . . . . . 6,365

There are in these schools 374,611 scholars; and they are supported at an annual expense of 21,271*l.* 5*s.* 9½*d.* To all these aggregates are to be added the amounts from seventeen circuits not reported. In the Factory Districts, there are 58 boys' Day schools, 54 girls' Day schools, 20 Infant schools; and, in the whole, 10,061 children. There are 956 Sunday schools, having attached to them 372 libraries, for the use of teachers and children during the week; there are 28,304 teachers, and 147,194 children under their care. These schools are supported at an expense to the Wesleyans of 9,792*l.* 14*s.* The amount of property invested in buildings for Day and Sunday-schools in Leeds alone, is 11,540*l.* Besides this, they have numerous schools in the adjacent villages.—Wesleyan Chronicle.

The Education Clauses.—Mr. Roebuck then brought forward his Resolution upon the subject of National Education, which led to a very important debate. Sir James Graham remarked, that the real resolution, its point and pith, was in the first line and a half: "That, in no plan of Education maintained and enforced by the State, should any attempt be made to inculcate peculiar religious opinions." He resisted this proposition on the ground, that, "as a Minister of the Crown, the Crown being the head of the Church, he should be betraying his duty, were he to make any concession on this point." Mr. Sheil made an eloquent speech, in which he adverted to the intestine changes now taking place in the Established Church itself, as justifying the excitement which prevailed among the Dissenters; and described the Factories Bill as an innovation on the principle laid down in the statute for the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts. Mr. Hawes, while he dissented from the terms of the Resolution, regretted the indiscreet scheme and the indiscreet declaration of the Right Honourable Secretary. Sir Robert Inglis, on the contrary, was only sorry that Sir James Graham had not proposed a grant at the close of his admirable speech! Mr. Roebuck, in his reply, said, the Right Hon. Secretary of State had, by his declaration of that evening, sealed the fate of his Bill. (Hear, hear.) "There was now no mistake: the domination of the Church of England was the thing sought to be established by that Bill." The Resolution was negatived by a majority of 156 against 60, several Liberal Members voting in the majority, as not approving of the terms of the Resolution in reference to religious instruction.—Pat.

Canada.—The Canada papers contain accounts of the instalment of Sir Charles Metcalfe, at Kingston. He had not developed the line of policy he intended to pursue. His predecessor, Sir Charles Bagot, had so far recovered as to be able to walk in-doors. He would return to England as soon as his health would permit. The Warspite, Lord John Hay, had arrived at New York to convey him home.

The Montreal Herald announces, that hereafter Montreal will be the seat of Government of Canada, and the necessary Government offices, and a Parliament House, will be commenced as soon as the plans can be prepared. Quebec will be the military head-quarters.—Ibid.

The Siamese Twins have been residing for several years past in North Carolina, where they purchased a plantation. We had not heard of them for a long time, when we received a letter on Friday from a correspondent in North Carolina, informing us that they had entered into a state of double blessedness Our Correspondent says—"On Thursday, April 13th, were married, at Wilkes County, North Carolina, by Elder Colby Sparks, of the Baptist Church, Messrs. Chang and Eng, the Siamese twin brothers, to Misses Sarah and Adelaide, daughters of Mr. David Yeates, of Wilkes County, North Carolina." Whether the happy quadruple started on a journey to pass off the honeymoon, or remained at home, we are not informed.—Ibid.

France.—The professors of the University are everywhere up in arms against the zealots of the clergy, especially against the Bishop of Chartres, who has accused them of teaching every crime, from murder to the "most disgusting voluptuousness." M. Michelet has thundered from his professor's chair in the Sorbonne against the declamation of the episcopal pulpit of Chartres. And, in return for the bishop's denunciation of the pantheism of the University, certain universitarians have published extracts from certain volumes drawn up for the instruction of young priests in the duties of the confessional. The Débats gives most disgusting extracts from these books, calculated to cause a strong reaction against the clergy in France. The Débats rightly says, that since 1830 the clergy have recovered from the unpopularity which their supposed connexion with an oppressive Government up to that year entailed upon them. The hardihood and unscrupulousness with which they have now attacked the University and the administration of public instruction have, however, awakened their old enemies; and we much fear that the French are recommencing the old circuit of the last century. The attempt to resuscitate Loyola is sure to resuscitate at the same time the spirit, if not the talents, of Pascal and Voltaire. M. de Bonald was one of the most eminent of the higher clergy attached to the Restoration. He was won over apparently to the Orléans dynasty, took the oath of allegiance, and was appointed Archbishop of Lyons. The journals of that city now accuse him of being always purposely absent when any fête or ceremony is at hand where the present dynasty is glorified.

In the Chamber of Peers, on Monday, petitions for liberty of instruction were presented, which gave rise, however, to little observation: but another occasion was to occur (on Saturday next), when the whole subject would be discussed.

"The Chamber of Peers," says the Siecle, "devoted the entire sitting of Monday to the discussion of various petitions, having for their object to demand, according to the terms of the carter, a law to provide for public education and the liberty of instruction. The debate was warm, particularly in consequence of a wish expressed in one of the petitions, that elementary instruction should be intrusted to the religious corporations, in conjunction with the University. Pretensions, which finished by causing an explosion elsewhere, revealed themselves to the Legislature. The contest which has for some time past commenced between the imprudent organs of the clerical party and the professors of public instruction, the flagrant resurrection of the corporation of Jesuits, all united to give an interest to this debate. When listening to the orators we fancied we had again mounted to the epoch of the Restoration. Thanks, however, to the perseverance of the Minister for Public Instruction, and to the energetic reclamations of MM. Charles Dupin, Cousin, D'Argout, and even M. Barthe, a clear and definite solution was the consequence of the debate. The Chamber of Peers passed to the order of the day on the petition from the inhabitants of Dunkirk which demanded that the religious corporations should be admitted to undertake the education of youth in conjunction with the University, thus separating it from the other petitions, which merely demanded a law on secondary instruction. This result destroys all possibility of equivocation. Baron Charles Dupin was the first to place the question on its true basis. 'We are very fast forgetting past events,' said he; 'we forget the eccentricities which provoked the Revolution of 1830, and the efforts which it was necessary to make in order to re-establish amongst the mass of the population that respect for religion so deplorably compromised by the imprudent zeal of some of its ministers.' To a specious reproach made by the Marquis de Dreux-Breze, of the delay in executing a promise inscribed in the Charter, M. Villemain replied, 'that he was preparing a plan of public instruction.' But, as M. Cousin justly observed, it would be inconvenient to abandon the provisions of the ordinance published by the Government of the Restoration in the year 1828, that previous to establishing any society for public or private instruction, it should be necessary to declare that the society did not belong to any corporation not authorized by law."—Pat.

M. Arago announced, at a lecture delivered by him on Thursday last at the Observatory at Paris, that one of his pupils had discovered a new comet on the night of the 3rd to the 4th inst.—Pat. 8*th May.*

Germany.—The Augsburg Gazette of the 12th inst. states, that a congress of the States composing the German Customs Union would be held during the ensuing summer, at which it would appear that an increase of duty would be proposed on various articles of British manufacture. It is calculated that England gains 14,000,000 or 15,000,000 dollars by the export to Germany of spun thread and various articles of cotton and iron, without offering any compensation to Germany.

In consequence of the extreme severity of the censorship throughout Germany, none of the papers from that country are worthy perusal. Their comments are as empty as their news is dull.—Ibid.

Portugal.—We have Lisbon news to the 15th inst. The Deputies had passed the bill for establishing the system of general education throughout the kingdom.

If the tariff negotiations were resumed by England (and it was held to be the part of England, who commenced and broke them off, to resume them), there was considerable probability of their being brought to a satisfactory close by a reasonable compromise of the disputed woollen duties; but there was little likelihood of the Portuguese Government resuming these negotiations of their own motion. Great agitation prevailed at Oporto, and throughout the wine districts with reference to this subject.

The Patriarch of Lisbon had taken possession of his See, as by right of legitimate nomination legitimately confirmed under papal brief, but without ceremonial.—Ibid.

New Russian Project.—We call attention to our correspondent's observations upon the rumoured Russian project of a Pan Sclavonic union—that is the formation of a new central kingdom, composed of all the Sclavonian populations. It is currently reported, it would seem, at Constantinople, that this project has caused serious alarm to Prince Metternich, and influenced his policy in the Servian affair. In the mean time the Austrian steam navigation question has been settled to the complete satisfaction of the Vienna Cabinet.—Chronicle.

The New Magistrate Act.—Lord Ellenborough's return to his Council has quickened the movements of the Legislature, and given us no fewer than five Acts in fourteen days. Among these is the Act for the appointment of Deputy Magistrates. It has been enacted with little alteration. The clause which provided that the office should be open to natives of India without regard to religion or descent, has been wisely omitted. No allusion is now made in the Act to any class, and these situations are therefore open to all classes. Such indeed was evidently the intention of Government from the beginning, and it was on this ground that we objected to the use of any expression which should seem to limit the appointment to particular classes.

The greatest alteration made in the Act is the addition of a new section, which provides that the office of Deputy Magistrate may be held in conjunction with that of a Deputy Collector, and of an uncovenanted Civil Judge. The uncovenanted Judges of the two first grades are already invested with Magisterial powers to a certain extent, and it is probable that the object of this Section is to extend their judicial powers, and to enable them to take cognizance of cases which are at present beyond their jurisdiction. In this point of view the additional section appears calculated to facilitate the operations of the Police, by providing a more extensive machinery for the adjudication of cases brought up by it. The object of uniting the office of Deputy Collector with that of Deputy Magistrate is less apparent, and as far as it is apparent, less satisfactory. Whenever fiscal and Magisterial duties have been united in the same person, and an office connected with the peculiar interests of the state conjoined with one established for the interests of the people, the result has been, that the one has obtained an undue predominance over the other. It is the natural result of the weakness of our nature that in such cases the interests of the Master should have the cream of the officer's time and attention. The flapper of the Board of Revenue falls more sensibly on the ear of the Magistrate-Collector than the flapper of the Superintendent of Police. In all cases therefore in which the state is rich enough to pay two distinct officers, these offices should be dissevered.

The department of the Police should not be distracted by any other duties. Its time and attention should be devoted exclusively to the great object of ferretting out offenders. It should be deeply impressed with the idea that if any offence against life or property be committed, which it is unable satisfactorily to trace up, it is to that extent inefficient. When a crime is announced to a Deputy Magistrate as having been perpetrated within his beat, it should be his duty to give himself or his officers no rest till the offenders have been discovered and brought to justice; and if he has any other duties to perform calculated to interfere with the pursuit of those investigations, which he must be prepared to institute whereever they are necessary; if there be any other calls on his time which oblige him to postpone those enquiries, and thus to give to transgressors the advantage of time and circumstances, the public interests committed to him must suffer. The Deputy Magistrate who is entrusted with the charge of the Police, should be always ready to move at a moment's warning to the scene of crime; and whatever fetters his movements, detracts from his efficacy. If we had such a body of Deputy Magistrates distributed over the country, in the centre of small and manageable circles, and occupying a middle place between the Darogа and the Magistrates, crime would be prevented by the vigilance with which it was pursued—and it is in the prevention of crime, much more than in its punishment, that the secret of good Government consists.

The confessions of the Keechuck robbers, which the kindness of Mr. Dampier enabled us to review sometime ago, disclosed the fact that there existed in Bengal bodies of robbers who carried on a system of plunder, in large and organized parties, with perfect impunity; in some cases evading the vigilance of the Police; in other cases, overawing it by their numbers. Independently of these professional robbers, whose depredations are co-extensive with the boundaries of the province, there are local associations of men who prey upon society, and which our Magistracy has hitherto been unable to break up; and for this apparent reason that there is no agency charged with the special duty of hunting them out. The deposition of the Budhuks to which we have alluded, throws much light on the subject, and it ought to be turned to good account. It informs us that these men pursued a system of robbery upon the largest scale for a quarter of a century, and successfully baffled our ill organized Police; but that no sooner was the duty of pursuing them committed to Major Sleeman, who brought the system he had so successfully pursued against the Thugs, to bear upon them, than the whole gang was immediately broken up. The most notorious of the band was captured, and in his deposition stated that as soon as the Budhuks heard that these officers had been appointed especially to apprehend them, they found the country too hot for them, and retired beyond our territories. Let the same system be organized under the Deputy Magistrates, and these confederacies will dissolve of their own accord, and the security of life and property will be improved to a degree of which we have at present little conception.

The Jail Delivery Act.—The Draft of an Act for shortening the period of imprisonment was published a fortnight ago, and has naturally furnished abundant food for comment to the public journalists. It is based upon the assumption that the increased strictness of prison discipline which has been enforced within the last year or two, has rendered the punishment of imprisonment more severe, and that it is necessary therefore to curtail the period of confinement upon the principle that increase of suffering should be accompanied by a diminution of its length. The fact of increased severity is denied by many, who affirm that a prison life, even at present, is easy and cheerful, and, with the exception of the loss of liberty, more comfortable than the life which half the prisoners were accustomed to lead before they entitled themselves to free quarters. Upon the accuracy or the reverse of this statement hangs the propriety of the first part of the draft, which forgives every prisoner one fourth the remainder of his sentence.

If the severity of punishment has been bonâ fide increased, and imprisonment has been rendered more disagreeable than it was, it appears reasonable to curtail the term. And there is every reason to believe that in those districts into which the messing system has been introduced, and restrictions have been imposed on the enjoyments in which the prisoners indulged, the punishment of the jail has been rendered much more severe. Of this a convincing proof has been afforded in the disturbance created at Chuprah by the attempt to introduce it, and which at one time threatened the peace of the district. This messing rule has been introduced into all the districts under the Government of Bengal with the exception of two. But if it be right to curtail punishment on the ground of its increased severity, where is the propriety of curtailing it where the messing system has not been tried? Strictly speaking, the Act should have been confined in its operation to those districts in which the new and stricter arrangements had been introduced, and should not have been made applicable to the North West Provinces, to Madras, or to Bombay, where the same reasons do not exist; for it is altogether a gratuitous assertion that increased strictness of prison discipline has been introduced generally into the Territories subject to the Government of the Company? For aught we know, the prisons in those districts, may present scenes of as much comfort and gaiety as our own jails, before the Reform, and in that case the reduction of the term of confinement, far from being a relief, will be a hardship. Be that as it may. We are exceedingly curious to know, by what rule of Cocker, the Legislative Council intends to calculate the remaining period of a man's imprisonment, who is sentenced for life, so as to be able accurately to remit one fourth of it.

The second part of the law which directs that no offender shall be sentenced to imprisonment for any period longer than three fourths of the period now ordained by law. evidently arises from an idea that the present periods of confinement are too long; and of this there can be little doubt. If the object of punishment be the reformation of the culprit, and his restoration to society an improved character, this is more likely to be attained by strictness and even severity of discipline, than by length of confinement. During a protracted imprisonment, a man becomes in a measure dissevered from social ties, and habituated to his jail life; and he is not likely to be deterred from the commission of fresh crimes by the mere dread of returning to it. The present sweeping enactment, so far as it respects the general reduction of imprisonment, appears to be premature. A careful revision of the system of prison discipline at all the Presidencies, and in every district, ought manifestly to precede any attempt at fresh legislation on the subject.

Singapore.—We had occasion, a fortnight ago, to review the finances of the settlement of Singapore, which appeared to be in a highly satisfactory state. We have now [illegible] the Singapore Free Press, of the 29th of June. It republishes the Notification issued by Mr. Bird, the President in Council, on the 26th of April last, which announced the resolution of Government to sell all lands which were public property beyond the precincts or proposed limits of the Towns of Singapore and Penang and in Province Wellesley, in full property, without any reservation of quit rent, at the general rates of 10 Rs. and 5 Rs. per acre, that is at the rate of a little more than 3 Rs. the bigah in one case, and less than 2 Rs. in other cases. The Editor, who may be supposed to be intimately acquainted with the exigencies of the Settlement, pronounces it "one of the greatest boons ever conferred on the Straits Settlements," and adds that the consequences which may be expected to result from this measure are many, and will all be productive of good. We could almost have wished that there had been a small quit rent provided for, to be levied at some future period, upon a fixed and unalterable principle, to meet the expenses of the local administration. A light assessment, when the land had been brought into full cultivation, would not have been felt by the proprietors, and at the same time it would have obviated all necessity for the imposition of any future taxes, which, however trifling, would from their very novelty have been unpalatable. But we will not quarrel with the completeness of a measure which is likely to give so great an impulse to the prosperity of this valuable island. The previous attempt to form a land settlement upon a narrow and less liberal basis, appears to have so completely defeated its own object, that, there may have been eminent propriety in selling the land out and out, without any reservation of rent. And it is satisfactory to know that the measure is likely to be so extensively beneficial. The Editor informs us that "within the few days since the intention of Government was notified, the inhabitants have manifested the greatest eagerness to avail themselves of it. On the road which has been recently opened up between the river Valley and Orchard roads, where a week ago nothing was to be seen on either side but jungle and deserted gambier plantations, no less than ten individuals have commenced clearing the ground, and the jungle has nearly all disappeared before the axe for upwards of a mile along one part of the road. In fact wherever there are roads, the land is being rapidly appropriated." There are, it is said, 13,000 acres in cultivation, which are ready to be granted out and paid for. If these are sold at the maximum rate of 10 Rs. the acre, they will yield an immediate return of 130,000 Rs.; and this sum cannot be more advantageously laid out than in opening roads in various directions which would lead immediately to the purchase of the land in their vicinity, and thus not only produce a large and progressive income, but accelerate the great object in view, the rapid cultivation and improvement of the whole island. The Editor of the Free Press seems to think that none of the ground now under cultivation should be sold for less than 10 Rs. the acre; which is an exceedingly small sum for the free and unfettered possession of land, as the Hindoo grants term it, "as long as the sun and the moon exist." Should Government devote the sums thus raised in the first instance to the construction of roads, it might reasonably expect 10 Rs. an acre for all the land in their neighbourhood.

This liberal and enlightened measure is based upon the sound principle that the object in founding Singapore, was not to realise a large profit and create a revenue for Government, but to form a depot for the reception and distribution of British manufactures throughout the islands of the Malayan archipelago. The settlement of Singapore has fully answered this object. It is the entrepot of a vast and beneficial commerce, and it has not only ceased to be a burden upon the resources of India, but by the progress of improvement, has formed a little nest egg of surplus revenue. The present arrangement will hold out a prospect of additional prosperity to the island, and may probably serve as a model for other settlements, established for similar purposes. While our commercial intercourse with the continent of Europe, and America North and South, is daily subjected to increased interruption from the rivalry and jealousy of foreign nations, England cannot adopt a wiser course than thus to establish in other quarters of the globe, beyond the reach of her envious rivals, these marts of commerce, which shall furnish new vents for her manufactures.

THE HALF BATTA ORDER.—Lord Ellenborough has received various tokens of gratitude from the Military Officers since his return to the Presidency for the gracious sentiments he has so repeatedly expressed towards the army. Within the last three weeks his Lordship has been sumptuously entertained by the officers of H. M. 10th Regiment in Fort William, by the Station of Barrackpore, by the General commanding the Division, and by the officers at Dum-Dum. On all these occasions his Lordship expressed his warmest admiration of the achievements of our troops, and renewed the assurance of his being emphatically the Friend of the Army. The applause which he has bestowed upon the recent triumph of the British armies in the East, by whose valour our honour has been regained beyond the Indus, and our influence established in China, is in the highest degree appropriate. They have richly earned all the commendation which the public authorities both at home and in this country have given them. But his Lordship appears in our humble judgment to have allowed himself to be carried away by the ardor of the moment, into the expression of sentiments which, under a strict interpretation, it would be difficult to reconcile with his position as the head of an Establishment composed of many component parts. The repeated assurance that he was the Friend of the Army, is liable to the construction that he was not to the same extent the Friend of any other branch of the service; and in this point of view may appear incompatible with that general duty of watching, without partiality, over every branch of the service, of which a Governor General cannot divest himself. There would be precisely the same impropriety in a Governor General's selecting the Civil Service or any other section of the service for the object of his especial favour, and avowing himself the patron of that single class interest. It appears also to cast somewhat of an invidious reflection on his predecessors, as though they had been deficient in the discharge of a duty which his Lordship prided himself on performing. In the speeches which are reported to have been made at these entertainments, the thing is so much overdone, that we exceedingly doubt their authenticity. His Lordship, we are satisfied, could not have uttered any sentiments which were calculated to draw an invidious distinction between the members of two honourable services, or which could be interpreted into an assurance that the light of his countenance was bestowed, almost exclusively, on one of them. We cannot suppose that his Lordship, while indulging in those national feelings of exultation as a Briton, which the contemplation of our recent triumphs could not fail to inspire, became unmindful of that prudent restraint, which his political position at the head of a great Government, would naturally impose.

It is wise however to improve the circumstance of having at the head of the army a nobleman who delights to be regarded as its Friend, and it is not unreasonable to indulge expectations of that substantial boon, which we have failed to obtain under the two preceding administrations; the repeal of the half batta order. It is scarcely possible to speak of the Court of Directors in reference to this order, with those feelings one would wish to cherish towards them, as our Honourable Masters. It is perhaps the most unjust, and the most inconsistent order which ever issued from a civilized Government. It is unjust to subject one division of the army to arbitrary reductions of pay, from which every other division is free. The half batta arrangement, to have been just, should have been extended to every Regiment. It is inconsistent to curtail the pay of the officers at those very stations which are most expensive. It is preposterous to regulate the relief of a great army upon the principle of establishing certain penal stations, and of giving to each corps its turn of punishment. It was unwise to risk, as the Court did in 1829, the affections and confidence of a whole army by a measure of partial economy, which brought no substantive relief to the treasury. We are ready to acknowledge that, considering the feelings which the obnoxious order excited, and the peremptory tone in which the repeal of it was demanded, it could not have been safely conceded at the time. Government can concede nothing on the principle of fear, without the certainty of creating a dangerous precedent. The Court at that period had at least this excuse, that they could scarcely retrace their steps without a sacrifice of discipline. No such excuse exists at the present moment; the agitation it created has long ceased, and the Army goes the round of the half batta stations in a spirit of patient resignation to the injustice of the measure, which is exemplary in the highest degree. Government might now restore the full batta to these stations, and re-establish an equality of allowances throughout the Army, not only without the imputation of fear, but even with something of a grace. The present season is most favourable for granting what continues to be the ardent wish of the army. It has fought and conquered in countries where British prowess was only a matter of indistinct report. The reverses which it sustained in one instance, it has gloriously wiped out, and British valor shines the brighter in Affghanistan for the temporary eclipse it suffered. It would be wise in Government to seize this opportunity for relinquishing the obnoxious order, and by its repeal gain the credit of rewarding the valour of our troops, when it was only undoing an act of inconsistency and injustice. But the most favourable circumstance of the times is the commanding position of the Friend of the Army. During the last seventy years we have had no Governor General so entirely independent of the Court of Directors as Lord Ellenborough. No Governor General in the present century, Lord Wellesley perhaps excepted, has appeared to enjoy such absolute power in India. It is in vain for detraction to question his Lordship's power. It was only in the last week we had occasion to remark an instance of that concentration of powers which Lord Ellenborough so manifestly possesses. The Court of Directors and the Board of Control both refused their sanction to the measure of remitting funds to England solely by the sale of Bills in London; and his Lordship immediately announced to the mercantile community that they should prepare themselves for the early adoption of this plan, because the strongest representations had been sent home on the subject. If Lord Ellenborough has such confidence in his own powers, when he is opposed of the wishes of the Court, surely he has only to insist on the abolition of the half batta order, and it will cease to dishonour our administration. The Court, it is true, clings to the order with the tenacity with which men too often adhere to an error of their own parturition; but Lord Ellenborough is omnipotent in Leadenhall Street; and we hope therefore to find at an early period that his Lordship has vindicated his claim to the title of the Friend of the Army, by the issue of the following notification; The half batta order is rescinded.

Mr. T. Sydney Smith.—The Madras Examiner, a paper entirely unknown at this Presidency, except to one or two of our daily contemporaries, has undertaken the defence of Mr. Sydney Smith, in reference to the action for libel which he recently brought against the Editor of the Bombay Times. The Examiner appears to be in high dudgeon with us for the remarks which appeared in the Friend of India on the 13th of last month; and has so far lost his temper as to forget the rules of editorial propriety, and allude to us by name, as we learn from the following extract from his paper which appeared in the Hurkaru of Saturday last.

"Mr. Marshman again.—We perceive that in the last number of his paper, The Friend of India, this gentleman has repeated and dilated upon several of the mis-statements which we contradicted and corrected in our last paper. He, personally, as residing in a Danish settlement, is, we believe, beyond the reach of British Law; but as certain parties in Madras have chosen, subsequent to our contradiction, to republish his mis-statements, (which they have thereby adopted as their own) we understand they have been already informed that they will be called upon to substantiate them publicly if they can, (whether by themselves or through means of Mr. Marshman, the author of the mis-statements) in a Court of Justice.

"Under these circumstances, we decline at present giving Mr. Marshman's mis-statements the detailed refutation they would otherwise receive."

This determination to prosecute a Madras journal which had been so unfortunate as to copy our remarks, is in perfect keeping with all the previous transactions in this case. It is a pitiful revenge which seeks to persecute the Editors who may have innocently borrowed an article, because it cannot reach the original offender; and we trust that the new Libel law now in progress through Parliament, will effectually prevent the repetition of it. We have carefully read over the article to which the Editor of the Examiner alludes, and are at a loss to discover any thing which even Mr. Smith's ingenuity could construe into a libel. If any thing had been necessary to enforce on us the duty of adhering to the strict truth, the prosecution of the Bombay Times, after the lapse of eighteen months, would have been a sufficient warning. We took extraordinary pains to admit no assertion which wore even a doubtful aspect. We knew indeed that Mr. Smith had in his own letters, descended to the use of epithets to which the Press of India had long been a stranger, that he had told us that his forbearance to us should be attributed to his contempt; that our correspondent was "a mean liar," and a "sneaking calumniator;" and that Mr. Dighton had been "charged with swindling to the extent of a lakh and a half of Rs.," but we knew at the same time that there was nothing Mr. Smith was less likely to forgive than the imitation of his example, and the application of such phraseology to himself. We were therefore peculiarly careful to guard against every thing which did not fall within the strict line of legitimate argument, or which the Courts could fix on as libellous. At the same time we felt that it was impossible to escape a prosecution, if the Courts should adopt the maxim that the greater the truth the greater the libel.

The organ of Mr. Smith, the Madras Examiner, alludes to certain mis-statements, which he says we have repeated and dilated on; and hints at our being beyond the reach of British law, as residing in a foreign settlement. Our residence in a foreign settlement, where happily British law is not administered, is an advantage which we will not controvert; but if the Editor will send us the "detailed refutation," of those mis-statements which he appears to be prepared to give, we will shew him that we are not beyond the pale of British justice and equity, by giving them the widest publicity in our power. As we do not happen to exchange papers with the Madras Examiner, and as none of our other Madras contemporaries are likely, after what has transpired, to touch this gunpowder case, and reprint this article, we shall send a copy of it to the Examiner; that he may not remain in ignorance of our willingness to publish the refutation,—provided it does not exceed three columns.

On the general question which the Englishman and Hurkaru have discussed, whether it be right to name an Editor or not, there can be but one opinion. Universal custom has established the rule that the Editor of a paper, should not be alluded to by his personal name, and experience has shewn the value of the rule. It serves to soften down those asperities which journalism is apt to generate, and to maintain a feeling of mutual courtesy among Editors. And of this there can scarcely be a more convincing proof than the fact, that an Editor never breaks through this restraint, except when his passions have mastered his reason, and he has lost all command of himself. Differences among the Editors of public journals cannot be avoided; nor indeed is it advisable that they should. It would be a public calamity if they were always of one mind, and presented only a dead level of stagnant thoughts. It is from the friction of opinions that the sparks of truth are elicited. But in these necessary and inevitable contests, it is quite possible for an Editor to espouse his own view of a question with such ardor, as gradually to lose his equanimity, and to treat his opponent's arguments with a severity, which leads eventually to personality. On such occasions, our conventional rule of the impersonality of the Editorial character, is found to be of the highest service, and if sacredly maintained cannot fail to produce the most beneficial results.

We perceive that one of our contemporaries who has recently broken the rule, and who ought to be condemned to a month's penance for his transgression, seems to think that we set him the example by alluding to Mr. Sydney Smith, by name. But how could we have avoided it? Mr. Smith is not (now at least) the Editor of a newspaper, or a member of Parliament, and we could not have marked his identity by naming his journal or his borough. He is a barrister of the Supreme Court at Madras, and nothing more. If we had not used the name of Thomas Sydney Smith, how would the public have discovered the individual to whom we alluded? We have not therefore broken through the rule of Editorial propriety, and we intend never to do so, even under the severest provocations; for these provocations, as they are called, are after all but trials of editorial patience, and may be turned to the best account, by being made the instrument of strengthening that virtue. The press will always find its own dignity most effectually promoted by adhering rigidly to this doctrine of impersonality, and by r garding every editor as an abstraction. The fourth Estate cannot do better than to imitate the conduct of its superiors of the third Estate; and to bear in mind that to allude to any Member of that estate by name is deemed highly unparliamentary, and is never for a moment permitted. Even the Speaker himself never pronounces the name of any honourable gentleman, except in cases of incorrigible delinquency; and it is always the prelude to his being made over to the Usher of the Black rod. We wish we had an Usher of the Black rod attached to the Press, to take charge of such delinquents.

General Elphinstone.—Lady Sale, in her memorials of Affghanistan had stated that Capt. Grant, the Assistant Adjutant General of the Cabul force "with cold caution obstructed every enterprize, and threw all possible difficulties in the way." Capt. Patrick Grant, anxious to obtain a vindication of his deceased brother's conduct from those among the survivors of the Cabul tragedy who were intimately acquainted with him, addressed Capts. Eyre and Johnson, begging them to state honestly and candidly their opinion how far his brother's conduct justified those expressions. The correspondence has been published in the Delhi Gazette, and, but for its length, we would gladly transfer it entire to our own columns. We must therefore content ourselves with borrowing those parts which serve to vindicate Capt. Grant's character, and which throw additional light on the cause of our disgrace.

Capt. Eyre's letter is not so much to our taste as his book was. We allude more particularly to the introduction, which appears to be a laboured condemnation of Lady Sale, not altogether appropriate in the present instance. It looks more like the highly wrought opening address of an advocate in an action for libel, than a letter intended simply to vindicate the character of a deceased friend. It appears to great disadvantage when contrasted with Capt. Johnson's frank remarks on the same painful subject. "We are all liable to error, and as Lady Sale could not, to the best of my recollection, have founded her opinion of your brother from much personal knowledge of him, but from what other people who knew little of him chose to say, I am sure her Ladyship will be much grieved at having been the means of propagating so erroneous an impression of an Officer who in every point of view was an honour to his profession."

Capt. Eyre admits that Lady Sale's observations were made upon report, he admits that the reports in the camp, arising from ignorance of the General's infirmity of purpose, were frequently to Capt. Grant's disadvantage. He says "it happened not unfrequently that an officer after having as he imagined, impressed the General with the necessity of a certain line of action, and yet finding that he adopted quite a contrary course, would angrily cast the blame on Capt. Grant, from the mere circumstance of his being the last person consulted. I believe that in this manner Capt. Grant came in undeservedly for a large share of odium, the more so perhaps, because from his usual reserved habit of speaking on public matters, his opinions were but imperfectly known." This acknowledgment shews that the reports which Lady Sale has recorded were actually current in the Camp, and that none but those who were in constant intercourse with the ruling authorities, were acquainted with their inaccuracy. Whatever therefore might have been Capt. Eyre's opinion of other assertions in Lady Sale's Journal, in this particular instance his censure exceeds the transgression, and must be considered as an indication of that feeling of hostility which the boldness of some of her Ladyship's assertions appears to have so generally excited. This opinion is confirmed by the tone of Capt. Grant's letter, in which he demands in terms, barely courteous, considering that they are applied to a lady, "an unqualified retraction of the aspersion which you have cast on the memory of a brave man." We allude to these circumstances with much pain, because Capt. Grant's enquiries arose from the laudable motive of vindicating from obloquy the memory of a beloved brother who met his death like a hero, in the service of his country; and the object of Captain Eyre's letter was to correct the report of his having obstructed every enterprise for the relief of the army, which Lady Sale had incorporated in her work. We regret that in either instance, the additional strength which truth acquires from the union of suavity with firmness, should have been so greatly overlooked.

The utter incompetency of General Elphinstone for the crisis which had arisen, and which demanded the firmest decision of character, combined with the clearest judgment, is well described in the following extract from Captain Eyre's book. "True it is that our unhappy General, crippled in body and distracted in mind, could neither act vigorously nor deliberate wisely: but let it not be therefore supposed that he was a mere lifeless automaton to be moved at the will of another. Happy for us and for our country had he been so! Beset with difficulties, both real and imaginary, and seeing the necessity for doing something, yet utterly unable to determine what that something should be, General Elphinstone was in the habit of applying for an opinion to almost every one of the numerous officers who at various hours of the day went to him for orders, and it is not at all wonderful that being questioned separately, without any opportunity for consulting together and thus coming to a mutual understanding, the opinions given by them were frequently of so conflicting a nature as to tend rather to mystify the already dim faculties of the General than to clear up the difficulties that were continually presenting themselves to his mind. Had these same Officers been asked to form a joint stock of their ideas with a view to framing some definite plan of operations, I have little doubt they would have speedily reconciled their seeming differences, and come to something like a satisfactory decision."

The annoyance which the deceased Captain Grant himself felt from the vacillation of the General is clearly pointed out in the following extract:

"But Captain Grant often complained bitterly to me in private that after imploring the General for hours together to decide on some point of emergency, and at length obtaining definite instructions, he had no sooner commenced to carry them into effect than he received a sudden counter order, and on returning to ascertain the cause, would find that some fresh difficulty had occurred to the poor old man's mind, which was not removed until the time for action had passed away."

In the following sentence Lieut. Eyre lays the whole blame of the catastrophe on General Elphinstone: "No one can feel more desirous than myself to shield the memory of poor Elphinstone from undue reproach. But no private partiality shall deter me from speaking the truth when called upon to do so, as in the present instance. His infirmities were the main cause of our ruin at Kabul, but he is far less deserving of blame than of pity. Had not Brigadier Shelton incurred his dislike or distrust, I believe, Elphinstone would have gladly resigned the entire command into that officer's hands, but having retained it to the last, it is quite clear that he, and he alone, was the responsible man, and that the staff officers over whom he exercised controul, ought not, in common justice, to be blamed for the disasters consequent on his inexpressible want of decision and unprecedented bad generalship. "Fiat justitia, ruat cœlum."

Here however we must remark a slight discrepancy between the statement of Capt. Eyre and Captain Johnson. The former says, "Had not Brigadier Shelton incurred the dislike or distrust of General Elphinstone, I believe he would gladly have resigned the entire command into that officer's hand." Captain Johnson on the other hand says, "It was principally by the advice of the deceased Captain Grant that General Elphinstone consented to lay himself up on the 8th Nov. 1841, and make over the whole and sole control of cantonments to Brigadier Shelton." Which statement is to stand? We ask for the purpose of historical accuracy, and not in a captious feeling.

Captain Johnson brings forward four instances in which Captain Grant's conduct afforded a complete refutation of the unfounded reports which reached Lady Sale, and which she embodied in her narrative.

"On the evening of the 4th November, when Captain Boyd and myself went over to General Elphinstone's bungalow to entreat of him to strengthen, instead of abandoning the godown fort, your brother and other officers were either then present or dropt in during the consultation. As the General took each officer that happened to make his appearance at the time into an inner room to ask his advice, I of course know not what each individual then said. I can only judge by what occurred in my presence, and your brother did not utter one word that could lead me to suppose he was averse to the measure we proposed. There were some gentlemen who did give advice which caused vacillation, and this led to the loss of all our provisions."

"I was present with your brother at another consultation at General Elphinstone's on the evening of the 8th December, 1841, to which Eyre in his book makes some light allusion, and at which both Boyd and myself had been desired to attend. This consultation had reference to the adviaability or otherwise of sending a detachment during the night to surprize the village of "Khoja Ruwash." I perfectly well recollect all that took place. Your brother did not utter a word that could be possibly construed into a wish to throw impediments in the way of the expedition, but on the contrary, so soon as it was determined upon, he showed every alacrity to carry the General's orders into effect. The expedition did not take place, but the blame, if any, attached elsewhere."

"On the evening of the 5th January, 1842, the night before our fatal retreat, I recollect as well as if I only heard it yesterday, your brother coming up to me and saying, "Thank God, I have got the General to push on at all hazards to-morrow through the Khoord Kabul pass." Had this advice been followed, and nothing was more easy, by sacrificing our baggage, and had proper arrangements been made, with which your brother had, however, no concern, it would have saved the Kabul Army.

"On the 7th January, 1842, as the advance was approaching Boodkhak, at about 1 P. M., I was riding near the General with your brother, when, at the suggestion of a certain officer the former to the astonishment of us all, ordered a halt for the day, instead of going at once, as he had intended not five minutes before, through the Khoord Kabul pass. Your brother immediately rode up to him and entreated he would push on to Khoord Kabul, pointing out the ill effects of their halting. His advice was again unheeded, as, to my knowledge, it had repeatedly been. What was the consequence? We gave our enemies time to make their preparations for our annihilation, and fearful was the slaughter the next morning through the pass."

The noble bearing of the deceased Capt. Grant, at the close of that fatal retreat, when the last remnant of the heroic band, after surmounting the bloody barrier at Jugdulluck, fought their way to the last scene of conflict and perished at Gundamuk, is thus described, by Capt. Eyre. "Nothing could be more soldierly than his conduct on the retreat. At Jugdulluck he received a wound in the cheek, when prominently exposing himself with some other officers in an attempt to check the increasing boldness of the enemy. This was so far from quailing his spirit that thenceforward, up to the final massacre at Gundamuck he was among the foremost to encourage his companions in arms to fight manfully while they had life and limb. Being at length rendered powerless by wounds in both arms, he ordered an Artillery Serjeant who had lost his own weapon. to draw his sword and rush eye once again on the miscreant Ghazees, which the poor fellow did, and after maiming several of them, himself received a mortal wound."

It only remains for us to give Lady Sale's reply to the demand of Capt. Grant, and we think her frank avowal of the error into which she had been led, forms the best apology for the error itself.

"From LADY SALE,

To CAPTAIN GRANT, Asst. Adjt. Genl., Simla.

Kussowlee, 25th July, 1843.

My dear Sir,—I received your note and the copies of Captain Johnson's and Mr. Eyre's letters too late yesterday to reply to them by that day's dak, but I lose no time in writing to express my regret that I should have been misled as I was, regarding your brother's conduct. My journal was sent away in parts during the time I was in captivity as occasion offered, and never was seen again by me or corrected in England. I believed what I wrote at the time, and am very happy to find, from the able testimony you have sent me, that I was in error; I however greatly deplore having been the medium through which a slur has been so undeservedly cast on his name. It is not likely that this journal should go through another edition, but if it should do so, I will remedy the error as far as in me lies by sending by the next overland, a copy of this note with copies of the letters you kindly sent me. You will, I conclude, publish them in the papers in this country.

Believe me, yours, &c.

The Marine Board is Abolished, so says a notification in the last Calcutta Gazette. Government has consigned to the tomb in five words that ancient and venerable Board which has existed, under one denomination or another, from the earliest days of the Company, and was considered an establishment of the first importance when the Military Board, and the Revenue Board, and even the Customs, Salt and Opium Board were unknown. It has resolved to concentrate all responsibility on the head of a single individual, to be denominated the Superintendent of Marine. There is nothing to be said against the measure, and a great deal in its favour. The Company's Marine is a source of expense and not of profit. The Board, which managed it was in fact four Boards rolled into one. It was also the Customs Board, and the Salt Board, and the Opium Board; three departments of large profit and little expense. There is always an objection to the union of a department which is a source of revenue with one that is only a source of expenditure; because of the temptation—often irresistible—to give more attention to the former than to the latter, under the idea of securing commendation by improving the revenue. Where a Board is charged with such multifarious duties, it becomes in a great measure a nominal body, and the Secretary is the Board, without its responsibilities. The increasing duties of the Marine from the increase of shipping and the multiplication of steam vessels, seemed to demand that it should form a separate department, and not continue attached to a body, with more functions than it could perform; hence the present arrangement. A writer in the Star of Tuesday, states that the Marine Board comes within the province of the Government of Bengal; and hints that the paternity and credit of remodelling it belongs to the Deputy Governor, and that Lord Ellenborough has the merit of having concurred in it. We believe the writer is perfectly correct.

Government has appointed Major Irvine, an Officer of Engineers, the Superintendent of Marine, apparently only as a temporary measure; for it is not we suppose unlikely that the Court of Directors may desire to keep the patronage of this office to themselves, as they do that of the Master Attendant. The nomination of one who is not a seaman to such a post, has created some surprise, but only among those who have not reflected much on the subject. The Superintendent of Marine may be considered as the counterpart of the First Lord of the Admiralty, a post which in England is oftener given to a landsman than to a sailor. Under the Whigs, it was successively filled by Sir James Graham, Lord Auckland and Lord Minto; and under the present Ministry by the Earl of Haddington. The present appointment has therefore the home practice in its favour. It is also recommended by the fact that Major Irvine is a man of great versatility of talent, and good habits of business, two qualities which may possibly be found of more consequence in the new office than even a thorough knowledge of every rope and sail in a ship.

With the able assistance of Mr. Greenlaw, the Master Attendant, and the officers of his department, there can be no doubt that the Marine will be managed with as much ability and success as if it had been entrusted to a seaman. Nor must it be forgotten that our Marine is likely to be composed in an increasing ratio of Steamers, and that the appointment of an Engineer officer to superintend it, is any thing but inappropriate. The department also requires reforms, and perhaps they will be most effectually carried out by one who is devoid of all professional partialities or prejudices. It has been found in England that the appointment of a landsman of talent and energy, to the Head of the Admiralty during the last thirteen years, has been of no detriment, but rather an advantage; for at no former period was our Navy in so efficient a state, or so well able again to meet the world at sea, than it is at the present moment. It is not unreasonable to hope that as the present selection has been made with great judgement, the same beneficial results may be produced here which have been exhibited at home.

Mr. George Thompson.—The Hurkaru thinks we have acted ungenerously towards Mr. George Thompson, in saying that the remarks of the Press on his acceptance of the offer to advocate the claims of the King of Delhi in England were remarkable for their lenity; and has published a letter from that gentleman on the subject which we cheerfully copy. Though we have had occasion to differ from Mr. Thompson on many questions connected with the Indian administration, and may still be called to meet him, in the field of controversy, we have such respect for his personal character, and are so thoroughly convinced of the purity of his motives, that if any remark of ours has inflicted a wound on his feelings as a man, we most willingly retract it. In accepting the post offered to him by the King of Delhi, Mr. Thompson has committed no offence against the rules of morality, or even of propriety. He is as much at liberty as any other man, lawyer or layman, to undertake the case of the prince. The employment is honourable; and we are certain that the advocate the king has now chosen will throw his whole soul into the business, and amply repay by his exertions whatever allowance may be given to him. At the same time, judging of Mr. Thompson by his own high standard of philanthropy, and bearing in mind his frequent assurance of having come out to this country from motives of perfect disinterestedness, the mind is apt to question the delicacy of his accepting an office which makes his visit to India a source of advantage to himself. Somehow or other, it appears to want the 'grace of congruity.' But when we have said this, we have said all that we have to allege against the measure. We have no idea that Mr. Thompson will give up the advocacy of, what he considers, the interests of India, because he has a special retainer from one of its princes.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 10.

— The New Military Police, which has been organized in Bundlekund, seem to act on the principle that discretion is the better part of valour. In the Star yesterday we are told that a disaster has befallen them. 50 or 60 of them were sent out with 4 or 5 horsemen of the Bundlekund legion to summon disloyal Thakoors. The whole village turned out, and the new Police took to their heels, though the horsemen did every thing to rally them. They left two killed and a great number wounded. Capt. Beatson, on hearing of the disaster, mounted with his suwars immediately, but the river was swelled, so that he could not cross it, and the rebels have therefore for the present the best of it.

— General Cartwright, not having the fear of the Hurkaru before his eyes, ordered up guns from Dum-Dum on Wednesday, to salute "Lord Ellenborough," to whom he gave an entertainment that evening, which four hundred merry hearts enjoyed. About half past nine, a salute of nineteen guns announced Lord Ellenborough's arrival, and about midnight, half the children in Serampore were waked by another peal of cannon which told of his Lordship's retirement. As the Hurkaru seems to be really in earnest on the subject, and appeals to Sir Hugh against the Dum-Dum nine pounders being used like Chinese crackers, we have given the whole of his article.

— The Star states on the authority of Mauritius papers that the number of emigrants landed in the Island up to the 30th of June, after the interdict had been taken off, was 8253; namely, from Calcutta 4909; from Madras 2280; from Bombay 505; from Anjouan, one of the Comoro islands, 111; and 468 Chinese.

— A letter from Kerachee of the 5th July published in the Bombay Times states that Sir Charles Napier is likely to succeed to the post of Commander-in-Chief at Bombay, and that Sir George Pollock will probably be his successor in Scinde.

— The Semiramis Steamer which left Bombay on the 19th June, in the teeth of the Monsoon, arrived at Aden on the 7th July, in eighteen days. When the weather was favourable, she made the voyage in half the time. On reaching N. L. 10° the winds were found so moderate that she was enabled to cross over without finding it necessary to approach the equator so near as 4 or 5 degrees, as is usually done.

— One of the purchasers of the Union Bank shares has come forward in the Englishman and stated that the shares belonging to the Estate of Fergusson, Brothers and Co. were bought at 900 Rs. without the dividend.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 11.

— The Bombay papers arrive very irregularly. The Times of the 25th ult. reached us yesterday, the 10th, having been fifteen days in reaching Calcutta. The paper of the 28th arrived this morning, having reached town in thirteen days. The roads are evidently very heavy. We fear therefore that the advantage of the early arrival of the July Mail at Bombay, which is expected, will be neutralized by the length of its transit across the country.

— It has been remarked with much regret that in the present rainy season there has been a smaller fall of rain than in preceding years. The complaint is general throughout Bengal. The Western Provinces and Cuttack have enjoyed a liberal supply; but in the lower Provinces, the hope of the husbandman, owing to two months of comparative drought, was on the point of being ruined, when the full moon of yesterday morning brought us a succession of hearty showers. The fields are inundated, the drooping ears of corn are looking strong and green, and the river is rolling on as though there could be no more flood.

— The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette of the 29th, says, there is a rumour that Ali Morad's Army had turned against him and taken possession of the fortress of Dejee ka kote, just above Khyrpore. Ali Morad has, according to the Bombay Times, obtained through the impolitic generosity of Sir Charles Napier a territory which yields eighteen lakhs of Rupees a year, while the British Government has kept lands only of the value of 22 lakhs, to pay all its expenses. May we hint to the Editor of the Times that he would confer a favour on many of his readers, and on us among the rest, if he would give us a Genealogical Tree of the Talpoora dynasty. We cannot trace out the relationship of the Ameers now in our power or at large, with any satisfaction, though we have consulted all the books which have appeared on Scinde.

— The Steamer Hindostan went out into the stream very early yesterday morning, and got away about half past 11 with 112 passengers. How many more would she have room for if she had been destined to Bombay, to take up the passengers of that port?

— We had scarcely said we could not tell what had become of the draft of the Magistrate's Act, when it made its appearance as law in last Thursday's Calcutta Gazette.

— The Star says, that some of the creditors of the late firm of Fergusson, Brothers and Co. have given notice to the Assignees that they intend to contest in the Insolvent and the Supreme Court the validity of the securities held by the Union Bank and the right of the Bank to the outturn of this season's Indigo. This was generally expected, notwithstanding the assurance that the lien of the Bank on the securities it enjoyed to the exclusion of the other creditors, was tight and immoveable.

— The friends of Mr. Robertson, late Lt. Governor of the North West Provinces, have resolved to raise a subscription for a full length portrait of him to be suspended in the Metcalfe Testimonial at Agra. The surplus funds will be devoted to the foundation of a scholarship in Mr. Robertson's name in the Agra College. The sum subscribed, as given in the Delhi Gazette, amounts to 2818 Rupees.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 12.

— A very splendid entertainment was given to the Governor General by the officers at Dum-Dum on Thursday last which came off with great eclat. Sir Hugh Gough was also present on the occasion, and was highly eulogized by Lord Ellenborough, for his able conduct in China. This terminates the series of entertainments given to his Lordship by the officers of the army in and around the Presidency. There was one circumstance connected with the entertainment at Dum-Dum which we find it difficult to account for. It is said in the report of the Hurkaru that the health of Her Majesty was given by Col. Powney, and drank in solemn silence; while the health of Lord Ellenborough was drunk with three times three, and all possible enthusiasm.

— The Ceylon Herald, has embodied in broken English the feelings of deep veneration and esteem which the inhabitants of Ceylon appear to feel for the late Honourable Mr. Turnour, who was not less distinguished for his exertions as a public servant, than for the variety and success of his literary labours. Of the very few European gentlemen who have latterly applied themselves to the learned languages of the East, and to literary labours, two of the most eminent have been removed by death within the last two years, Mr. Lancelot Wilkinson and Mr. Turnour.

— The Sessions of the Supreme Court was opened on Friday last, when Sir Henry Seton, now the only Judge on the Bench, charged the Grand Jury. The Calendar is rather longer and more formidable than usual.

MONDAY, AUGUST 14.

— The Mauritius papers last received seem to intimate that the number of Cooly emigrants had reached the number of 12,000, that the Colonial treasury had been exhausted in paying a bonus for their importation, and that the Government could and would pay no more. The Star seems to doubt the accuracy of the intelligence, having advices of a later date from the Island which make no mention of it.

— Major Irvine has been appointed Superintendent of Marine. Col. Benson, now at Barrackpore, succeeds Major Irvine as member of the Military Board.

— Sir Jasper Nicolls, we are told by the Bombay Gentleman's Gazette, goes home to England from Bombay in one of the Steamers on the 1st of January next. If this intelligence should be correct, he will probably embark on the Sutlege and move down the Indus to Kerachee, without visiting Calcutta.

— The Hurkaru states, for the convenience of the public, that a visiting book is kept at Government house, and that parties wishing to pay their respects to the Governor General have only to enter their names and residences. But we cannot see of what use this visiting book can be since private audiences are abolished, and no man is allowed to address the Governor General in person on any matter connected with his own interests. Besides, his Lordship now lives with all the hospitality of a country gentleman at Barrackpore, and goes down to Calcutta generally on Friday morning and returns on Saturday afternoon: What time is there on these two Council days for these private visits the Hurkaru alludes to?

— The Hurkaru states, "Pursuant to the advertisement put forth by the Scotch Missionaries, Divine Service was held at Free Mason's Hall yesterday both morning and evening. On the former occasion there were about a hundred and fifty persons present, but among them were scarcely twenty members of the Rev. Dr. Charles congregation. The Rev. Dr. Duff conducted the services in the morning, and delivered a most admirable discourse from Proverbs x. ver. 28. "The hope of the righteous shall be gladness; but the expectation of the wicked shall perish." As a sermon, perhaps, the discourse might not bear very strict examination; but as a piece of composition, Dr. Duff's address was assuredly one of the most eloquent, animating and beautiful that has ever been read from the desk."

TUESDAY, AUGUST 15.

— The Governor General has appointed three Commissioned Officers, as surveyors of the second class under Capt. Baker, the Superintendent of the Water courses, Canals and Forests in Scinde, together with Mr. Hooper as Assistant Surveyor, and four non-commissioned officers as sub-assistants. His Lordship appears to have taken up the improvement of this new conquest with particular ardour; and there can be no doubt that a few years of our administration will go far to repair the injury done to this fertile province by the selfishness of the Ameers; and restore its former prosperity.

— We regret to see the death of Lieut. Col. Pogson announced in the papers. He had been nearly forty years in the country, and during the whole of the period was constantly engaged in some literary pursuit or other, in which however his success was not equal to his diligence. He had latterly turned his mind to historical speculations, which were of rather an eccentric character, and of which the only advantage was that they served to interrupt the monotony of cantonment life, and afford occupation for the mind.

— We were informed at the close of last week that the troops at Agra and Muttra had been directed to hold themselves in readiness to march at a moment's warning. The Hurkaru of this morning states, that the formation of three corps for the ensuing cold weather has been determined on; one of 10,000 men at Agra; one of 5000 in Bundlekund, and one of 5000 at Kytul. The Commander-in-Chief, we are told by the same authority, will be at Cawnpore about the 14th of October. The object of this assemblage our contemporary does not explain. Why 5,000 men should assemble in Bundlekund does not appear. Every thing is perfectly quiet both there and in the Saugor District, with the exception of a small portion of the northern part of the Saugor territory which borders on the Gwalior district of Chunderee, where the very few adherents of the ex-rajah of Jeitpore have joined the few insurgents still at large from Saugor and would fain attempt some enterprise, for they have little food. They have been joined by many of the marauders with which the Gwalior district abounds, and on the 20th of last month they had a brush with the police, in which that police acquired little renown. But there is nothing in the present or prospective state of Bundlekund to call for an army of 5000 men. The assemblage of 10,000 men at Agra has evidently an aspect to the state of Gwalior, where the Dada Khasjee has shut himself up in the palace, with the Tara baee, aged 13, and the Maharajah, aged 9, in whose names he rules. He dares not move out; and the insurgent troops are prevented from seizing or killing him only by the assurance that they can quietly squeeze out of him all the juice of the Gungajulee Orange, or Treasury, which still contains one Crore of Rupees. In these circumstances, with a rebel army glutted with plunder on our frontier, the assemblage of troops in the neighbourhood is a precautionary measure, which could no longer be delayed with safety.

— The Commander-in-Chief held a levee yesterday morning, which was numerously attended, not only by military officers, but by many civilians and gentlemen not in the service, who availed themselves of the opportunity of being presented to his Excellency. The Hurkaru says, that the presentation of the mercantile community would have been greater had it not been the morning for despatching the Express "to which all other things give place."

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 16.

— The Englishman thinks we have been misinformed in the matter of Scott and Co.'s Directory, and as our remarks may possibly have an injurious effect on the interests of his family, we willingly insert the correction furnished by our contemporary.

"From the press of other matter, we have omitted to notice an article in the last Friend of India, which, unintentionally we feel sure, may have a very injurious tendency in respect to the interests of the late Mr. T. B. Scott's family. We allude to the notice of the Directory published by Scott and Co., relative to which we find the following observation; "Samuel Smith and Co.'s Directory superseded Scott and Co.'s older work, and Mr. Scott was thrown upon his wits, and, eventually, the press itself was brought to the hammer." All of this is likely to depreciate, and much of it is foreign to the fact. Our contemporary has been misinformed. We will not run ourselves into the error, that we condemn, by asserting that some might think the reverse was the case with reference to the two compilations; but without denying the merits of Samuel Smith and Co.'s publication, we feel bound to declare that the preferential assumption is, at least, gratuitous—that Scott and Co's Directory is still looked upon as a standard one, and deserves to be so looked upon—that its production was, to the last hour of his life, one of the chief means by which Mr. Scott supported his family, and that the work has experienced no falling off in the quantum of its subscribers."

"When Mr. Scott gave up his last daily journal, his press was not disposed of by auction. He sold the paper with its good-will, and so many of his presses as were not required for his Directory and job work—these he continued to prepare to the last, and his son is now prosecuting the same labour with the same presses. The Friend will, we are certain, not hesitate to correct his mistake." We should however state that the Press to which we alluded was the India Gazette Press; and that, to the best of our recollection, the publication of Scott's Directory was suspended when he left Calcutta. He resumed the publication of it, we think on his return; and we are happy to learn from the Englishman that it is in sufficient favour with the public to afford his family the means of subsistence.

— Messrs. Lattey, Brothers and Co. finding "that the time fixed upon for the sale of Tickets in their Lottery had proved too limited;" that is, finding that the public had not bought a sufficient number of Tickets, have most reluctantly postponed the drawing to the 26th of September and the 10th October.

— The July mail may be expected this evening or to-morrow morning. Last year it arrived on the 16th. The Bombay dawks have latterly arrived in Calcutta in eleven days. If the Mail reach Bombay on the 7th, it may be hourly expected.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following sums for the Friend of India:—

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

SALUTE TO LORD ELLENBOROUGH.

One would really think, that Artillery field-pieces were, like quadrille bands and artificial flowers, intended only to help out a dancing party, and add to the display. One would think that Artillery officers and men were, like ticca subdars and Portuguese fiddlers, intended only to be sent hither and thither, to serve as "blue-coats" at private hops. We understand, that four guns were ordered up to Barrackpore yesterday to fire salutes at a private party, given to Lord Ellenborough, by the Major-General commanding the Division. We do not know what Sir Hugh Gough may think of the system of bringing Artillery 16 miles, in the middle of the rains, to enhance the effect of a dance, but, being a fine old soldier, we should not think, that he would greatly admire such a degradation of the military profession. As for Lord Ellenborough, having declared that he has gone to his Country House, to live among the gallant Barrackporeans as a country gentleman, we should think, that he would be anything but pleased by finding, that he cannot go out to spend the evening with a neighbour, without incurring the necessity of having a detachment of Artillery sent sixteen miles to give him a head-ache. "Proper things in proper places!" The use of Artillery is not to make a noise at a ball, or to aid the effect of an after-supper flummery speech. Melted butter, not gunpowder is the proper adjunct on such occasions. If salutes are wanted, let young ladies and gentlemen fire them with bon bon crackers. They make quite noise enough. We protest against this system—for such it is becoming—of harassing any branch of the Army, by long marches in the rains, for purposes in no way connected with their proper military duties. We shall hear, some of these days, of the General commanding the Division, sending a regiment of infantry to escort ice creams and barley-sugar baskets from Spence's to Barrackpore. We confess, that we think our gallant sepoys would not be less improperly employed upon such a duty, than is a detachment of Artillery, when chiming in with the hip-hip-hurrahs, which attend the outpourings of the butter-boat at a ball supper.—Bengal Hurkaru, August 10.

ENTERTAINMENT TO LORD ELLENBOROUGH AT DUM-DUM.

The entertainment given by Brigadier Frith and the Officers of Artillery on Thursday evening in compliment to the Governor General, went off with great eclat. The portico and handsome front of the building were brilliantly and tastefully illuminated with coloured lamps, the word "Ellenborough" surmounting the whole. His Lordship who had driven into Dum-Dum during the afternoon, arrived at the Mess House nearly at the same time with Sir Hugh Gough, and both were received with the usual honours. A party of about one hundred sat down to dinner, at the close of which, Her Majesty's health being drunk, Brigadier Frith in a few appropriate words, proposed that of the Governor General, which was received with hearty applause. His Lordship then rose and in returning thanks expressed his high sense of the merits and services of the Indian Army generally, through whose conduct and exertions this vast empire had been won and was now maintained:—he then took the opportunity of paying a handsome and merited compliment to the Regiment of Artillery, which had always borne a distinguished part in the successes that had graced the Indian Army; finally he alluded to the distinguished visitor then present, the head of that Army, Sir Hugh Gough, whose conduct in China he highly eulogised both in a military and political point of view, and proposed his health which was received with enthusiasm. The Commander in Chief in returning thanks, transferred the merits ascribed to himself with regard to China to the Governor General's arrangements, which he stated had only to be followed up to ensure success; he alluded to his own position with regard to the Indian Army, the importance and responsibility of which he was fully alive to, and concluded by expressing his conviction that this Body would always maintain the high character the Governor General had conferred upon it. The dinner party now broke up and adjourned to the Ball room which was already well filled by the arrival of fresh guests; dancing then commenced and was continued with great spirit until a late hour. His Lordship and Sir Hugh Gough retired about 12 o'clock.—Cal. Star. Aug. 12.

MR. GEORGE THOMPSON'S LETTER TO THE EDITOR OF THE HURKARU.

"I have marked the course of certain papers on the subject of my recent 'acceptance of office' under the King of Delhi, and have been grateful to you for what you have said in my behalf. I can truly say, before the Searcher of all hearts, that the step I have taken has appeared to me to be one that was likely to prove conducive to my permanent usefulness in the cause of India. I have again and again told you, that my heart's desire is, to be devoted, not only in heart, but in life and in effort, to the cause of the people of this country. In proof of this, I have preferred a mere existence, during the last five years (and that a precarious one) to emolument, and popularity, and prospects to boot. I have toiled, or I believe no other man in the present day has done, con amore, for India—and this, when I had no more idea of seeing India, or forming any connections here, than I now have at this moment of being the Envoy of the King of Timbuctoo. That I came to this country with a single purpose, God knows. I only sought, besides, to keep my family from want during my wanderings. My object was to qualify myself for future and more extensive usefulness in the cause of this country. The motive that brought me here, has governed all my actions. If, while I prosecute this my great object, I can secure any business that will enable me to live when I return, and so save me from the necessity of turning my thoughts in another direction, I feel not only justified in accepting it, but unspeakably thankful to the Providence that places it in my way—for I can truly aver, that my sole feeling of embarrassment, when contemplating the future, has grown out of a fear that I might be compelled to abandon the objects, above all others dear to my heart, in order to realize some support for my family. I shall devoutly praise God, if this is not the case—Now, as to my connection with the King of Delhi. I sought not his Majesty—he sought me. I made no terms, but what were far less advantageous to me, than those at first offered. I sacrificed no duties, for my purpose was already formed, to visit this part of the country. I have given up no principle, for the cause of the King is one of justice and faith between man and man. I have lost no opportunities of seeing the state of native society, and gaining knowledge; but, as my present experience avouches, secured many and rare ones. I have not circumscribed my movements at home, for I have distinctly told the King that in all places and at all times, I shall be the advocate of the cause of the whole people. His business in England will not only not lessen the number of my opportunities to do good to this country but it will increase them. The discussion of an individual case will always enable me to illustrate general principles, and if I have not to discuss his case in public, why then my public efforts will be exclusively with reference to the questions, that affect the masses of the people. I never have,—I never will gain a penny by the support of any cause, which is bad—I will starve rather: I would see my children starve, rather than feed them on the wages of prostitution. But if I can, for the sake of wife, children and India, secure a maintenance by the honourable exertion of my talents in an individual case—and give myself without stint to the cause of millions without money and without price—I will do it. I say to the impoverished millions around me—"I am your friend. I would raise you, instruct you, protect you. I would be your advocate without a brief, and without fee, and can afford it, who desire to engage my help, for bless God if made the instrument of doing you service. But I must live while I do this. If there be those who the advancement of their personal ends, and will pay me for my advice and assistance, I will, if the cause be essentially one with your's—the cause of equity and truth,—give them what aid I can, and rejoice that I am enabled, while I do so, to be your unpaid and independent champion." What more can I, or need I say? My trust is before you. My hands are clean."—Hurkaru.

THE LATE HON'BLE MR. TURNOUR.

We are assured, on good authority, that the following tribute to the memory of the late Mr. George Turnour, is not only verbatim what was said, but that it is far from being a partial expression of native feeling. We can readily believe this, and we firmly believe, there would be infinitely more good will towards Government, and more cordial co-operation on the part of the natives, in every measure for the improvement of the Colony, did the Government Servants and Agents, more frequently, take the same pains to be understood by the natives which Mr. Turnour appears to have taken.

"I no got proper English, I have one friend write little for me what I tell him. I understood Momment soon put up for the Honourable George Turnour, Esq. But Sir, what monument is so enduring as the feeling which father will leave to son, if regret and regard for a good man? We Kandyan Chiefs, well know our loss. Why Sir, we now better have Mr. Turnour's reproof than some of the English Gentlemen's good word. We know he was true and sincere in what he said. He was too high for those humbug ways some gentlemen use. Mr. Turnour had chalk line—no go one side or other of it, but straight. And when we Kandy Chiefs had go to him, he always civil and kind. We know himself and he know we.

"If monument put up, please let your good word be in for us, to have a high one, near the old Barracks where artillery stop near Levelly Ferry. So gentlemen when go to Mr. Turnour estate, may bear him in mind.

"Good man Sir, (I do assure you half Kandy might die and no tear shed) Mr. Turnour die he swallow all up like bucket of water swallow up drops.

"Never see like gentleman. Cannot let pass without humbly expressing the feeling all Kandy Chiefs, and small men too, have of respect for the memory of the late Mr. Turnour."—Herald, July 21.

SYSTEMATIC ROBBERIES IN BOMBAY.

On Saturday last we received particulars of the most extraordinary system of organized depredation in Bombay which was ever perhaps brought to light in any country. The statement given to us was nearly the same in substance as that which appeared in the Gentleman's Gazette of yesterday morning, which will be found under our local head, but somewhat less minute and copious: and we therefore leave with our cotemporary the credit, which is his due, of first having collected together for publication the principal portion of the facts. Nothing short of the disclosures which have been made could have convinced the community that, in the very midst of them, and under the immediate eyes of the police, a system such as this could for such a period have been permitted to exist in the bosom of such a population as that of Bombay, where the harvest field of depredation, highly as it has been cultivated, and plentiful as is the crop of plunder which it has supplied, is of such limited extent. It is singular, too, that this system should so long have escaped exposure after its existence was much more than suspected by the authorities. It is now nearly four months since the following letter was received from a party, who, we had every reason to believe, well-informed. Having inquired into the matter, we were told that premature publication, by placing the thieves on their guard, might prevent their detection. We abstained accordingly, and until four days since heard no more about the matter. Surely this was a singular amount of delay to say the least of it.

We understand that a most extensive gang of harbour robbers has been discovered within the last few days. The details of the gang and of all persons employed and paid by them, are known: so far as we learn, the books containing all their transactions and the names of the sixty sharers who received every month a very large proportion of the profits, were seized publickly in the open day and are in the hands of the Chief Magistrate of Police, upon whose vigilance and activity too much praise cannot be bestowed. There are rumours current of a very large sum being about to be offered to re-obtain possession of the said books, and to substitute others in their stead. Two lakhs of rupees are mentioned as the sum which is to be given for the Books. We abstain from mentioning any names of the many persons said to be compromised in this plot; but we have every hope that no pains will be spared by the Chief and Second Magistrates and Superintendent of the Police, and in fact by all the Magistrates of the Island, to retrieve the character of this Presidency from having existing in it a sort of organization of robbery which resembles Thuggism in every thing but murder. It cannot be said how much the reputation of the Police Agents is at stake in this affair; but if it should happen to be hushed up or smothered, this notice will serve to open the eyes of the friends of civilization to one of the most extraordinary schemes for robbery and plunder which has been tolerated even in India, and which is said to have been long carried on in Bombay and to have been at length discovered through the instrumentality of one of the gang, who having been some years ago convicted of a felony, was transported, and having obtained his liberty, returned to this island and asked to be re-admitted into the confraternity. He was refused; he applied to the Police Magistrates and Superintendent, detailed the whole scheme, and became a spy, and led to the detection of the gang in their durbar, together with the seizure of their books, in which the names of all the parties, payers and payees, bribers and bribed, and aiders and receivers, and most of the late robberies in the island, are fully registered.

We this day insert a letter signed Amicus, in which the highest encomiums are bestowed upon the zeal, activity and integrity of the Senior Magistrate. The discovery of this gang will confer the highest honour on the Police, and it now requires merely the application of the common and ordinary rules of justice to confer a lasting benefit on Bombay, and to promote the cause of Christianity and Civilization in a most extraordinary degree.

Since the preceding statement was written, we have been enabled to learn further details of the Gang. It appears that last Thursday was a day of payment of some of those employed, and that intelligence of the fact having been communicated to Captain Burrows the Superintendent of the Police, he and a number of his peons disguised themselves as Arabs, and at 7 o'clock in the evening went to a house in the Native town where the leaders of the gang were assembled. Upon demanding admittance into the house it was refused. The disguised Arabs insisted, and at length succeeded in gaining an entrance. The Police peons on the watch in that neighbourhood were highly indignant and went to "the honest men's house" in order to take up the intruders; they blustered, and they bullied in the usual style, when Captain Burrows, who had effected his purpose and seized 15 books and a number of the heads of the gang present, threw off his disguise and stood before the astonished peons their Chief and Captain, whose orders they dared not to disobey.

The coolies, who were receiving the amount of their monthly wages, got off as well as they could, but the chiefs of the gang were caught and their books seized, from which a most complicated system of plunder, and robbery, of smuggling and bribery, was discovered. We shall not mention any of the names of these chiefs, nor of their agents, let it suffice for the moment to state that their books were arranged most correctly; that a debtor and credit account was kept of their transactions—and that under the head of robbery in the harbour appeared the name of the goods stolen, where landed, and to whom sold; under the name of smuggling appeared an account of the goods got ashore without paying the duties, and where deposited and to whom delivered and at what price; under the title of thefts by land there was an account of the robberies in this island, and to whom the stolen articles were sold. Among other items in this list was one "Stolen from Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy's godowns such and such, which sold for so much." We have not heard the details of the plate and other robberies, and what were the articles sold; but we presume that they are still to be found in the books.

The number of partners in this scheme of wholesale plunder, robbery, smuggling and bribery, was yesterday asserted by some of the denouncers as amounting to ninety. After deducting the payment of their numerous agents in all sorts of shapes, which was no inconsiderable sum, for in many cases double the monthly salaries paid to employees was given by the chiefs, these worthies continued to share amongst them four lakhs of rupees every half year. Their's was a sure mode of settling their affairs: they paid their coolies, their clerks, their agents, and they sent the bribes to the various characters in their pay, and they got evidence of the money being handed over as they wished, and then they calculated their balance and apportioned their special profits and divided the spoil, and then the books were put into boxes and those boxes being filled with stones were put into one of their boats, of which they have a number, and being taken by their confidential man into deep water thrown overboard. What a variety of curious details would the books of late years now present to the inhabitants of Bombay! How cleverly was the plot concocted! They robbed, they plundered, they stole, they smuggled, they cheated and they bribed (of this more anon) with wonderful success; and in order to prevent all chance of detection, they settled once every six months, and then sunk their books in the ocean. We have heard the names of some of the leaders as being involved in other transactions. These names resemble very much some who are said to have figured as being implicated in the burning of the ships last year, and which mode of gain was again attempted last month. We shall observe the rule we have laid down, of mentioning no names as yet.—Bombay Times, July 26.

ARREST OF FORTY OF THE SMUGGLERS AND ROBBERS.

We have most sincerely to congratulate the Inhabitants of this Presidency on the successful termination of the inquiry into the case of the Harbour and Bunder Robbers and their Confederates. The Books have been translated and examined, and irrefragable evidence has been found of the existence of confederacy. Warrants were issued on Friday evening for the arrest of forty of the Gang, and they were executed or about one-third of them during the night of Friday. The Police is on the alert, and it was expected that the remainder would be arrested during the course of Saturday and yesterday.

The leader or Muccadum of the party is called Premjee; and they belong to the caste of Lowanas or Bhatias. They were examined on Saturday at the Police Office at Mazagon. We must now express our hopes that the Magistrates will act in this case with energy. In England, in such circumstances the most rigid proceedings would receive the sanction of the Legislature, and even the suspension of the Habeas Corpus would be ordered, for when strong proofs are to be found of the existence of such atrocities as those of robbery, smuggling, plundering, piracy and murder, the ordinary safeguards of the Laws must be suspended. We have no wish to punish any one without a full conviction; but in order to prove to the Indian world that justice, altho' hampered by various trammels, is still secure to British subjects, we hope that no scruples will be allowed to have influence in retaining all those prisoners until the proofs are brought to such a state as will warrant the conviction of the guilty. We are fully cognizant of the difficulties which the native tricksters and their adherence to their castes would throw in the way of the British administration of justice. But this is an abnormal case and demands the full powers of the Government to meet its exigencies. Let there be no useless cavilling; justice must be done on the culprits as soon as they are convicted, and it is therefore to be hoped that the Government will take upon itself to arm the Magistrates with full powers to meet the exigencies if any such exigencies shall arise.—Gentleman's Gazette, Aug. 1.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

AMERICA.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

MR. EDITOR,—In your No. for May 25th, I have been reading an article calculated to give a very erroneous view of the state of things in America with respect to the interpretation of prophecy. I beg leave to insert in your paper the two following extracts from late American publications. An able writer in the American Biblical Repository, in an article on "The Religious and Ecclesiastical condition of England," says:

"In biblical literature the land [i. e. England] is barren. This might, indeed, be anticipated from the want of theological institutions. * * * The English mind seems to have no affinity to the study, or rather a positive antipathy to it. Drs. Smith and Henderson are honourable exceptions. Our attention has just been called to a notice advertising the Rev. J. Prosser's "Key to the Hebrew Scriptures," in which he strenuously argues against the vowel points! The question in regard to their utility appears still to be a disputed topic among our transatlantic brethren! They have but little appreciation yet of the vast stores of erudition (no small part of these stores well digested too) which are to be found in the German language. There is a horror, almost amounting to Gallo-phobia, at the sight of a book bearing the Teutonic impress. A wretched ignorance of the true principles of biblical interpretation is prominent in the one thousand and one efforts which have been made to decipher the prophetical portions of the Bible. The theory which maintains the personal and visible reign of Christ on earth before the Millennium, embraces not a few distinguished adherents, and is said to be rapidly gaining ground; a theory which could never become popular in a country where sound principles of hermeneutics prevailed."

Professor Stuart, an eminent American biblical scholar, says: "The Revelation of John has been the principal source from which most who have written treatises respecting the time of the Millennium have professed to derive their proof. This book is more closely allied in its diction, to the Old Testament Scriptures than any other part of the New Testament. One might well say, that it is made up of expressions and imagery of the same cast with those to be found in the Hebrew prophets. Yet there have been many commentators [i. e. nearly all English] on this book, commentators that have published treatises on the Millennium, who were not even capable of reading the Hebrew prophets in their original language. Of course it was not possible that they should rightly and fully estimate the diction of the Apocalypse. They have gone on to compose books respecting the Millenial day, seemingly with almost as much confidence as John himself may be supposed to have felt when he wrote his Revelation. How can we wonder, then, at the crudities which have been presented to the world, under the title of commentaries, or dissertations, or remarks, on the prophecies respecting the latter day of glory."

These extracts, the only matter to the point I just now have at hand, are a fair specimen of the position of mind in which the great body of the American clergy now stand toward such English interpreters of prophecy, and their works. They have in fact been trained by, and have imbibed their views from professors in their theological institutions holding the above quoted sentiments. There are indeed in America, as in England, (though far less numerous) wild men, who make a noise now and then; but that there are hundreds of American ministers, and hundreds of thousands of private Christians, who actually suspend their faith in the truth of the Bible on the fulfilment of their prediction that the world is coming to an end in the year 1843, is an assertion so foolish that it can be read by no intelligent American without a smile. If we should meet with some such paragraph as the following, in an American newspaper, it would convey as correct an idea of England, in this respect, as the article above mentioned does of America.

In England the opinion very extensively prevails that Jesus Christ is soon to descend from heaven and reign visibly here on earth. A vast multitude have embraced this opinion, both in England and the colonies, including most of the pious officers of India, both civil and military. This may have had something to do with the late embarrassments of some of the Missionary Societies, since this doctrine so absorbs the minds of its adherents with the expectation of a stupendous miraculous interposition from heaven, that they have come to regard the old fashioned weapons of Christian effort, and the promised blessing of the Holy Spirit, as quite too feeble ever to effect any thing considerable. They believe that in consideration of the difficulty of exercising faith upon an unseen object, and of the discontent of men thereat, God is about to yield one of the fundamental principles of his Government over this world; that though he has insisted upon it all along through the darker ages, now at this more enlightened period he is to grant the evidence of sense; that henceforth those who have seen and believed, are to be the blessed ones; and that, after a certain day, which they have ciphered out, the things that are eternal will no longer be unseen. They believe that having begun in the Spirit, the church is to be made perfect by the flesh. Thousands affirm that if this should not take place, there is no truth in the Bible. Others have run wild in their speculations, but "none have gone to such awful lengths as the English."

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

METHODISM IN LEEDS.—In the borough of Leeds, as we learn from an authentic statement, the Wesleyans have erected places of public worship which have cost more than 54,000*l.* They furnish accommodation for 20,000 hearers, provision being made by free sittings for 5,000 poor persons. Their school buildings have cost 11,540*l.* They educate 850 children in their day-schools, and 6,842 in their Sunday-schools, at an annual cost of 625*l.* There are 1,650 superintendents and teachers connected with their Sabbath-schools. There are also 555 officers who gratuitously serve their Church by preaching in the villages on the Lord's-day, or by more private conversation on religious subjects. Almost every Sabbath-day, 892 persons are engaged in the distribution of religious tracts. Besides supporting fifteen ministers and their families in respectability and comfort, the Wesleyans contribute annually for missionary purposes 2,366*l.*; for the support of aged and worn-out ministers and their widows, the education of ministers' children, the training of the rising ministry, and other purposes, 724*l.*; and for the distribution of tracts, 100*l.* Besides all private and individual occasions of liberality, they distribute to the poor of their own societies 616*l.* per annum.—Wesleyan Chronicle.

STATEMENT OF THE REV. J. J. FREEMAN, AT THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The Rev J. J. Freeman then rose, and spoke to the following effect:—It has been my privilege since the last annual meeting of this Society to visit its stations in the West, and I feel quite aware that on the present occasion it is reasonably expected of me that I should endeavour to render some report of that visit. A chasm has been purposely left in the valuable report just read, which it is my task to try and fill. I shall be forgiven for the expression of a wish, that I could do it in a manner somewhat equal to the rest of the work which my efforts are designed to complete. Yet, important as I feel our missions in the West to be, and ample as that field is for the ambition or discursiveness of any speaker, I could not forgive myself, in supporting a resolution for the adoption of the report read, and containing a devout recognition of the hand of God, if I wholly omitted a reference to some other themes which that report embraces. (Cheers.) My deepened interest in the churches in the West cannot make me feel the less for bleeding Madagascar—(hear, hear)—amidst whose thousand hills and fertile plains I passed some years, and with many of whose honoured martyrs I have been personally intimate. (Hear, hear.) They are men whose names I love, whose memory I cherish, and whose memorial is on high. It is a long dark cloud that continues to roll over that beautiful but afflicted land; and even the patience that adores the hand which, for inscrutable purposes, suffers the wicked to triumph there, and the blood of the just to flow, may be permitted to ask, with the cry of many souls beneath the altar, "How long, Lord?" White robes are given them, and we, their fellow-worshippers, are commanded to wait till the noble army of martyrs is completed, and the time of vindication shall come. (Loud cheers.) Then He for whom they counted not even their lives dear to themselves shall come forth—the Prince of the kings of the earth—wearing by right his many crowns, before whom every knee shall bow in homage, and every voice of a wearied but regenerated world shall shout, "Come, Lord Jesus." (Hear, hear.) Further to the East I look again, and if on the shores of Madagascar I shed, with this meeting, the tear of unfeigned sympathy—there, over India and China, I offer my devout congratulations—yet not unmixed with fear and trembling. There is indeed a wide door opened—but who is sufficient for these things? Where are the commensurate resources? What section of the Christian Church is equal to the vast demand? We are not fully prepared to go up and possess the land. The load of responsibility which rests on our country has long been fearfully great, and this movement in Providence has immeasurably added to it. Well: it is a test for the spirit of Christian Missions through Christendom. The sincerity of the prayers and vows of the Churches of Europe and America are hereby put to a trial. If they have really longed for the conversion of the world—if they have truly yearned over the millions of idolaters in the East, now let them arise and gird on their armour, and quit themselves like men who, as faithful servants of the great Master, only wait the intimation of his will, and are prompt to execute it. (Loud applause.) But then again, amidst the vastness of China, and the almost overpowering magnitude of that subject, I dare not lose sight of that little gem of the Southern Ocean, Tahiti. (Hear, hear.) Poor Tahiti! Poor Pomare, thy unoffending sovereign! Was not the diadem of France sufficiently brilliant without depriving thee of thy little gem? And being wrested from thee when thou wast little able to resist the unsparing hand, will that diadem now shine with richer lustre by the addition? (Hear, hear.) The beauty of the gem is left [illegible] another hemisphere and to another's brow. (Cheers.) I envy not the laurels of the man who seized it. I could not call him great. But I denounce it as an outrage inflicted on humanity. It is an insult to Protestantism. (Hear, hear.) It is a mockery of liberty, and a reproach to a great nation. But it reads to the world, in this the nineteenth century, a lesson as to the alliance between Romanism and Infidelity; and the rampancy and wantonness of that combination when content to give their power to the apocalyptic beast,—and of what may be anticipated till the sound is heard and the fact realized, "Babylon the great is fallen." (Loud cheers.) But I forbear. These and other topics in the report, which should be noticed more fully, will be justly treated by the speakers that follow. At once, therefore, I solicit the indulgence of the meeting, while I bear my humble testimony to much that I have witnessed and examined in the West. So long had our missions been established, in one portion of that field, British Guiana, and so rapidly and largely had they increased in another portion, Jamaica,—so complicated were some of the details of our operations, and so desirous were our missionary brethren themselves, of a visit from the direction at home, that the directors of the Society deemed it wise to resolve on sending a deputation to those regions, and their hope was that I might in some measure fulfil their wishes. (Cheers.) I have cheerfully made the attempt. How far I have succeeded, remains yet to be ascertained by the results of the visit. But I may be allowed to say at once, that everything I saw and heard—ay and everything which I did not see and hear—(laughter) confirmed in my own mind the strong conviction I felt as to the wisdom of the abstract measure of a deputation. (Hear, hear.) I am thoroughly satisfied, that it is a sound measure for societies at home to visit occasionally their spheres of labour, and the labourers in those spheres abroad, by such a means as that which a deputation affords. (Cheers.) And I strongly commend to our Society again, and to other kindred institutions, the adoption, from time to time, of a similar measure. (Applause.) And it was, indeed, with inexpressible delight, that, having been safely conveyed, within little more than three weeks, by a noble vessel, across the Atlantic, I found myself first on the luxuriant plains of British Guiana, and then amidst the magnificent scenery of Jamaica, and mingling with congregations of men so lately in bondage, and now so free, so happy, so grateful, so capable of appreciating the blessings they enjoy—(loud applause)—so worthy of all that humanity, justice, and religion have done for them, and so manifestly affording the earnest of the future prosperity of those countries—the industrious, sober-minded, and increasingly intelligent and religious peasantry of those portions of the British empire. Some of the very names they give their properties illustrates all this. To have witnessed the gratifying and rising condition of those people, was an ample reward for the toils and anxieties of the voyage and the tour, and the absence from family and home. (Applause.) To me it was perhaps the more deeply interesting, for I had seen slavery. I knew it as it exists in Madagascar. I saw it in Mauritius, and the colony of the Cape; and in both I had seen apprenticeship too—that anomalous thing which neither masters nor apprentices ever comprehended—(laughter)—but of which the poor negro himself has often said in his perplexity, "Dem say we slave no longer, and yet we no free. Ah, dem Buckra!" (Cheers.) And so having seen both slavery and its twin sister apprenticeship, I rejoiced to be permitted to see freedom, and to examine its working and bearing among those same people, and to watch among them the progress of Christian institutions. I cannot but advert to this subject, and on this occasion, because it is so intimately blended with Christian missions; and although this is not in one sense an anti-slavery meeting, I am sure in the highest sense it is. I stand on an anti-slavery platform, and our meeting is presided over by an Anti-slavery Chairman. How could I but feel and entertain strong convictions too, as, in my visit to Jamaica, I passed along the shores, and quite in sight of Cuba, Porto Rico, and Hayti? The last, indeed, is free, but without the Christianity of Jamaica—(hear, hear) and so without its peace or its prosperity. Cuba and Porto Rico have neither its freedom nor its Christianity. Tyranny, oppression, fear, anguish, and death are there the doom of the wretched captive. While slavery lasted Christianity could not flourish in our colonies—(hear, hear)—and now that slavery is abolished, Christianity does flourish. (Cheers.) Often when I entered the well-filled mission chapel, and from the pulpit surveyed the crowded audience, and saw the attention of the listening throng, of men and their families, well clad, well behaved, eager to listen, to understand, to believe and be saved, I have felt the tear of grateful joy burst forth in the recollection that these men, these women, these children were lately chattels in law—(hear, hear)—now free and grateful, and industrious and happy, many of them pious and devoted, an honour to a community, the joy of our missionaries, and the destined crown of their rejoicing in the great day. (Cheers.) I loved my country the more because she had [illegible] free, and the blessings of those that were ready to perish came upon her. The emancipation of her slaves was, indeed, a gem in the diadem of Britain. May the glorious example soon be imitated by other lands! It will not be expected of me to touch, on this occasion, the question of the commercial aspect of the experiment of emancipation. My business is with its social, moral and religious consequences. There is its great and all-sufficient vindication, and, I would say, its triumphant recommendation. (Cheers.) I will leave to others to discuss, and perhaps on other occasions, the property interests of the question; but of this I am certain, that if that be good which brings the largest amount of happiness and morality to the largest number of men, then the measure has succeeded—wonderfully succeeded. (Applause.) That some individual proprietors have suffered loss, cannot be denied; but the vast masses have been the gainers, and it was high time they should be. If a general view be taken of the results of the change—the happiness which it has poured into the bosoms of tens of thousands—the peaceful cottages and hamlets that are rising, many of which I visited—the new scenes of domestic and social peace and enjoyment I witnessed—the multiplying signs of intelligence, comfort, improvement—then there bursts before us, not the fictions of a poet, but the sober and delightful realities of Christian truth, which not the pen even of a Montgomery could fully describe, though it once told well the darker scenes of the picture. (Hear, hear.) For how much of all this they are indebted to the efforts of the humble Christian missionary teacher, no man can calculate. Happily, when freedom came, the restraints of the Gospel and the moral influence of the Christian teacher were there; and now the wide experiment, such as the world had never witnessed before, may challenge an impartial investigation by any government or society on earth. (Cheers.) One feature in the character of the churches—the mission churches—made up of those emancipated men, is their liberality. They had speedily learnt the great lesson of Christian liberality. I look with admiration on the large amounts they have so cheerfully contributed, and are contributing, towards the support of the institutions of religion. They have received freely, and they give freely. I know not the sum total raised by them since 1834, alone, in connexion with the missions of the various denominations in Jamaica and Guiana; but surely it cannot be less than the magnificent sum of 250,000*l.*!—A magnificent voluntary effort for Church extension. (Cheers and laughter.) Of course I am not now speaking of our Society alone; I include all, and I think I am far within the limits. (Hear, hear.) But so far as this Society is concerned, there is one fact I must name; it proved to me the liberal spirit of the people, under the judicious guidance of their ministers. They cheerfully paid, and more than paid, all the expenses connected with my visit as a deputation, so that no portion of it should fall on the funds of the Parent Society—(cheers)—a circumstance which, I flatter myself, proves tolerably well that the measure of a deputation was acceptable, and (with all humility) that the party composing it, now addressing you, was not very unacceptable. (Cheers.) And here may I express one word, for it deserves many, as to the gratification I felt in the courteous and fraternal manner with which I was welcomed, not by our own missionaries alone, but by those of all kindred institutions and other denominations. (Hear, hear.) The very day I landed in Jamaica I received an invitation to attend the meetings then being about to be held by the Presbyterian body; and though unable to accept the invitation, I had much pleasant intercourse with several of the excellent men of that body. (Cheers.) The Wesleyan brethren offered me, through their Chairman, the use of their chapels during my visit in Jamaica; and twice within the spacious walls of their noble edifice in the Parade, I had the privilege and delight of preaching in vast audiences to the Hebrew community of Kingston. (Hear, hear.) And our Baptist brethren were not a whit behind the very chiefest of those who gave me welcome,—not as a spy, an enemy, or a partizan, but a fellow-labourer in the great cause; and with some of them, whose names are familiar here, Knibb and Abbott, Clarke, Oughton, and Wood, I had considerable intercourse. And I am not aware that I contaminated them, or that they contaminated me. (Hear.) I dare say they love immersion as much as before (not at all an unpleasant thing in a warm climate)—(laughter)—but we did not touch the question; and I love infant baptism, though not baptismal regeneration as much as before—(cheers) but we did not touch that point. On some grave and important points we did converse, and I think frankly, on both sides; and I could not but wish that there were others on both sides—men speaking the truth in love—to converse on some litigated matters still more fully than I had leisure to do—some mists would roll away, some errors be corrected, and great benefit accrue to the cause of Christianity there, and of Christian missions in general. (Cheers.) I trust I may be allowed to say, and I feel bound to say it, not to the disparagement of others, but in vindication of our own, that our brethren are men of peace as well as zeal. They may [illegible] in common with others, [illegible]

some of the brethren as to the working of certain systems, or parts of systems, or plans of proceeding; but, as a body of men, they are neither factious, envious, unreasonable, or disappointed. (Hear.) God has smiled on their labours, and any society might be thankful to accept them as faithful, diligent, self-denying, and successful men. All may not be equal in talent, enterprise, temper, prudence, or efficiency. We never plead that they were angels, but agents—(laughter)—and they are men of like passions with others, and so, no doubt, share the imperfections inherent to poor humanity; but they are doing a great work, they are worthy of the confidence of the Society, and their testimony is worth the patient hearing and impartial examination of all. (Cheers.) To give a public and definite opinion on the religious state of the mission churches, would be a delicate and a difficult task. Yet I must confess, my full conviction is, that a large amount of real, though not of highly enlightened, piety exists among them. As a whole, I am not impressed with a belief that there is any extraordinary piety, anything approaching to the miraculous, either in our own or any other religious community there. (Hear.) The one characteristic feature is, attachment to religious ordinances. The vast majority seem to act as if under some common and powerful impulse, as though they must have their own minister, their own chapel, and be identified with a religious party, and do something to sustain by personal effort and sacrifice. (Cheers.) With many I fear this is all. There is, however, a large average amount of good moral character, a surprisingly happy amount, considering under what disadvantageous training they had been placed. I could not say the moral character is of a high order. It is negative rather than positive. There is the absence of glaring vices rather than the presence of impressive virtues. There are many too, of whom the pastors stand in doubt, and yet against whom no tangible evidence of dereliction can be found. (Hear, hear.) I apprehend the truth is, that such pastors as are most anxious for the exhibition of spiritual religion look with most anxiety on the state of things at large; while those of a more sanguine temperament, whose hopes are more easily raised, regard the state of things with more satisfaction and confidence. My conviction also is, that the present condition of the Church is not permanent or final. The transition state is not yet completed, but the changes are working favourably. As intelligence spreads among some, others begin to seek it for themselves, and these again act on others. (Hear, hear.) I cannot but entertain the hope, than if directors and committees will be faithful to their trust, and right men and measures be employed, with fidelity and diligence on the part of the agents, that within a period of five or seven years there will be far more substantial reason to rejoice on the mission churches, than even the most sanguine can now find. (Applause.) On the other hand I have my fears, that smiling as many things now are, there may yet be disastrous results, unless wise and prompt measures are employed; so that that which is crooked may be made straight, that which is lame healed, and that which is found lacking made whole. (Cheers.) After these general observations on the state of the missions, may I be allowed to advert very briefly to a few particulars. I commenced my tour in Demerara, where I found springing up an important institution for the training of native teachers and catechists, under the diligent care of our respected and devoted missionary, Mr. Wallbridge—(cheers)—and where a new chapel is immediately wanted to meet the growing demands of an increasingly populous city, and the desire of the people to hear the Word of God placed before them with fidelity and simplicity. (Hear, hear.) In George Town, also, I had the delight—and it was great delight—of visiting my old friend Mr. Ketley, formerly this Society's faithful and laborious agent there. He occupies a large field of labour, and is indefatigably and successfully occupying it. (Cheers.) Few missionaries have been more honoured in doing good; and there are few stations, in my opinion, of greater usefulness in Great Britain, or any part of the world. It was a cheering Sabbath which I spent with and among his schools and people. His wife, too, is among those who are fellow-labourers in the cause, and worthy of great esteem. My excellent friend is perhaps a little too tenacious on the question of Independency. I say this with all my love for it and for him. He is sincere and earnest. I honour him for his convictions, and I commend him and his flock to the affectionate sympathies of the friends of the Society and the churches at large. (Hear, hear.) His people showed much kindness with reference to Madagascar. Among other things, they contributed 50*l.* for a boat to be employed in aiding the escape of the persecuted native Christians from Madagascar. I felt a deep interest, too, in visiting the congregation formerly under the charge of our devoted, but martyred, Missionary Smith, of Demerara. (Hear, hear.) Many of his old friends came around me, with expressions of the liveliest joy and gratitude in the recollection of his faithful and innocent labours on their behalf. Among these were men who had [illegible] back to the estates where they were slaves; cut their due portion of grass in the loft, and reach home by the allotted time; and yet, on the Monday morning, were flogged and placed in the stocks for having dared to attend the missionary. (Hear, hear.) And here may I state a fact honourable to the negro character. I conversed with many who had suffered this harsh treatment, and on whose backs are still the marks of the laceration they suffered, for no other crime than such as that I have named; but I have never heard one vindictive syllable escape their lips. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) They often recur to the history of the past, but only to thank God for the happy change which they now experience in their privilege and condition. (Cheers.) How changed the scene! Now they can assemble in broad day-light, and bring their wives and children, and call them their own, as they never could before: they crowd to the sanctuary, listen to the sounds of mercy, and none dare to make them afraid. (Applause.) On the West coast, our excellent missionary, Mr. Scott, is rearing a suitable and substantial place of worship at the estimated cost of 2,000*l.* This sum the people are raising by their own efforts—every dollar the result of personal labour. We held missionary meeting there during my visit; and when the people had heard our plain statements respecting the demands made on the Society from various quarters where the people are less able to contribute than they are, they at once responded to the appeal of the minister, and offered to relieve the Society from the promise of its donation of 100*l.* to help them in building their new chapel. By an additional effort, said they, we can raise the sum ourselves, and we waive our claims for the 100*l.*; "yes, massa, we able—we will." (Loud cheers.) It would be long and tedious to specify every case. I pass to Berbice. In the principal town there I found a great and glorious missionary work in progress. Few men are more abundant in labours—persevering and systematic labours—than our missionary in New Amsterdam. There, also, the people are raising an excellent chapel. Within two years, they contributed specifically for it, 2,500*l.* It will cost double that sum, and they will raise it all. (Cheers.) The people determined on building, not a slight flimsy structure, just to last their own lifetime, but for their children too—such a one as a poor pious sufferer, Fitzgerald (of whom you heard a year or two ago, as remarking, as he paid his money, "God's work must be done, and I may be dead,") described to me: "We want build chapel, massa, large, strong, make him last for ever and ever—amen." (Laughter and cheers.) It displays also the liberality of the people, that at another station, Rodboro' in Berbice, a chapel has been reared at an expense of 3,500*l.*, including school and dwelling-house. Others are also in progress, and others are completed, and of which I could find much to say, but time would fail me. From British Guiana and its vast alluvial plain, I crossed to Jamaica, the beautiful magnificent, and salubrious island of Jamaica, with its stupendous mountain ranges, and luxuriant plains of rich colonial produce. My only difficulty as to this branch of our missions is, to comprise what I wish to say within a reasonable compass. If the success attending a missionary enterprise be a legitimate proof of the Divine approval of the measure that introduced it, and the means that have carried it forward, that proof is incontrovertibly there. (Hear, hear.) I do not mean that I would try every individual station by that test, but I speak of our Jamaica mission as a whole. And I do not fear to say it has been a blessing to Jamaica, and will be a blessing still. (Cheers.) Possibly, if all the other societies which were there before ours obtained a footing in the island, had doubled their energies, everything might have been done for Jamaica that could have been desired. But Episcopalians who were there, left ample room for Nonconformists—Moravians left ample room for Wesleyans—Wesleyans for Baptists—Baptists for Presbyterians, and Presbyterians for Independents; and still there is work enough to be done, and ample space for all, without any party wishing another to be out of the way. Few spots exist in the world more favoured with a zealous Christian ministry than Jamaica; and I am sincerely thankful for it. In the progress of the great cause of emancipation in the world—for onward that cause must proceed—(cheers)—many eyes will return towards Jamaica. Its prosperity will accelerate the freedom of other lands, and that prosperity is identified with the progress of pure and enlightened Christianity. (Cheers.) May I add, that I think, for the religious interests of Jamaica; for truth, peace, and prosperity—one great desideratum is, a visit from some of our wealthy, intelligent, and religious lay gentlemen. Just let them pass the winter months there—a delightful escape from English inconveniences (as I found it)—(laughter)—instead of a tour of mere gratification along the Rhine, just let them cross to Kingston, pass Mont Diavolo, and feast on the rich and varied scenery of those enchanting regions, and the good they would effect is incalculable, even though it might not be all they wished. But, by addressing churches and pastors the expression of sympathy, the mingling with the congregations as a [illegible]

all the speeches made on the platform of Exeter-hall, or the pamphlets that issue from Paternoster-row. (Cheers.) One important thing I must be allowed to add in relation to our mission churches in the West. I anticipate their being in a position to support themselves ere long without pressing on the funds of the Parent Society. (Loud cheers.) Many of them have become so already. (Hear, hear.) Some resolved on it while I was there, others are approaching to it, and all are honourably desirous of it. With few exceptions I think they will shortly be self-sustained; so that the resources hitherto expended on them will henceforth be available for other fields. (Applause.) In conclusion, I would say, this Society has ample reason for devout acknowledgment in the manifest blessings which God has bestowed on the labours of its agents in all that portion of the missionary field which I have been permitted to visit. (Cheers.) Had the Society existed for nothing else than to do what it has done in Guiana and Jamaica, it has existed for great and noble objects, it has accomplished a service worth existing for—(cheers)—and it may at this moment turn from the dark and afflictive scenes of Tahiti and Madagascar, and rejoice over the bright and prosperous scenes of the West,—there, thank God, and take courage. (Loud cheers.)—Pat.

MISCELLANEOUS.

English Names.—In announcing the names of Queen Victoria's third child, "Alice Maud Mary," the Times praises them as "indisputably English;" and the Post, going a step further, says they are "of pure English origin." It would be puzzling to find any names of English origin. Two of the names, disputation waived, may be considered English after an Irish fashion—Alice and Maud, which are German. We do not remember that Swift proves Mary to be indisputably English, in common with Epaminondas, and other names in vogue before the days of Caractacus; it is commonly considered of Hebrew origin; and it would be interesting to discover that it had been borrowed by the Jews from the Anglo-Saxons.—Spectator.

Arrival of the King of Hanover.—Precisely at twenty minutes before four yesterday afternoon, his Majesty the King of Hanover and suit landed at the Custom-house quay, from the Eagle Government steamer, having the Royal standard at its mainmast. His Majesty appeared in health, but more than usually pale. Indeed, the reception he met with was not calculated to raise his spirits. The number of persons assembled was about 700; and his Majesty, followed by a Hanoverian officer, walked uncovered through the crowd, which formed two lines to admit of their passage. Not a hat was raised—not a single cheer greeted his arrival on the shores of his native land. At length hisses and groans commenced, and became general. As his Majesty ascended the steps of the Custom-house, a respectable-looking man exclaimed, with a strong voice, "Don't hiss the poor old man; let us be thankful to God he is not King of England!" This remark was loudly cheered. I have witnessed the arrival of many noble personages, but never witnessed such a reception as the present, and never was to see such another.—Globe of Friday.

The King of Hanover.—Upon the carriage, containing the King of Hanover, and the Duchess of Gloucester, passing through the marble arch of Buckingham Palace, on Saturday, several hundreds of those who had assembled at that spot, partially closed round the windows of the royal equipage, and greeted his Majesty in the most respectful and affectionate manner, taking off their hats and saluting the king with every appearance of warmth and attachment. His Majesty, who looked remarkably well, and who walks firmly and uprightly as in his younger days, will enter upon his 73rd year this day, having been born on the 5th of June, 1771. His Majesty is labouring slightly under the effects of deafness, but in every other respect the king is in the enjoyment of excellent health. The King of Hanover's stay in this country is expected to be prolonged for five or six weeks.—Times.

Conservative Alarms in Ireland.—The Conservative organs teem with statements that may well appal the stoutest heart. According to their representations, the worst scenes of the French Revolution were spectacles of virtue compared with those which the state of Ireland now exhibits. The Christian religion has not given place to the adoration of the Goddess of Reason; but to some more sensual and revolting—to something which the Dublin Evening Mail terms "one of the most extraordinary compounds of blasphemy, cant, and treason, which the pages of history, sacred or profane, have recorded since the days of Nebuchadnezzar's golden image, set up in the plains of Dura." The name of Daniel O'Connell, we are gravely informed by the same authority, is to be inserted in the prayers of the Romish Church, after the name of her Majesty, and before the commencement of the holy sacrifice of the Mass. And the Mail goes on to say, the bishops of Ireland—the new authorised phrase for the Popish [illegible]—have put their heads together for the purpose of setting up a brazen image of the Great Dan, as an object of the prayers and worship of the faithful; and have deemed that propitiatory sacrifices!!! are necessary to the worship." Why the word "brazen" has been put in italics we were at a loss to discover, until we turned to another statement which we find in the same columns. Brass has been preferred to other metals, gold being evidently too expensive in a country so depauperated; and lead, as it will be seen, is in demand for, if possible, higher purposes. "It is a remarkable feature in the times," the Evening Mail informs us, "that the peasantry are everywhere purchasing up tea-lead from grocers throughout the provinces; at first the circumstance was not noticed; but there is no strong reason to believe that the tea-lead is purchased for making bullets." Let Sir James Graham look to this. We trust the Arms Bill will be made a perfect thing in its way, by an additional clause against the possession of tea lead. The Evening Mail does not inform us of another suspicious fact, which we have reason to believe, that the demand for gunpowder tea has gone hand in hand with that to which we have alluded. Everything, indeed, breathes warfare and defiance. The very names proposed at the Repeal Association are belligerent. Thus we have a Mr. Dart "making some very sharp and pointed remarks;" a Master Power "concluding a forcible address," and a Miss Maria Shield taking the cause under her protection; large subscriptions, also, we perceive, have been received from Swords.—Chronicle.

PEACE CONVENTION.—We are informed that at the close of the Anti-Slavery Convention, which commences its sittings on the 13th of this month, there is to be held a convention of the friends of universal peace, to which delegates have been appointed, not only from various parts of the United Kingdom, but also from the continent of Europe and from America. Amongst those from the former, the Marquis de Rochefoucault Liancourt has been deputed by the Peace Society of Paris, of which he is the illustrious president. The object of the society is "to deliberate upon the best means, under the Divine blessing, to show the world the evil and inexpediency of the spirit and practice of war, and to promote permanent and universal peace, on the principle that war is inconsistent with the spirit of Christianity, and the true interests of mankind."—Pat.

NEW POST-OFFICE CONVENTION BETWEEN ENGLAND AND FRANCE.—Yesterday the employés at the General Post-office and the branch offices were making every arrangement for the new post-office convention between England and France, which comes into operation this day, the 1st of June, by which the British rate on all letters to France and Algeria, or to countries through France, is reduced to 5d. on a letter not exceeding half an ounce, and the French rate to 5d. (10 sous) under the weight of a quarter of an ounce. To Spain and Portugal, Sardinia, and the southern states of Italy (when not conveyed by Mediterranean packets, via Falmouth) 10d. India, &c., as far as Bombay, 1s. 10d., and any British colony or foreign country beyond sea (except the Mediterranean), via France, 1s. 3d.

MRS. FRY.—This distinguished and truly benevolent lady took her departure from Paris, on Wednesday, the 25th ult. During a whole month Mrs. Fry has been fully occupied in public religious services, visiting prisons and schools, and holding meetings at her own apartments for pious and charitable purposes. Persons of all ranks and denominations have frequented her meetings and soirées, and she has laboured with unwearied zeal to do them good. The last public act of Mrs. Fry was to visit the Wesleyan day-school, at the chapel, Rue Ménilmontant. On Tuesday evening, the 23rd ult., the children, with many of their parents, were assembled in the chapel. After having addressed the parents on the vast importance of religion, and the necessity of placing a good example continually before their offspring, Mrs. Fry, in the most affectionate manner, spoke to the children, and called on several of them to read aloud parts of the Holy Scriptures, and then concluded with an earnest prayer for the parents and the children. The meeting was numerously attended, and the people appeared to be deeply interested in the whole service. One of the many good things Mrs. Fry and Mr. Gurney have done in Paris, is the institution of a society for the translation of religious and scientific books into Greek, for the use of the rising generation of Greeks in their own country. Such books are much wanted, and it may be hoped will be made a great blessing. Mrs. Fry's visit to Paris will long be remembered with grateful affection.—Ibid.

BROUGHAM, during "the Queen's trial," being over-ruled on some point, dashed down his brief, and rushed from the House of Lords with indignant scorn. Lord Lauderdale, catching hold of him at the door, exclaimed, entreatingly, "Where are you going to?" The offended majesty of the bar slily whispered, "To get a mutton-chop!!!"—Ibid.

SINGULAR DISCOVERY AND CATASTROPHE.—The late Mr. Ford, a gentleman well acquainted with the [illegible] to trace a villain who had forged his name and drawn large sums out of the hands of his banker. Mr. Ford, observing that the forged notes were all spelt according to auricular orthography, instantly conceived that the forgery was committed by a foreigner; and soon after strongly suspected the minister's own secretary (then present) to be the forger. With this man, however, he was left by the minister to consider what were the most prudent steps to be taken to make a discovery. After a little conversation between them, Mr. Ford proposed inserting advertisements in all the public papers, offering therein a reward to the discoverer; to which the secretary very readily agreed: but Mr. Ford, under the pretence of having left his spectacles at home desired the secretary to write, and that he would dictate; and so contrived it, that he introduced into the advertisements every word which in the forged drafts had been spelt according to auricular orthography; and as every word tallied to a tittle, Mr. Ford retired, satisfied in his own mind that he had discovered the man. The advertisements were, however, printed in the public papers; and about a fortnight afterwards Mr. Ford waited upon the minister, but found only the secretary at home. After mutual civilities, Mr. Ford placed himself nearly vis-a vis to the secretary, who asked him whether he had discovered the forger? Mr. Ford, looking the secretary stedfastly in the face, replied—"I have." He then perceived such a sudden change of countenance, that as soon as the secretary had so far recovered his alarm as to ask him, "Who is the man?" Mr. Ford, clapping his hand violently upon the knee of the secretary, said—"You, Sir, are the man!" Conscious guilt struck him to the soul, and the window being near and open, he instantly jumped out, and impaled himself upon the iron rails before the door.—Pat.

GOVERNESSES BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—A numerous assembly took place on Thursday, at the Hanover-square Rooms, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge in the chair, for the purpose of passing resolutions regarding the importance of at once establishing this institution. The promoters have three objects in view. 1. "To afford assistance, privately and delicately (as in the Literary Fund), to English governesses in temporary distress. 2. When a sufficient sum shall have been accumulated, to grant annuities to governesses in their old age. 3. When a sufficient number of names shall have been furnished, to open a provident fund, by which governesses may, by their own subscriptions, secure annuities for themselves." The Duke of Rutland, Earls of Manvers and Jermyn, the Bishop of Norwich, the Dean of Chichester, the Hon. Captain Maude, the Hon. Henry Pierrepont, were among the principal speakers; and the sum subscribed, on the spot, amounting to nearly 500*l.*, speaks powerfully in favour of the success of the undertaking. A more deserving object than that which the Governesses' Benevolent Institution encompasses cannot be well conceived; and from the respectability of the meeting, and the effect produced upon it by the able manner in which the several speakers placed the object before them, there can be no doubt that the means will be forthcoming proportioned to the greatness of the result that must arise out of such an institution.—Ibid.

FERNANDO PO.—The Majestic, which arrived at Liverpool from Africa on Monday, brings intelligence that Fernando Po was taken possession of by the Commander of the Spanish war-brig Nervion, on the 21st of March last, in the name of Queen Isabella; he hoisted the flag of his country, and fired a salute.—Ibid.

CANADA.—Among the many addresses of welcome which Sir Charles Metcalfe has received, was one signed by 4,000 of the inhabitants of Montreal; scarcely a name of importance or respectability being omitted. The address says:—"Whilst from the present address to your Excellency all party opinion is excluded, we, nevertheless, may be permitted to express our conviction, that in the government of this country are difficulties of no ordinary character, requiring that in the reciprocal discharge of our respective duties our conduct should be marked by a singleness of purpose having only for its end the public good. It will give to us the utmost satisfaction, that so acting, we are able faithfully to accord to the measures of your Excellency's Government our approbation and support." In his reply, Sir Charles observes:—"In accepting the trust confided to me by her gracious Majesty, I was deeply impressed with a conviction that the Government of this country would be attended with great difficulties. Since my arrival here, I have become satisfied that the difficulties are even greater than I imagined, and that I shall need the support of all whose single purpose is the public good."

The Kingston Loyalist describes Sir Charles Metcalfe's liberality as having no bounds. Among his donations are mentioned 50*l.* to the Kingston Roman Catholic Church; some large sums (alluded to, but not specified) to another church and the Mechanics' Institution; 10*l.* to a Female Benevolent Society; and 50*l.* to the Quebec Mechanics' Institute.

Meetings had been held in Upper and Lower Canada to petition for legislative "protection" in the shape of restrictive duties on the importation of agricultural produce from the United States.—Pat.

WEST INDIES.—The West India mail furnishes intelligence from the whole of the islands up to the end of April, and in one or two instances even to the beginning of May.

The Jamaica papers allude to the satisfactory condition of the treasury, which, at the Board of Commissioners for Public Accounts, was stated to have been 119,627*l.* 18s. 8d. on the 31st of December last, while the September quarter had not shown more than 108,497*l.* 19s. 6d. The new tariff had made a considerable accession to the funds of the Government. Improvements in the distillation of rum were occupying the attention of the planters. With respect to the condition of the crops, the advices read rather favourably; also, of the sugar plantations, there appeared to be doubts of the coming crop yielding an average equal to that of last year, occasioned by the drought.

In the Demerara, Barbadoes, and Trinidad papers, the question of emigration is much discussed; and in the former colony in connexion with the departure of a number of Coolies, who were returning to their native land with wealth amassed to the extent of 22,000 dollars, 16,000 of which they had actually taken with them. Although they accumulate their wages without giving them the slightest circulation in the locality, they are allowed to be an industrious, persevering, and quietly-conducted race of people. Government are urged by some of the influential planters to encourage the emigration of the natives of the East.

In Demerara a strict investigation into the exercise of powers under trust properties, either bequeathed or sequestered for the benefit of creditors, was occasioning considerable sensation among parties who had been deputed to fill such appointments. The Troughton property is cited as an instance, on a large scale, in which the intervention of the authorities could be used with profit to facilitate the payment of a dividend to the numerous creditors, to whom it would be useful.—Ibid.

HAYTI.—The following particulars of the progress of the revolutionary troops against the Haytien Government have been received at Lloyd's, from their agent at Aux Cayes, under date of the 24th of March last:—"Two actions were fought between the patriots and the Government troops—one at Numero Deux, to the westward of Jeremie; the other at Pestel, to the eastward—in both of which the result was fatal to the Government party; their generals and many men were killed, many joined the popular army, and the rest fled. The patriot chiefs are General Herard, with the title of 'Chief of execution of the wishes of the sovereign people, and of its resolutions;' General Lazare, who commanded at Numero Deux, and has been greatly instrumental in the success of the cause, he having taken arms at the first rising; and Colonel Giffrard, the commander at Pestel, to whose daring bravery the patriot cause is also much indebted. Fresh troops sent from Port-au-Prince only tended to swell the ranks of the popular army, which now directed its attack on this town, preparatory to marching on the capital. General Herard arrived here on the 7th instant, and though General Borgella made preparations for defence, he was induced to surrender unconditionally through the representations of the inhabitants, and the fact of his having but 800 unwilling men to oppose 12,000 decided troops. The town was then peaceably taken possession of by General Herard, and a committee of twelve members named for the Provisional Government of the district. The quietness was, however, disturbed by an awful event, the explosion of the arsenal, well stocked with powder, situate in the centre of the town, the director of that establishment having shut himself up therein for twenty-six hours, obstinately declaring his intention of blowing it up, and resisting all threats and entreaties made to induce him to abandon his intention. Two squares of houses were consumed by the fires which immediately communicated, and many more were much shattered. The submission of Aux Cayes gave the final blow to the power of President Boyer, and, accordingly, on the 13th instant, he embarked with all his family on board the sloop-of-war Scylla. His abdication was published the next day. On the 15th instant General Herard left this for Port-au-Prince with his whole army, and we are now in daily expectation of accounts of the formation of a new Government, which we hope will have the effect of restoring tranquillity to the country. No vessel of war has visited us, if we except her Majesty's brig Pilot, Captain Houston, who called off port for one hour, but refused to remain, though particularly requested to do so by the merchants here, as we then could not foresee the peaceful termination of the revolution. We, likewise, made repeated applications to our Consul at Port-au-Prince on the same subject, but without success, though there were three vessels at that place."—Pat.

REVOLT IN CUBA.—The Journal du Havre contains the following account of the late revolt in the island of Cuba, of which only very slight details have been given in the Madrid journals.

"On the night of March 27, about 400 negroes, belonging to the several sugar plantations in the Bembo district rose to execute a plan which they had conceived of killing the masters, and burning their habitations. The slaughter was commenced in the Pensalves plantation, at one in the morning, by the murder of three persons, viz., the English engineer and his two assistants. It was the moment of relieving the watchmen, and, the alarm being given, the great bulk of the persons employed got safe off. The insurgents immediately made for the Louisa plantation, where they expected to be joined by other slaves. But the alarm had been given here also, and only three persons perished. Thence they advanced in military order, clad in their holiday clothes, with colours flying, and holding leather shields to keep off the balls. They thus proceeded to the Aquilar property, all the inhabitants of which were proscribed. They were saved by the presence of mind of a faithful negress, who came out and persuaded the insurgents that they would lose their time in going further, as her master had fled. They then turned aside, and dispersed themselves through the surrounding country, pillaging and burning all the plantations. As soon as the first burst of terror had passed over, the inhabitants who had fled, armed such of their negroes as had remained faithful, and repaired in small troops towards Bembo, where, in a short time, about 150 men were assembled. The insurgents soon came to the place, singing songs of triumph, and when they had advanced tolerably close to the village, the whites, although imperfectly armed, charged them. The insurgents resisted the shock, and in their turn making a dash, forced the whites to retreat. The latter again attacked, but were repulsed with loss. The insurgents then obtained possession of the village, and set fire to some of the houses. The whites, ashamed of such a termination to their attack, determined to try another charge, and this time they held together so firmly, that the slaves were at first shaken, and finally routed. They fled in every direction, leaving fifty dead. This advantage was decisive, for in a few hours the insurgents had lost all appearance of organization, and the day was spent in hunting them down. The next day everything appeared at an end, when intelligence was brought that 150 negroes from the Cardenaf railroad were advancing, spreading fire and destruction on their passage. They were easily dispersed, and sixty-three of them killed. After these defeats, the woods and sugar-cane fields were filled with fugitive negroes, against whom an active pursuit was instituted. By a strange calculation, the inhabitants endeavoured to screen them as much as possible from the search that was made, offering them an asylum and pardon. Tranquillity was soon restored in the Bembo district, but new insurrections were spoken of in the direction of Manriquez, where a number of the fugitives had collected. The Governor of Matanzas went there with a detachment of dragoons. Out of 550 negroes engaged in the revolt, 150 or 200 were either killed or put an end to themselves in the woods. About 100 more were made prisoners."—Ibid.

THE KING OF PRUSSIA'S life was placed in some jeopardy the week before last, upon his visiting the deer-park near Potsdam, where a furious stag, which had already upon several previous occasions done serious mischief, was on the point of attacking the King. He snatched a rifle from the only keeper in attendance, and killed the animal when it was in full career against him.—Ibid.

FRIGHTFUL INUNDATION—LOSS OF UPWARDS OF FOUR THOUSAND LIVES!—A letter written by a Jew of Trikala, the chief town of [illegible], in Thessalia, gives an affecting account of an inundation, by which between four and five thousand persons perished. According to this statement, many of the largest [illegible] were broken down by the weight of the many people who climbed up to their tops to escape from the flood.—Pat.

SPAIN.—Important intelligence from Madrid has arrived by a telegraphic despatch. Espartero, on the 26th inst., issued a decree dissolving the Cortes, and convoking it for the 26th of August. The Regent will thus have three months to mature his plans, and by that time the people, perhaps, will begin to see which of the contending parties are the real friends of the country. The National Guards of Madrid, and, indeed, of most other towns, are in favour of the Regent, and it is therefore probable that all the respectable middle classes entertain similar opinions.—Pat. 1st June.

HOLLAND.—The Second Chamber of the States-General of Holland, after a debate which lasted several days, rejected at its sitting of the 27th ult., by a majority of thirty votes to twenty, the bill relative to the conversion of the national debt. This vote —a decided act of hostility to the Government—was carried because it was considered that if the bill passed, the Chamber would not for a long time have an opportunity of examining the state of the national finances.—Ibid

HUNGARY.—The Augsburg Gazette of the 26th ult. states that the Comitats of the States of Hungary had addressed the following demands to the two Chambers:—1. That when the two Chambers had twice voted a law, it should be considered ipso facto a law. 2. The incorporation of Transylvania, liberty of the press, incorporation of Gallicia, the establishment of a special journal of the States.—Ibid.

TURKEY.—Letters from Constantinople of the 10th May, state that Sarim Effendi had been dismissed from the post of Minister for Foreign Affairs, and that Rifaat Bey (a partisan and pupil of Redschid Pacha) had been appointed in his place.—Ibid.

EDWD. SANDERS,
Offg. Secy. to the Govt. of India, Mily. Dept.

BY THE COMMANDER IN-CHIEF.
GENERAL ORDERS TO THE QUEEN'S TROOPS.
Head Quarters, Simlah, 21st July, 1843.

No. 45.—1. At a general court martial re-assembled at Cawnpore, on Monday the 26th day of June 1843, Lieutenant Charles Abney Mount, of Her Majesty's 50th or Queen's own regiment, was arraigned on the following charges:

Charges.—1st.—For conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, at Cawnpore, on the evening of the 11th of May 1843, in having at the Billiard room of the regiment, and in the presence of several officers of his own and of another corps, made use of highly provoking language to Assistant Surgeon Joseph Burke, of the same regiment, whom he grossly insulted by an unwarrantable imputation of cowardice.

2d.—In having, on the same night, sent a hostile message to the said Assistant Surgeon Joseph Burke, challenging him to fight a duel, [illegible] the Articles of War [illegible].

3d.—For highly unbecoming conduct on the morning of the 12th of May 1843, in having entered into a personal altercation with, and used insulting expressions towards the said Assistant Surgeon Joseph Burke, on the ground where they had met to fight a duel.

REMARKS BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF IN INDIA.

The Commander-in-Chief has confirmed the finding and sentence on the 1st charge, though he does not wholly concur in the two omissions of the court. By rejecting the words "and a gentleman," the court would separate that which the custom of the service generally unites, and would endeavour to draw a very injurious distinction between the terms. The parties were in a billiard room, and the conversation even had no relation to duty or to military subjects.

His Excellency is sorry that any court should thus affirm, that "insulting by an unwarrantable imputation of cowardice" was not unbecoming conduct in a gentleman.

His Excellency does not agree in the propriety of the court's omission of the term "grossly," for a more gross insult can scarcely be imagined than the imputation above mentioned contained.

The Commander-in-Chief now conveys to Lieutenant Mount his decided disapprobation and censure of his conduct on the night of the 11th May. The disgraceful altercation with Assistant Surgeon Burke, was commenced by Lieutenant Mount, and considering that some disagreement had existed between these parties but a few weeks before, which had called forth an opinion of the commanding officer and the senior officers of the 50th regiment, Lieutenant Mount showed, on this occasion, that he held their opinions very cheap, when they were at variance with his own feelings of displeasure or resentment.

This reprimand is to be read to Lieutenant Mount, in presence of the Major General commanding the station of Cawnpore, and before the officers of Her Majesty's 50th regiment, assembled for that purpose; Lieutenant Mount is then to be released and to return to his duty.

2. Before the same general court martial re-assembled at Cawnpore, on Saturday, the 1st July 1843, Assistant Surgeon Joseph Burke, of Her Majesty's 50th or Queen's own regiment of foot, was arraigned on the following charge:

Charge.—For conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, at Cawnpore, in the following instances:

1st.—In having at the billiard room of the regiment, on the evening of the 11th of May 1843, and in the presence of several officers of his own and of another corps, made use of highly provoking language towards, and giving the lie to Lieutenant Charles Abney Mount, of the same regiment.

2d.—In having, the following morning, on the ground where he had met the said Lieutenant Charles Abney Mount, to fight a duel, in consequence of the quarrel of the evening before, entered into a personal altercation with the said Lieutenant Mount, and used ungentlemanly and threatening language towards him.

3d.—In having terminated the meeting alluded to by falsely stating, that the expressions he had used on the previous evening at the billiard room, were used generally, without individual application, and without any intention to insult the said Lieutenant Mount, the same assertion being made in a document written by him (Assistant Surgeon Burke) dated May 12th 1843; that document likewise untruly purporting to be "a simple and correct recital of what occurred."

Finding.—The court, from the evidence before them, are of opinion, that the prisoner, Assistant Surgeon Joseph Burke, Her Majesty's 50th or Queen's own regiment, is.

On the first count, guilty.
On the second count, guilty.
On the third count, guilty.

And the court do find that the conduct of which they have found the prisoner guilty is unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.

Sentence.—The court do sentence the prisoner, Assistant Surgeon Joseph Burke, Her Majesty's 50th or Queen's own regiment, to be dismissed from Her Majesty's service.

Recommendation by the Court.—The court, having found the prisoner, Assistant Surgeon Burke, guilty, as above, and taking into consideration the very favorable testimony to his character from the [illegible] and the other officers of the regiment to which he belongs, as well as the peculiar nature of the evidence before them, do strongly recommend him to the mercy of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

Confirmed, but the penalty is remitted.

17th July, 1843.

Remarks by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India.—The Commander-in-Chief has been induced to remit the penalty in this instance for the following reasons: [illegible] that in the altercation between Lieutenant Mount and Assistant Surgeon Burke, on the night of the 11th May, the former was evidently the aggressor, and made use of offensive language and insinuations sufficient to rouse the indignation of Assistant Surgeon Burke, and of all present.

2d.—The proof of the 2d charge rests wholly upon the evidence of his antagonist, Lieutenant Mount, and considering that Lieutenants Mullen and Smyth, who were present, declined to give evidence, because it might serve to criminate themselves, His Excellency thinks that the court should have received Lieutenant Mount's evidence with much caution and doubt, if at all, and he is glad to perceive, that Lieutenant Mount was only called in after considerable hesitation and discussion.

In point of law, Lieutenant Mount was an unobjectionable evidence,—but it appears to the Commander-in-Chief, that the threatening terms should have been proved (if possible) by a third person, and not under very delicate circumstances by the individual to whom they were addressed, and by him only.

3d.—The prosecutor Lieutenant Colonel Anderson, declined to call upon Lieutenant Mount, as it would have been "a departure from his sense of justice," and the prisoner also objected to it, because the silence of Lieutenants Mullen and Smyth deprived him of the power of disproving or weakening the evidence of Lieutenant Mount.

4th.—The court would not permit two questions to be put to Lieutenant Mullen by Assistant Surgeon Burke, the object of which was to disprove the third charge.

5th.—The strong recommendation of the court that Mr. Burke's case should be viewed with the eye of mercy.

The Commander-in-Chief desires Assistant Surgeon Burke to reflect on the depth to which the rash use of one word was the means of sinking him, and he trusts that he will never again apply the offensive term to any gentleman.

Assistant Surgeon Burke is to be called upon to hear the sentence and these remarks read, as before ordered, and then to be released and to return to his duty.

By order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,
MARCUS BARR, Captain,
Assistant Adjutant General H. M. Forces in India.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 431. Vol. IX.] SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, AUGUST 24th. 1843. Price 2 Co's. Rs. monthly, or 20 Rs. yearly, if paid in advance.

The July Mail came in rather earlier than the state of the weather authorized us to expect, on the 17th of the month. It brought intelligence of no transaction of any magnitude, but it told us how the elements of extensive changes were at work in the United Kingdom. Foremost in importance is the condition of Ireland, where O'Connel is pushing on the Repeal agitation with unabated energy, arraying the whole Catholic population against existing institutions, rousing their minds with the most inflammatory addresses, but carefully avoiding any expression on which the charge of sedition could be fixed. On the other hand, the Ministry continue to pour in troops, and to put the island in a state of defence, but refrain from any movement which might serve to bring on a collision, and end in a civil war. It is evident that the demagogue is much more master of Ireland than the Queen; but it is impossible to discover the means by which he intends to bring the masses of the population to bear upon the establishment of his independent legislature, which must in the present temper of the people, terminate, in an attempt to establish a separate government. He declares his object to be constitutional, the repeal of a certain obnoxious act of Parliament which united the two countries; but he has manifested no disposition to petition the Legislature for the repeal of the act; on the contrary, he seems determined to make no application at all to Parliament; as the following extract from his last address, in which, we have also the last edition of his Schedule of Repeal blessings will shew. "And so he said to the tardy offer of justice to Ireland, "You're too late; you should have spoken sooner." (Great cheering.) Mr. O'Connell next alluded to the opinions of Saurin, Plunkett, and Bushe, regarding the illegality of the act for abolishing the Irish Parliament. The union was passed in violation of law, and they required no act of Parliament to obtain a restoration of their Parliament. Their beloved Queen had only to issue her writ, summoning a Parliament in College-green, and the measure would be accomplished. Hurrah, then, for the Queen! (Long-continued cheering.) The blessings of local legislation were incalculable. They should have this principle established, that every man—the Protestant, the Catholic, the Presbyterian, the Methodist—should pay his own clergyman. (Cheers.) They would have free-trade. (Cheers.) They would have three pounds of sugar for the price of one pound now; and the same increase in tea and coffee; and the old women would then have three pennyworth of tobacco for every pennyworth they obtained now. Then the absentee drain would be stopped—nine millions a year would be kept in the country. The tenantry would be treated with justice, the extermination system would be at an end, and the recriminatory murders—the horrid scenes of blood which resulted from the extermination system, would also cease. (Cheers.) Would they not, then, join him in struggling for Repeal? (Tremendous cheering.) They were now temperate teetotallers. In his mercy the eternal Creator raised up Father Mathew, and gave to the people the grace of becoming his disciples. (Cheers.) The star of freedom was rising, it was on the horizon—soon would it shine over them, and, whilst they pitied the fate of other nations, they would rejoice in the glory of their own beloved land:—

"The nations have fallen, but thou still art young;
Thy star is but rising whilst others have set:
And though slavery's gloom o'er thy morning hath hung,
The full noon of freedom shall beam round thee yet!"

As yet O'Connel has taken no one step towards Repeal; he has done nothing but muster the Repealers, and keep their minds up at fever heat, rather we should say at the point where "spirits boil." Any single overt action in contravention of the Act of Union, will bring the Repealers within the grasp of the law; but any attempt to enforce the law would probably bring on the crisis which O'Connel evidently longs for, and enable him to appeal to his followers against the ruling authorities, as having first "made war upon them." But it is impossible that matters should continue in their present anomalous state for any length of time. Though O'Connel's strength lies in that almost miraculous change which Father Mathew has made in the national habits, and in the temperance of his followers, who would otherwise have long since brought on a row and a rebellion; yet in the present inflammable state of his three millions of repealers, a single spark may create a general flame, and that spark the most trifling circumstance may supply. Upon the result of this movement it is utterly impossible to speculate. The Repeal of the Union, England cannot, under any possible circumstances, concede. There must therefore be a farther, perhaps a larger, instalment of the reform of grievances. The olive branch must be of a different genus from that which Sir James Graham offered the Dissenters, and which they regarded as a stinging nettle. No reform can be successful in healing the breach, which leaves the ecclesiastical sore untouched, and continues to consign all the ecclesiastical revenues of the country to a Church which embraces only a twelfth of the inhabitants. This grievance reformed, and the evils of absenteeism abated, it is possible that the Irish may fold up for a few years the hope of being again a nation. But it is much to be doubted whether any concessions, such as a British Ministry would dare to offer, can ward off a civil war.

The Education clauses of the Factory Bill, Sir James Graham pledged himself on the 15th of June to withdraw, in consequence of the strenuout opposition which had been offered to them by the Dissenting community. Since the repeal of the Test and Corporation Act, and the admission of Dissenters to an equality of civil privileges with the members of the Established Church, there has been no occasion on which their actual strength has been prominently exhibited, and hence, many of the organs of the Church had been led to suppose that Dissent itself was on the wane. That idea has now been somewhat rudely dispelled; and it is become evident that whenever any such infringement of their privileges is attempted as may serve to produce unanimity among them, they are sufficiently powerful to defeat it, whoever may be their opponents. This power we wish them always to possess and to exercise; more than this cannot be desirable. The Educational clauses of the Factory Bill were objected to because they were based upon the old idea, which it had long been attempted—but in vain—to maintain by pains and penalties, "that there was to be one church as there was one nation." The "church is no longer co-extensive with the nation" as Dr. Arnold has justly remarked, and the determination to establish a system of national education, to which Dissenters were to contribute, while it was to be entrusted almost exclusively to the agency of the Church, with a trifling concession to the tender consciences of seceders, was found to be impracticable at the present day. If Dissenters are to contribute to a system of public education, they will of course expect, not as a matter of grace but of right, to have a voice in its administration. We most sincerely hope that during the recess her Majesty's Ministers, discarding the advice of the two factory inspectors, Messrs. Saunders and Horner, who are supposed to have concocted the Bill, and whom the Dissenters cannot trust, will be able to mature a scheme of national instruction, which shall enlist the energies of every denomination, and secure the cordial co-operation of all classes; and this can be accomplished only by the careful omission of every clause, which shall place Dissenters in an inferior and humiliating position.

The papers state that Puseyism is losing ground; but having as yet received but one journal beyond the Monthly Times and the London Mail, we are unable to ascertain upon what facts or appearances this idea is founded. One more clergyman has quitted the ranks of Puseyism and joined the Catholics, and doubtless many others would follow the same example if they could carry their livings with them. Two centuries ago we had a similar movement in England, and it ended in the temporary abolition of Episcopacy. "Mr. Speaker," said Lord Falkland, on the 9th of February 1641, "Some have evidently laboured to bring in an English though not a Roman popery; I mean not only the outside dress of it, but equally absolute; a blind dependence of the people on the clergy, and the clergy on themselves, and have opposed the Papacy beyond the seas, that they might settle one beyond the water (Lambeth). Nay common fame is more than ordinarily false, if none of them have found means to reconcile the opinions of Rome to the preferments of England; and to be so absolutely, directly and cordially papists, that it is all that 1500£ a year can do to keep them from confessing it." Had Lord Falkland lived in our days he could not have described the present state of things in the Church more accurately than he has done in this nervous language. Next week, we shall again revert to the progress or decay of this sect, if we should find anything worthy of notice in our files. The only two circumstances, which the papers we have received state, are, that Archdeacon Wilberforce, perhaps the hottest zealot in the Puseyite camp, has been selected by Her Majesty's Ministers as the Preceptor of the Prince of Wales, who is however fortunately too young to have any arbitrary principles instilled into his mind, which would unfit him to govern a country like England. The other fact is the injury sustained by one of the large gilt candelabra, which some Puseyite friend presented to St. Leonard Shoreditch, and which in spite of every remonstrance from the congregation and the select vestry, has been planted on the altar. Some sacrilegious hand has cast down this Dagon on the floor, and inflicted serious damage on it. This is a straw, but it shews which way the wind blows. It affords another proof, among others, that the laity does not participate in the Romeward movement of the clergy.

The stability of the present Ministry is doubted by many. The Times has veered round again, and assails Sir Robert Peel's measures in no measured terms. This may be considered as a very clear index of the decay of public confidence in the Ministry. Misfortunes have crowded upon their unfortunate heads ever since they undertook to repair the injuries said to have been inflicted on the country by the Whigs. Their corn bill has satisfied no party. The manufacturers are dissatisfied with the sliding scale, the farmers are loud in their clamors against the principle of concession on which it is founded. The income tax, though in itself just and reasonable, has lost them many friends, without replenishing the Exchequer. The finances are disorganized, and Ireland is on the brink of a rebellion. We seem to be approaching some great national crisis, which will render a reconstruction of parties necessary, as a prelude to the adoption of new principles of Government. And hateful as the term Coalition is to the English nation, it is quite possible that the salvation of the country may yet depend on the coalition of the moderate Whigs and moderate Conservatives.

The honours which have been bestowed on the Scinde Heroes are announced in the papers brought by the present Mail. They embrace we believe every officer who enjoyed an opportunity of distinguishing himself in the two battles which secured us the country. They are on the same liberal scale as the rewards bestowed on the Affghan and China warriors.

We have endeavoured to make as much room as possible for extracts from the Monthly Papers; and have only to add to its intelligence, on the authority of a private letter, that H. M. 13th Light Infantry does not return to England before 1845. Lieut. Col. Squire and Capt. Meredith, are both on their way out to join it. The former will succeed to the command on Sir [illegible]ale's departure.

The Children rescued from the Khoonds.—The exertions made by the Government of British India to abolish human sacrifices among the Khoonds, are well known to the public. An officer has been stationed in the district for the express purpose of rescuing the victims they had captured for sacrifice, and using all his influence to eradicate the practice. These benevolent exertions we should be very much disposed to extol, if we could do so without the injurious inference that there was any thing extraordinary in them, or that they were not a natural result of our political position and national character. It is to abolish such diabolical practises that Providence has committed the destinies of the East to the most powerful nation in Christendom; and in the arrangements which have been made to suppress these sacrifices, we can recognize nothing beyond the performance of an obvious and imperative duty. But that duty is but half performed, if the children who have thus been rescued from the jaws of death, are not made the object of a benevolent solicitude. It is to this subject we would particularly draw the attention of the Madras Government, within whose territories the Khoond district lies. An application was forwarded to the authorities at Madras, through the regular official channel, about four months ago, for a hundred of the rescued victims, boys and girls, to be consigned to the care of the Missionaries in the neighbourhood, who were anxious to have an opportunity of training them up in a knowledge of Christian truth. The letter has never received the slightest attention. Although the Madras Government has the credit of being half a century behind the other Presidencies in liberality of sentiment, and freedom from those pagan propensities by which our government generally was at one time dishonoured, yet we are anxious to put the most charitable construction on the omission, and rather to believe that the Madras Government never received the application, than that it was thrown aside with contempt. The subject ought to engage the earnest and early attention of the Madras authorities, not only with a view of promoting the welfare of the victims, but also of shielding their own character from obloquy. In consequence of the non-arrival of any instructions from Madras, the officer in the Khoond country has disposed of the children, in a way which every friend of humanity must deplore. The boys have been made over chiefly to the Moosulmans, who will circumcise them and bring them up in the doctrines of the Koran. The girls have been sent back to a tribe of Khoonds, to become wives to their chiefs, but there is reason to fear that the practice of infanticide prevails among them. Nothing would be easier than to prevent the recurrence of so deplorable a result. The Government of Madras has only to send the strictest orders to the officer in charge of the district, to make the children over to the Missionaries, or to dispose of them in any other way which shall conduce to their safety both temporarily and spiritually. How just would be the outcry at home if it was echoed through the land that a Christian Government had made over the victims rescued from the Khoonds to the Moosulmans, to be brought up in the religion of the false prophet.

Alteration in Office Hours.—The Hurkaru of Thursday last has the following notice:

"There is a rumour afloat just now—we catch it as it passes—to the effect that the Public Offices are in future to open at 9 A. M., to close at 12; and then to be open again between the hours of 3 and 7. We really, in such times as these, cannot venture to pronounce any report altogether incredible; but we think the arrangement, if projected, is an exceedingly bad one. It will, to be sure, enable official gentlemen to pay as many visits as they like, and to eat their tiffins quietly at home; but happy the man, who can get his breakfast over by ¼ to 9; and as to the evening work, who will be pleased with the distribution of office hours, which deprives him of his evening drive. This much as regards the individual—as regards the public service, it seems to us, that very little will be gained by the change. An officer is not likely to return to his work any the fresher, for the three hours out of office, which he has been spending in his own way."

We have no means of ascertaining the period at which the present practise of commencing business at ten, and closing it at four or five, first came into vogue. The earliest notice we can find of the habits of Calcutta, does not go farther back than Sept. 1768, eleven years after the battle of Plassey, when a Mrs. Kindersley, writing to a friend in England says, "After dinner every one retires to sleep; it is a second night; every servant is gone to his own habitation; all is silence; and this custom is so universal, that it would be as unseasonable to call on any person, at three or four o'clock in the afternoon, as at the same time in the morning.—The custom of sleeping away the hottest hours in the day is necessary even to the strongest constitution. After this repose, people dress for the evening, and enjoy the air about sun set in their carriages.... in a clear airy spot free from smoke or any encumbrance, a little out of town, called the corse (because it is a road the length of a crose, or two miles) in a sort of ring, or rather angle made on purpose to take the air in....The rest of the evening is for society."

The next account we have met with relates to the year 1770, in the early part of which the Director of the Dutch settlements of Chinsurah proceeded to Calcutta to pay a ceremonial visit to the Governor, Mr. Cartier. The account is given by Capt. Stavorinus, who says, "About half past twelve having been formally invited to dinner by the Governor, we went again to Government House. Here we found, in a large and airy saloon, a table of sixty or seventy covers. The service was entirely of plate. The Director was seated at the upper end, on the right hand of the Governor, having on the other side the General of the English land forces. The other gentlemen in company were placed promiscuously at table. Full half of the guests were officers of the troops, for whom the Governor keeps every day open house. When the cloth was taken away, a Hookah, which is a glass filled with water, through which the smoke of tobacco is drawn, was set before every one of the Company, and after having smoked for half an hour, we all rose from table, and separated each to his respective dwelling. At six in the evening Mr. Cartier came to fetch the Director and his company, to take a ride to his country seat, Belvedere, about two Dutch miles from Calcutta, where we were entertained with an elegant concert, performed by some amateurs and an elegant supper. About twelve at night we rode back to Calcutta."

Our next quotation is from Mrs. Fay's amusing letters, from which the Star has already given us an extract. Writing ten years later than Capt. Stavorinus, in December 1780 she says: "The dinner hour as I mentioned is two, and it is customary to sit a long time at table particularly in the cold weather, for people here are mighty fond of grills and stews, which they season themselves, and generally make very hot. During dinner a good deal of wine is drunk, but very little after the cloth is removed. The custom of reposing, if not sleeping, after dinner is so general that the streets of Calcutta are from four to five in the afternoon almost as empty of Europeans as if it were midnight. Next comes the evening airings to the Course, where every one goes, though sure of being half suffocated with dust. On returning from thence tea is served, and universally drank here even during the extreme heats. After tea either cards or music fill up the space till ten, when supper is generally announced. Formal visits are paid in the evening," &c.

This habit of guzzling, and sleeping, and riding, and gambling, and guzzling again, for ten hours, between two in the afternoon and midnight, appear to have been checked by Lord Cornwallis, who was not less remarkable for the simplicity of his habits than for the greatness of his abilities. The Rev. Dr. Tennant, writing in January 1798, says "The inconveniences of lodging"—he is writing from Cawnpore—"were aggravated by a constant routine of irregularity. After dinner it was the usual custom to go to sleep in the hottest time of the day; from this every party was awakened in the evening to partake of a supper which protracted a drunken sederunt till a late hour of the next morning. Amidst constant repletion, and frequent irregularity, the climate operated with fatal influence. A reformation highly commendable has been effected, partly from necessity," (Hamilton states that when the whole English residents in Calcutta did not exceed 1200, there were 400 burials in six months) " but more by the example of a late Governor General, whose elevated rank, and noble birth gave him in a great measure the guidance of fashion. Regular hours and sobriety of conduct became as decidedly the test of a man of fashion as they were formerly of irregularity."

The practice which it is now proposed to introduce, would in all probability lead society back to the pernicious habits of former days. If there be a cessation of business during three hours of the day, from 12 to 3, it will be filled up with a hot and heavy tiffin, which will in fact become the most substantial meal of the day, and turn the evening repast into a supper; and this constant repletion will bring back that state of unhealthiness and mortality, from which the European community has long been happily free. Our present habits of taking a very slight luncheon—and those are most happy who can do without it—and postponing the substantial meal to the close of the day, has been practically found to conduce in no small degree to health and comfort; and any alteration of these hours which should multiply the inducements to gormandize, would be any thing but an improvement of our habits.

It would appear from the extracts we have given, that in the olden time, all business ceased at two. It must therefore have begun early; and accordingly we find frequent notices of breakfast at seven in the morning. But the alteration to which the Hurkaru alludes, provides for resuming business at 3, and continuing it till 7. It is easy however to foresee that the business done in the afternoon, will be little more than nominal. Men who have three hours thrown upon their hands in the middle of the day will scarcely resist the temptation of devoting a considerable portion of it to the pleasures of the table; and to return with any zest and alacrity to the desk upon a full and sleep exciting meal, will be impossible.

It is difficult to suppose that the arrangement can have been seriously contemplated. Calcutta is not now what it was when the town could conveniently close the business of the day at two, and retire to dinner and sleep. Half the business of India, political and commercial, is concentrated within the circle of the metropolis. The public establishments have increased ten fold. The houses of business have been multiplied from six to sixty. Instead of a dozen or fifteen large ships from Europe, visiting it once a twelve month, its port is crowded with shipping at all seasons of the year. The quantity of business which requires to be attended to, comes with so little abatement or interruption that the day is scarcely sufficient for completing it. No man has any time hanging heavily on his hands, except the Members of the Supreme Council. To create so large a gap in the time for business, as three hours in the day, would introduce intolerable confusion. It would be found impossible to resume the vigorous prosecution of labour after so long a relaxation; for all practical purposes the day would close at noon, and the disorganization thus occasioned in every department of labour, public and private, would render a speedy return to the old habit of completing the business of the day at one stretch, indispensably necessary.

Bishop Corrie's Alleged Pledge to the Dissenters.—Within the last month, there has been a long correspondence in the pages of the Hurkaru relative to the interference of the Bishop's College Missionaries with the Dissenting congregations to the South of Calcutta; in the course of which a letter of Bishop—then Archdeacon—Corrie to the Rev. M. Hill has been brought up, with the intent of shewing that these encroachments were a violation of his pledge. This pledge was given when the buildings of Tallygunge were made over by the London Missionary to the Christian Knowledge Society, and is contained in these words: "I need scarcely add that the same principle of non-interference with the proceedings of your Society in respect to any Missionary Stations, already formed among the Heathen, will be exercised by the Committee on any opportunity they may have of extending their labours away from large cities." The charge of bad faith thus brought against the Society attracted the attention of Bishop Wilson, who appointed a Committee to examine and report on it; and that Report has now been published, and will be found in another column. The Committee appears to have been fairly constituted; the aggressors were Puseyite Missionaries, and the Bishop placed one Puseyite and two anti-Puseyites on the Committee, which has come to the conclusion that the charges of the London Missionary Society's agents are wholly unfounded.

It is manifest from a perusal of the documents adduced by the Committee, that the negotiation which gave rise to the pledge of Bishop Corrie, had reference only to the particular district, as it is called, of Tallygunge; and it seems to have led to stipulations binding on both parties. The London Society's Missionaries engaged not to establish fresh schools in that district. This stipulation is recorded on two occasions. They were therefore at liberty to establish Missionary Schools, and of course Missionary stations, in any other district, far or near. The Report says, the Church Committee "purchased the Tallygunge Mission house, as the centre of a prepared missionary field, and with the view to keep that field their own, free from all other agency." What that field was, is to be determined not by any large views which the Gospel Propagation Society may have cherished, and which were not before the parties, but by the definite language in which the transaction was recorded at the time. It was the district of Tallygunge, and no other, from which they bought out the London Society's Missionaries, and into which, as the result of that purchase, they required a stipulation that those Missionaries should not in future intrude.

Bishop Corrie, on his part, engaged that the Gospel Propagation Society, when they had an opportunity of extending their labours, should not interfere with the operations of the London Missionary Society. We are sorry to see something like an attempt in the Report to weaken the force of this pledge of non-interference. It must of course be taken in the sense in which that devoted and single hearted Minister used it, and it can be regarded in no other light than as the counterpart of the agreement entered into by the London Missionaries, and as based upon the principle of mutual non-interference. After the arrangement had been made, the London Society's Missionaries as the Report states, established a mission at Ramakalchoke, which Mr. Boaz describes as lying in a neighbouring district. With the converts at this station, the Propagation Society's Missionaries have sorely interfered, and this has given rise to the insinuation of bad faith.

Unfortunately the limits of this district, which the Gospel Propagation Society were to keep exclusively their own, free from all other agency, were not defined. That Society give it the most extensive dimensions; and repudiate the idea of having, by the purchase, shut up their Missionary sphere, and the operations of a growing Institution like Bishop's College. Who then is to define the boundaries of the Tallygunge district? It is no civil division of territory, but rather an ecclesiastical diocess, the circumference of which has never been ascertained. Who is to determine whether Ramakalchoke lies within its limits or not? Yet upon the determination of this point the question of bad faith appears to us entirely to rest. If Ramakalchoke be within the boundary, the London Missionary Society's Missionaries are chargeable with bad faith in having intruded into it. If it be not, then the pledge which Bishop Corrie gave of not interfering with stations already formed, cannot be said to have been kept. With an agreement so loosely worded, in reference to a large tract of land the limits of which have never been fixed, it is impossible to sustain a charge of bad faith against either party; and we are sorry it was ever brought forward.

The Report puts a construction on the words "already formed," which, however ingenious, is not tenable. It endeavours to limit its application to the stations of the London Society which existed in 1823, whereas it evidently implies that the Propagation Society should not interfere with any stations, after they had been actually formed by the London Society, away from large towns. It would be preposterous to suppose that Bishop Corrie intended to limit the operations of a growing institution like the London Missionary Society to the stations which they actually occupied at that early period of their mission, and to affirm that in whatever other portion of the country they might hereafter establish Missionary stations, the Church Society claimed a right to interfere with them, and thus to do what he was so anxious to avoid, "to create a hindrance to the accomplishment of the object we all aim at."

It is impossible to rise from the perusal of these papers without the painful impression that these disputes are occasioned by the loss of those noble Christian feelings which dictated Bishop Corrie's letter. If there had been the same conviction in the minds of those now in the field which then existed in his mind, that the Missionaries of various denominations in this country were engaged in the same glorious enterprize, and that mutual discords would prove a serious obstruction to its accomplishment, the necessity of the present enquiry would never have arisen. If the spirit which his pledge exhibits, had continued to animate the Gospel Propagation Society, it would never have been made a matter of discussion, how far its Missionaries might make war on the stations of the Dissenters, without violating the letter of it.

So much for the past. As to the future, the Report is clear and decisive. It defines explicitly the course which Missions connected with the Church of England, will hereafter pursue. "The future operations of a Society of the Church of England cannot have regard in all its operations to the proceedings of a Society in avowed dissent from her." There is a world of meaning in this well turned period. It dispels at once and for ever all hope on the part of Dissenters, that Missionaries of the Episcopal Church will not interfere with their labours. As if however, there might be some possibility of mistaking the object of an assertion apparently so reasonable, the last sentence in the Report clenches the nail. "What we would insist on is the utter incompetency of a Diocesan Committee, or even of a Home Committee to pledge a Society of the Church of England to an engagement of the kind,—that is of non-interference—with Dissenting Missionaries of any denomination." This Report has been received and unanimously adopted by the Committee, and ordered to be printed and published.

This entire repeal of the engagement of Bishop Corrie, and this declaration that any subsequent engagement of non-interference which even the Home Committee of the Society, its responsible Directors, may make, cannot be binding on any of its Missionaries, has created no surprise in our minds. We knew well, that the disputes between the Dissenters and the Puseyite Missionaries in the South, must come at last to this termination. For, though the Church of England is not the Established Church in this country in anything like the same sense in which it is the Established Church in England and Ireland, yet, its feelings towards all who dissent from it, are not changed by this circumstance. It still continues to regard Dissenting Ministers and Missionaries in all parts of the world as in pretended Holy Orders, and their ministrations as irregular, and wholly inefficacious for salvation; and it must therefore regard the acquisition of converts from whatever churches they from an act, not only uncensurable, but commendable. How far these views, which are essential and not incidental to the Established Church, are consonant with the spirit of the Gospel, is one part of the controversy between Church-men and Dissenters; but while the Church maintains them, it is natural that it should act up to them. With some members of the Establishment, with Corrie and Martyn for instance, these Church principles were softened down by the sweet influence of evangelical feelings, and they regarded the Dissenting Missionaries of their day as brethren and not aliens, as fellow workers and not interlopers. But a party has now arisen in the Church of England distinguished for carrying these principles to the utmost limits of sectarian intolerance. They not only deny the validity of all ordinances performed by Dissenters, and regard their converts as mere Heathens, but maintain the propriety of making them over to the secular power, to be burnt to death, if they will not recant. This contempt of others is, as usual, accompanied by an overweening conceit of their own prerogatives. They consider the child regenerated as soon as they have baptized it; they regard the bread and wine, when consecrated by them as transubstantiated into "the very flesh and blood which were given and shed for the life of the world," and as the means of spiritual life. Such men must of course consider it an act of religious merit to banish and drive away Dissenters with all faithful deligence or as our friend Dousterswivel describes it. The declaration of the Report that no Committee can bind them to non-interference, will give a fresh spur to their zeal.—On the other hand, if a Dissenter regards the doctrines which the Puseyites teach as deadly errors, and considers that men who depend for salvation on any acts performed by a Christian Priest, are equally as far from the Kingdom of heaven as those who look for eternal happiness to an act performed by a Heathen Priest, he is likewise bound to use all the means his power to reclaim such men from their fatal delusions. The Dissenting Missionaries, then, have no option but to reckon every Episcopalian Missionary an antagonist—except when personal acquaintance enables them to recognize a brother in a nominal opponent: and they are also delivered from all restraints of delicacy in dealing with the pernicious doctrines and influence of Puseyism.

The Bonded Warehouse.—At a meeting of the Committee of the Bonded Warehouse last week, it was resolved to recommend the construction of a set of offices contiguous to the Warehouse, at an expense a little exceeding a lakh of Rupees. The charge will probably not fall short of 1,25,000 Rupees, which is to be provided for, partly by the sale of a quantity of superfluous iron castings, prematurely ordered out some years back, and partly by a call of 5 per cent. on the Capital Stock, from the Shareholders. They have, it is true, received no very satisfactory return for their money since the Warehouse was complete; the dividends have indeed been poor; and some of them may think it hard to be called on for another instalment, equal, if we remember aright, to last year's dividend; still they cannot do better than to obey the call. If the Bonded Warehouse had been erected in a spirit of rigid economy, it would long since have yielded a sufficient return, but the extravagance which marked the first movement has kept it in the back ground. Notwithstanding unfavourable appearances, however, it is an enterprize which contains the germ of prosperity, and which promises to yield a satisfactory return at no distant period to those who have embarked in it. The present proposal will serve to hasten that period. The counting offices which it is intended to erect, will afford such convenience to the mercantile community that they are likely to be immediately occupied. The merchant will not be long in finding it to his advantage to lodge all his goods in the Bonded Warehouse, and thus to relieve himself from all care and anxiety on their account, and at the same time to rent an office, consisting of a few rooms, in its immediate vicinity. This will probably soon become the vogue, and will render the erection of farther accommodation necessary. These offices will not only yield a fair return for the capital invested in them, but bring more grist to the mill, and serve to destroy the vacuum in the Bonded Warehouse itself.

The Idler's Letters.—We have received a copy of the Idler's Letters to friends at Home. They have appeared in successive months in the Star, and are now collected together, and published in a more permanent form. They furnish an interesting record of events, at one of the most critical periods of our Indian History, and, written as they are, in a light and attractive style, will afford much amusement and some instruction. The remarks with which they are largely interspersed, embody the impressions of the time, at a period when it appeared to be the special delight of the Governor General to mystify the press. They must therefore be received with considerable allowance. If the writer himself were to revise them, with his present information, he would find much room for correction, before they could be considered a safe guide to the events of the past year. They must be regard therefore, as the name imports, the Letters of an Idler, who does not aspire to the honour of inditing Historical commentaries.

The Dedication to Lord Ellenborough, whose actions form the great staple of remarks, appears to our mind to be too strong; it is more adapted to the meridian of London than of Calcutta, and will therefore be viewed as another proof of the extreme licentiousness of the Indian Press.

Ella.—We have received from the author, Mr. T. W. Smyth, a volume of Poems he has just published, containing Ella, or a tale of the Waldenaian Martyrs, which now appears for the first time, and a number of Miscellaneous Poems, some of which have already been given in the Periodical publications of the Town. Poetical Review is by no means our forte; and we shall therefore refrain from any critical examination of the merits of the volume, which we leave to more competent judges. The writer, in his Preface, very properly disclaims exclusive originality; originality, as Lord Byron is said to have remarked, being quite out of the question in our days. "Of an intentional plagiarism, says Mr. Smyth, "I am not conscious; though of allusion and imitation," and his imitations are sometimes so close, that even a lenient critic might easily mistake them for plagiarisms. "Whatever," he observes," may be the fate of this thing of rythm. and though not destined "virum voliture per ora," I shall at least preserve the consciousness that the motives which led to this publication were not unbenevolent." The benevolence of the motive is unquestionably the strongest argument for this publication; as the profits of it are to be divided among four or five of our charitable institutions in Calcutta; though we have some misgivings as to the success of poetical publications in Calcutta, and the assistance they are likely to minister to the public Societies which are to reap the profit of them. We close this brief notice with a sincere hope that the present effort may prove an exception to the general rule; and do them more good than it is likely to do to the author.

The late J. O. Voigt, Esq.—The last Mail brings intelligence that the disease which constrained Mr. Voigt to return to Europe, terminated fatally, in London on the 22d of June, before he could reach his native land. During his brief residence in London he received the kindest attention from his old Indian friends, and more especially from Dr. Martin, formerly of Calcutta. Mr. Voigt had been a resident in Serampore, for more than fifteen years, in the service of His Danish Majesty; and he very early renewed his application to the study of botany, under the late Dr. Carey, in association with whom also Dr. Wallich, while Surgeon in this town, commenced his botanical career. After the death of Dr. Carey, Mr. Voigt undertook to superintend the garden he had formed, and in which he had collected a large variety of valuable plants from all parts of the world: and he continued to attend to it with great assiduity till he was invited to take temporary charge of the Company's Botanic Garden, on the departure of Dr. Wallich, last year, on leave to the Cape of Good Hope. During the last year of his residence in Serampore, he gave up all the time he could spare from his professional duties, to the compilation of a Catalogue of the Plants in Dr. Carey's Garden, and in and around Calcutta. The very devoted attention he bestowed on this work, severely injured his health, and was one cause, we fear, of the attack which constrained him to quit the country. He took with him the manuscript of the Hortus Suburbanus Calcuttensis, in the hope of being able to carry it through the Press. That pleasure was denied him; and it will now be placed among the manuscripts of the University of Copenhagen, his Alma Mater. Mr. Voigt endeared himself to all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance by the generosity of his feelings; and his gratuitous attention to the poor of this Settlement, and to the Hospital after it was established, will long continue to be remembered with gratitude.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 17.

— The Star gives us the Report of the embarkation of Coolies for the Mauritius during the month of July last. The number was, 1006 men, 133 women and 45 children, in all 1184. As the Mauritius appears now to be stocked to the full extent of the funds available for the encouragement of labourers, it would be advisable to turn the tide of emigration to the Island of Ceylon, in which commercial enterprise has experienced an unusual impulse within the last few years, and appears likely to be checked for want of labourers.

— A correspondent of the Hurkaru states, that the Sirdars who fled from Candahar on the approach of our army and took refuge in Persia, have returned from thence, and are plundering and imprisoning all those who have, or are suspected to have, any wealth. Sufter Jung, Shah Soojah's son is said to be in their hands. Yar Mahomed, is still paramount at Herat; "the most accomplished scoundrel in Central Asia," as he has been perhaps justly called by those who know him. But the time has passed by when the intrigues or revolutions of Central Asia, excited any interest in our councils.

— A large party is to be given by the community of Calcutta to Lady Gough, which has been fixed for the 1st of September. An absurd report seems to have got abroad, and it is mentioned in this day's Hurkaru, that it is given, not so much out of honour to her Ladyship, as out of disparagement to Lord Ellenborough. It is impossible there should be the smallest ground for such a suspicion. His Lordship never expected to be fêted by the denizens of Calcutta and he is not disappointed at the loss of a dinner. We have no doubt the report was got up from malignant motives, in the hope of deterring gentlemen from acting as stewards.

— We mentioned last week that a widely extended confederacy of rogues had been discovered at Bombay; that their books had been seized and examined, and that they confirmed the worst suspicions of the Magistrates. We are now told that the Forty Thieves, as the Courier facetiously designates them, intended to bring an action for damages against Government and its servants for the illegal seizure of their books and papers.

— We have placed among our extracts an high wrought eulogy of Lord Ellenborough, from the Bombay World, a paper recently established in that city. The Hurkaru says it has the merit of originality; which is saying a great deal. We have now two papers in India, the Bombay World and the Bombay Gentleman's Gazette, devoted to the praise of the Governor General. In time there may be a third. These journals, thus espousing the cause of those in authority, will serve to mitigate the guilt of the licentious press of India.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 18.

— The Hurkaru states on the authority of a Ferozepore correspondent, that a vakeel of the Persian Prince Aga Khan, has arrived from Candahar, for the purpose of obtaining an interview with the Governor General to solicit either land or money for his master. Aga Khan is said to have done the state some service, when he was with General Nott's Army. He is also the spiritual head of a sect of Ishmalees, and possesses great influence in the south of Persia. But as we are not likely again to meddle in the affairs of Central Asia, the probability is that his errand will be bootless.

— The Semiramis Steamer arrived at Bombay at 10 P. M. on the evening of the 7th of August with the London Mails, which reached Calcutta about midday yesterday in about nine days and a half. The passengers for Bombay by this vessel, from Suez did not exceed ten individuals; the number of passengers to Bombay by the July Steamer of last year amounted to twenty-four. The sum drawn on the Indian Treasuries by this mail amounts to about sixteen lakhs of Rupees, against four lakhs and a half drawn in July last year.

— The Englishman states that Baboo Hurreemohun Sen, the son of Dewan Ram Komul Sen, has resolved to give a prize every quarter to the best of the students in Mr. Grant's Drawing Class in the Mechanic's Institute. Our contemporary describes it as "an act of that quiet sort of liberality which proceeds from the genuine impulses of a kind heart and clear head, without seeking to make an ostentatious display of munificence." We are anxious to be able to join in this commendation, and are therefore desirous of knowing the amount of the quarterly prize, and the accident by which this very unostentatious act became so public.

— A case of almost unparalleled cruelty is, it is said, pending before the Magistrate. The complainant is a native of Bengal, who was returning to his native land from England in a Liverpool ship, and who after having been ill treated in various ways was at length put into an empty cask set edgeways with the top open. The cask was placed in the forecastle with the complainant in it. He states that he was so kept night and day for two months! The case is under investigation before the Chief Magistrate. We have extracted a full notice of it from the Hurkaru.

— The Lahore Government has declared itself against the pernicious publicity of the Press, and has, as the Star remarks, forbidden the farther composition of the Ukbars, or native manuscript journals which were allowed to issue from the Court. Whenever a Government begins thus to gag the press, we may be sure that there is something which it is ashamed should see the light; and the public repay the compliment by always believing the worst. The safety and dignity of a Government will be best consulted by allowing the press to take its own course. Either there will be a diversion in the camp, and one journal will correct another, and thus save the honour of the state, or the papers will become so outrageous in their attacks that they will cease to obtain credit.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 19.

— The Agra Ukhbar, of the 10th instant, states that the order which had been issued to the troops in the neighbourhood of Agra to hold themselves in readiness for service, has been countermanded.

— Intelligence has been brought from Moulmein by H. M. S. Serra which left that place on the 9th Instant. It is reported that two King's messengers had arrived at Rangoon to learn and report on the cause of the misunderstanding between the English Chief at Moulmein and the Burmese Governor of Martaban. Notwithstanding rumours of preparations which may look warlike, there can be no doubt that there will, or rather can, be no war between the two powers, while their present mutual desire for peace continues. A report was said to be current that Mr. Blundell was to be reinstated; but this is of course out of the question, so far as the wishes and power of the Government in Calcutta is concerned.

— A meeting had been held at Moulmein, on the 8th of August when a Committee was formed to consider the most eligible spot for the formation of a dry dock. The scheme to be divided into 160 shares, of which 106 were taken before the meeting closed. We rejoice to see so much enterprise at Moulmein.

— The settlement of Moulmein having gotten a new master, the Chronicle has got a new man for its editor, and he seems to enter on his duties with some spirit. He says that salt might be exported from Moulmein to Calcutta with advantage. It appears to sell in the province a little above eight annas the maund, and the Editor makes out that after paying for freight, wastage, and every other charge, and the Government duty here, there would remain a profit of some 40 odd per cent. We imported seven lakhs of maunds from Bombay last year. Why should it not be advantageously imported from a settlement at so much shorter a distance?

— The Provisional Committee of the Free Protesting Church of Scotland in Calcutta have just received an anonymous donation of 2,000 Rs. from a Non intrusionist, one-half being intended for the support of the Church properly so called, and the other for the support of its Missions.

— The Agra Ukhbar states, that all the insurgents driven out of the Bundlekund and Saugor Districts are believed to have collected themselves together in the Chanderee district, which belongs to Scindia. The present disturbed condition of the Gwalior state makes it difficult to reach them, and it is probable that they may hereafter issue from thence and create new disturbances in our territories.

MONDAY, AUGUST 21.

— The Catholic Herald of Saturday last has a glowing article expressive of his gratitude to the Star, for his noble and generous conduct, in defending the Catholics. The Star accepts the compliment, and turns round upon "some Protestant writers," whom he reproaches for their "want of charity." We cannot but applaud the Editor for his anxiety to diffuse a spirit of charity among the Protestants; and we think that a similar effort in reference to the Catholics and their organ, the Herald, would not be altogether superfluous. In this very article, the Protestants are called the rabid and fanatical sects around us; the Star is lauded for having exposed the falsehoods and prejudices of the fanatical sects; their writings are called the base productions and aspersions of unprincipled men; and our contemporary is described as having been actuated by his love of truth to expose the follies, the fanaticisms, and malice, of those who are constantly at their dirty work of calumniating our Holy Religion.

— The Delhi Gazette of the 12th contains items of intelligence from various quarters among which are the following, that Shere Sing was far from satisfied with the conduct of his minister Dhyan Sing—it would be strange indeed if he were—and that efforts were in progress to deprive him of his friends at Court by doing away with their services and filling up their appointments with other individuals.—We are also told that Cabul is in a very distracted state, and that Dost Mahomed's oppression of all people, more especially of those who had been in any way the friends of the English, while there, were beyond description.

— The Englishman gives a letter which has been received in town, from some place not mentioned, which says that a Syce who had been in Brigadier Anquetil's service had come in and stated he was with him in the retreat from Cabul, that he was not wounded, but taken prisoner by the Affghans, and after swallowing a diamond ring, laid himself down and died. In the same paper however we have a narrative of Sergeant Fair of H. M. 44th, one of the few survivors of the retreat, who confirms the report previously given that the Brigadier fell at the fatal barrier at Jugdulluck.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 22.

— The Star of this morning publishes the very complimentary letter which Sir Robert Peel addressed Sir Edward Ryan when inviting him to become a Privy Counsellor, and giving the benefit of his knowledge and experience to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. We learn from the same paper that the Portrait of Sir Edward to be placed in the Grand Jury room for which a subscription was raised, is now in progress by Sir Martin Archer Shee.

— Sir Hugh Gough, says the Hurkaru, leaves Calcutta in the next Steamer, for Allahabad, about the 10th or 12th proximo. An entertainment is to be previously given him by the officers at Barrackpore before his Excellency's departure. It is also confidently stated in the Cantonment that Lord Ellenborough intends to return the compliments recently paid him by the Military bodies by giving a grand entertainment at his country seat, as soon as the weather becomes favourable, on which occasion the Park is to be splendidly illuminated—but there will be no guns from Dum-dum.

— Mr. Piddington has been rewarded for his laudable and persevering efforts to ascertain the law of Storms by being appointed to the vacant post of Coroner of Calcutta, so long held by a nautical man, the Secretary of the Marine Board. The Hurkaru says that Government has taken the opportunity of reducing the pay from 575 to 300, out of which the Coroner is to provide an office. The Hurkaru says moreover that this is shabby very shabby. Our contemporary is doubtless right in his information but we have always understood that the allowance of the Coroner did not exceed 300 Rs.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 23.

— While the letters received by the last mail from England describe the Ministry and the Directors as entirely undecided about our new acquisition of Scinde, which they fancy to be in a very disturbed state, every fresh notice from the country describes it as altogether tranquil, since Shere Mahomed fled beyond the Indus. Sir Charles Napier had completely recovered his health and strength. Though the country presented but one sheet of water, the climate is said not to be found unhealthy; and the petty chiefs are described as coming in daily to make their submissions.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

Head Quarters, Calcutta, 11th August, 1843.

1. Her Majesty having been graciously pleased to nominate General Sir Hugh Gough to be Commander-in-Chief of all Her Majesty's Forces serving in the East Indies, and the Honourable the Court of Directors having appointed him to the Command of the Honourable the Company's Forces in India, from his assumption of the foregoing Appointment, He deems it right to announce, that he assumed the duties of these important Offices on the 8th instant, with the concurrence of the Governor General in Council, as promulgated in the foregoing Order.*

2. It would not come within the limits of an Order to convey to the Army Sir Hugh Gough's views and his expectations on assuming a Command of such vast responsibility, other than to express his perfect assurance, that, in carrying through the important Trust confided to him, he will have the energetic Support of every Officer, from the General of Division to the junior grade in the Army, and the ready and willing obedience of the Soldiers, both European and Native. Sir Hugh Gough's Interests and his Character are identified with theirs.

3. An honourable record of brilliant Deeds in the Field and well performed Duties in Quarters, have deservedly established for this Army, a high character, and ensured for it both admiration and confidence.

4. In following the Example of a long list of distinguished Predecessors in Command, Sir Hugh Gough trusts he will, under the guidance of Divine Providence, be enabled to hand over the Army of India, whenever he may cease to be its Head, with unimpaired honour, and in a state of undiminished discipline.

5. General Sir Hugh Gough much regrets, that he is precluded by the absence of his immediate Predecessor, from deriving personally from that gallant Officer, that valuable information, which his long residence in India so well qualifies him to afford.

6. The same honours, which have hitherto been paid by the Military, will be continued to General Sir Jasper Nicolls.

7. The General Staff of the Army and Office Establishments will join the Commander-in-Chief at Cawnpore, by the 15th October next.

8. His Excellency directs that all Reports, Returns and Correspondence relative to Her Majesty's and the Honourable Company's Forces shall be addressed to his Military Secretary and to the Assistant Adjutant General of the Army at the Presidency, respectively, until the arrival of the Deputy Adjutant General of the Army, and the Adjutant General of the Queen's Troops, at Head Quarters.

9. The Commander-in-Chief will receive the Heads of Departments, or, during their unavoidable absence, their Deputies or Assistants, of public business, from 10 to 12 A. M. any day on the week, Council days and Sundays excepted.

10. His Excellency will be happy to receive all Officers and Gentlemen who may wish to see him, on Mondays and Thursdays, from 12 until 2 o'clock.

11. In cases of public emergency, the Commander-in-Chief may be seen on any day or at any hour.

By Order of His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief,

J. R. LUMLEY, Captain,

REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE OF THE S. P. G. DIOCESAN COMMITTEE ON THE SUBJECT OF CORRIE'S (ALLEGED) PLEDGE TO THE DISSENTERS.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Corresponding Committee of the Calcutta Diocesan Committee S. P. G. F. P. held 20th June 1843, at the Palace, by summons from the Right Reverend the LORD BISHOP of CALCUTTA.

II. The Right Reverend the President stated, that certain allegations of a breach by the S. P. G. Missionaries of a pledge given by the late Archdeacon Corrie in behalf of the Diocesan Committee to the Bengal Auxiliary Missionary Society having appeared in an Editorial in the Bengal Hurkaru of May 19th, and given rise to sundry letters in the same paper, bearing the signatures of the Secretary and others, he had judged it fit to call the present meeting, in order to take the sense of the Committee as to whether the matter should, or should not be let rest as it is.

Thereupon, the opinion of the Committee being, that further investigation is advisable, it was proposed by R. Molloy, Esq. seconded by W. H. Abbott, Esq,—

And carried unanimously,—That a Special Committee be appointed to examine into the state of the question as now before the Public, and, if necessary, institute further enquiry into the facts of the case, and report thereupon to the corresponding committee.

It was also agreed unanimously on the proposal of R. Molloy, Esq. that the special committee aforesaid do consist of the Venerable the Archdeacon, the Revd. the Principal of Bishop's College and the Revd. H. J. Pratt.

REPORT.

In discharging the duty laid upon us by the above Resolutions, we have thought it sufficient to direct our attention to the following statement of the charge which appeared in the Hurkaru Newspaper of June 15th, in a Postscript to a letter "signed Thomas Boaz, secretary Bengal Auxiliary Missionary Society."

Mr. Boaz says, "The statement is this: The D. C. committee [the Calcutta committee of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge] through Archdeacon Corrie did, unsolicited, offer a pledge to the London society, that, if the Mission premises at Tallygunge were given up to the [Dioc. Comm.] the Missions of the London society, apart from large cities, should not be interfered with, and that this pledge has been violated in the L. M. Society's Mission at Rammakal Choke, a district immediately proximate to the Tallygunge station."

The following is a copy of Archdeacon Corrie's letter referred to by Mr. Boaz :—

TO REV. MR. HILL.

Calcutta, November 27, 1823.

MY DEAR SIR,—"I am sure you will receive the communication, I am about to make to you, in the spirit in which it is intended.

"The field of missionary labour in this country is large enough, for all the missionaries of the various societies at present in the country, without interfering with each other. The differences which subsist between them as to the mode of conducting their labours, however well understood among ourselves, are not understood by the natives; and would, I apprehend, were they prominently brought before them serve in many cases as a hindrance to the accomplishment of the object we all aim at. On this account, and on this alone—I am requested to communicate with you on the subject of your relinquishing your station at Tallygunge, to the missionary lately appointed to take charge of the Diocesan committee's schools in that quarter. When you sometime ago offered to superintend the committee's school, near your house, you were, I think, informed, that the reason for declining your offer was, that we were expecting a missionary to arrive, who would take charge of that and of the other schools of the committee in your neighbourhood. A missionary has now arrived, and will enter on the superintendence of these schools. If you will kindly consult the friends with whom you act, and it should be agreed to accede to our wishes, the expense your society has been at in the erection of buildings at Tallygunge will be cheerfully reimbursed by the Diocesan committee; of course time allowed for finding another suitable abode, and I need scarcely add, that the same principle of non-interference with the proceedings of your society, in respect of any missionary stations, already formed among the Heathen, will be exercised by the Committee on any opportunity they may have of extending their labours away from large cities.

I am, my dear Sir, yours sincerely,
(Signed) DAN. CORRIE."

We have carefully considered all that we could discover bearing upon the question, and we are decidedly of opinion, that the charge of bad faith now brought against the S. P. G.'s Agents is wholly unfounded. We consider in fact, that no such pledge as the L. M. S. contends for was ever given, and that, for the following reasons :—The charge is at variance with the actual language of Archdeacon Corrie's letter. His words are, "The same principle of non-interference with the proceedings of your Society in respect of any missionary Stations already formed among the Heathen will be exercised by the Committee, on any opportunity they may have of extending their labours away from large cities."

Archdeacon Corrie does not speak of Stations that shall be hereafter, but of stations already formed; whereas that charge of the L. M. society's Agents proceeds on the assumption, that his words (which moreover are incidental, rather than essential, to the transaction in question) have a prospective bearing, and are to limit, in perpetuity, and in all parts of India, the operations of the S. P. G. F. P. That Archdeacon Corrie had reference to the existing state of things, and not to the contingencies of the future is further manifest, from the language used by him in the opening of his letter, which states the grounds of his application to the L. M. society. "The field of missionary labour, in this country," he says, "is large enough for all the missionaries of the various societies at present in the country, without interfering with each other."

II. The charge is at variance with the manifest design of the letter, as well as with its actual language. For its manifest design was to avoid collisions with the L. M. society's Agents, by inducing them to move to a distance. "The difference," it says, "which subsists between them (the various Missionaries then in India) as to the mode of conducting their labours, however, well understood among ourselves, are not understood by the natives; and would, I apprehend, were they prominently brought before them, serve in many cases as a hindrance to the accomplishment of the object we all aim at. On this account, and on this alone—I am requested to communicate with you on the subject of your relinquishing your station at Tallygunge to the Missionary lately appointed to take charge of the Diocesan Committee's schools in that quarter."

It is manifest from this that collision was expected to be the consequence of juxta position, and that removal to a distance was sought for as the preventive.

This design could not have contemplated that the L. M. Society's Agents, in case they accepted the proposal, should settle down, as they did, within a short period at Rammakal Choke, "a district," as Mr. Boaz says, "immediately proximate to the Tallygunge station."

Had Mr. Corrie, or the Committee considered that the so called pledge would have allowed the L. M. Society's Agents to settle down in the immediate proximity of a sphere which they expressly desired to secure from interference, and thus them in their Missionary operations, it is plain they would not have proposed, much less have concluded, the purchase of the Tallygunge Mission House. Their Minutes shew clearly enough, their understanding and design.

March 23th, 1824, School Dep. Min. 1. (S. P. C. K. Committee.)

"The Secretary submits a letter from Mr. Lindeman, respecting the Mission premises at Tallygunge. Ordered—That the Secretary be empowered to conclude the bargain provided it shall be made to appear to his satisfaction that the Schools lately, or at present occupied by the Trustees of the Union Chapel are included in the terms named. And that the said Trustees disclaim, on the basis proposed in Archdeacon Corrie's correspondence, all intention of establishing fresh schools in the district of Tallygunge hereafter, while it remains the scene of this Society's operations."

"On April 5, 1824. The Secretary submits, having obtained the pre-requisites from the Union Chapel [L. M. Society's] Missionaries for the conclusion of the bargain of the Russapuglah [Tallygunge] School," certain questions as to the mode of payment.

It is plain from this that the Committee took measures, as they thought to secure future as well as present non-interference from the L. M. Society before they concluded the bargain; and the withdrawal of the L. M. Society's Agent to the distant city of Berhampore (not to the immediate proximity of Tallygunge) would seem to show that they also then took the same view of the proposal made by Archdeacon Corrie.

III. Farther, the charge is at variance not only with the declared design of the committee, as expressed in Archdeacon Corrie's letter, but with the well known designs of Bp. Middleton in establishing the Schools in the Tallygunge district, and founding Bishop's college, in connexion with which they were to be brought when the proposal was made to the L. Missionary agents. The following extract from the S. P. K. Committee's Report for 1824, will show what those designs were; "With a view to the accommodation of the Superintending Missionary, as well as for the more effectual furtherance of the objects which the Committee had ultimately in view in establishing native schools a proposal was made for the purchase of certain premises belonging to the Union chapel Mission. The Diocesan committee having fixed on the district of Russapuglah [or Tallygunge] for one of their circles of schools as far back as 1818, (see also Lebas' life of Bishop Middleton, vol. II. pp,) it was implied in the terms agreed upon that the schools occupied by the Trustees of the Union chapel [L. M. Society's Agents] were included, and that the said Trustees disclaimed all intention of establishing fresh schools in that district as long as it remains the scene of the Diocesan committee's operations. The time was come when the gradual dissipation of ignorance and prejudice seemed to have opened a field to the labours of a zealous Missionary, a period to which the committee had looked forward with hope from the commencement of their exertions in this department.

How the secretary of the Calcutta committee, who was Domestic chaplain to Bishop Middleton, and took the superintendence of the schools in question at the beginning, represented the purchase to the Home committee, appears from the following extract of a letter dated July 9th, 1825, —"It was under these circumstances [described in the above extracts from the Report] that the board in Calcutta determined on the purchase of certain premises situated in our circle at Russapuglah in which a society of dissenting Missionaries has established themselves for the express purpose of entering on these mission labours for which the Diocesan committee had prepared the way in their Establishment of schools."

Such was the ultimate design of the S. P. C. K. establishing and maintaining their circles of schools around Calcutta (of which that at Burripur, distant 12 miles from the Tallygunge Mission House, formed one at the time of the purchase,*) and such the account given by the Committee's Secretary in reporting the purchase of the Tallygunge premises to the society at home.

With what design Bishop's College was founded by the S. P. G. F. P. is too notorious to need of being entered on. It was after the founding of this Institution, and in immediate connection with its designed operations, that the S. P. C. K. committee purchased the Tallygunge Mission House as the centre of a prepared Missionary field, and with a view to keep that field exclusively their own, free from all other agency. This is plain from the opening of Mr. Corrie's letter, which is a preamble to the proposal which it contains.

But if the L. M. society's interpretation of the pledge with which the proposal was accompanied be correct, it will follow, that the agents of these two societies, including the Bishop and the Archdeacon of the Diocese and the principal of Bishop's college, knowing full well the extensive design and growing nature of the undertaking in which they were embarked, consented to shut themselves up in the district of Tallygunge, and to forbear entering the wide Missionary field which lay in every direction around, if perchance the L. M. society's Agents, whose removal to a distance they had just secured by purchase, should see good to settle, however near them, beyond the immediate precincts of the said district, and that too when the S. P. C. K. had already planted schools preparatory to Missionary labours as far south as Barripur, 12 miles from Tallygunge. Such a conclusion is in the highest degree improbable and extravagant. Apart then from the consideration of the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the pledge in regard to the principles of our church (which bind both the S. P. G. and S. P. C. K.) and its consequent obligation or otherwise on the Church's Ministers, it seems manifest, that the meaning put on it by Mr. Boaz, for the L. M. society, is quite inadmissible, since it is so utterly at variance with the previously avowed and palpable designs of the two Church societies, as well as the general declaration at the opening of Mr. Corrie's letter.

IV. The charge is also at variance with the subsequent conduct of the two Diocesan committees generally, and of Archdeacon Corrie in particular.

He continued in connexion with both committees, as Vice President, ex-officio, up to the time of his final departure from this Diocese in 1835, and was present at most, if not at all, of the general meetings of the S. P. G. committee when the successive Reports were adopted which detail, from 1828 onwards, the gradual efforts of the S. P. G. missionaries to extend their labours in every direction, as soon, and as far, as opportunity offered, without regard to any geographical limits of any supposed pledge.

We cannot for a moment suppose, that if Archdeacon Corrie had intended the closing paragraph of his letter to bear the sense now put upon it by the L. M. society's Agents, he would have suffered all these proceedings of the missionaries and the committee to pass in silence. But such was the fact. No reference whatever to his letter, as bearing upon any relations with the L. M. society occurs in the minutes of the S. P. G. committee, nor do we believe that any such reference was ever made or thought of by him. On the contrary, his silence, as also that of the Committee so far as they may have been acquainted with his letter, is sufficient proof, that they never contemplated for a moment that in a field, secured to themselves, as they thought, by purchase, for unlimited and uninterrupted operations, this very purchase was to shut up the S. P. G. Society's Missionaries and the operations of a growing Institution like Bishop's College in the district of Tallygunge, and pledge a Society of the Church of England to have regard in all its future operations to the proceedings of a society in avowed dissent from her.

V. And the obvious inference above drawn from the silence of Archdeacon Corrie is confirmed by the silence of the L. M. society's Agents during the whole of his residence in Bengal.

They never, so far as we can learn, made the slightest remonstrance against the extending operations of the S. P. G. Missionaries so long as Archdeacon Corrie continued in Calcutta, and when, for the first time, a reference was made to his letters, it was made by Mr. Lacroix in December 1836, not in connexion with any of the stations of Calcutta but in connexion with Berhampore. It was when a S. P. G. missionary was about to be sent to this distant station that Mr. Lacroix, as the L. M. society's Agent, produced Mr. Corrie's letter as a ground of remonstrance against such appointment. No remonstrance had been ever made in regard to the Tallygunge or Barripur missions, and even the plea in regard to Berhampore was not admitted as binding by his Lordship, the present Bishop of Calcutta, though it was thought expedient to place Mr. Morton at Moorshedabad.

Such, in our opinion are the reasons supplied by the facts of the case, for considering the charge of the L. M society's Agents as wholly unfounded. But we should insufficiently declare our view of the matter, if we did not, in conclusion, state, that we consider the asserted pledge to be, not only unfounded in fact, but inadmissible in principle; and therefore such as Bishop Heber, Archdeacon Corrie, and the two Church Committees could not have given. We forbear to speak of the impracticability of observing an undefined arrangement of the nature pleaded for, which neither specifies determined boundaries, nor contains or refers to rules for determining them. What we would insist on is, the utter incompetency of a Diocesan Committee, or even of a Home Committee, to pledge a Society of the Church of England to an engagement of the kind with Dissenting missionaries of any denomination.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH.

"And justly proud may Lord Ellenborough feel himself when he looks around him, and perceives the magic influence which his wisdom and discretion has had upon every thing which came under the operation of his judgment and policy; all the qualities which in our opinion are necessary for the pacific government of India are concentrated in his Lordship, what with his urbanity, his well known benevolence, his conscientious desire to uphold impartial justice, and though last not least, his knowledge of Indian polity and affairs, render him not only doubly valuable in the honourable position in which he is placed, but place him in point of eminence, in a superior and more exalted precedence than any statesman of the day. To the present state of Scinde, we have no doubt but that his Lordship will devote his more particular attention, and in conjunction with Sir Charles Napier (with whom he appears to have united in reciprocal views and desires,) he will do all in his power to ameliorate their social condition, to insure lasting benefits upon the population, and point out the way and organize systems, which may be best calculated to develope the resources of that rich and fertile country. But we would ask, what can we expect less than all this, from the man who being so peculiary and happily endowed, has been pronounced by all the leading journals of the day, as being eminently calculated not only as a British politician, but being possessed of liberal and charitable views, and a capacity of so enlarged and enlightened a nature, to be wonderfully calculated to take so expanded and sensible a view of the differences which existed before he arrived in this country, as to be enabled speedily to quench the spirit of aggravated aggression, which was rapidly spreading over the length and breadth of the land; these facts require no comment, they shine before the eyes of the public, with all the brightness of the noon-day sun, and we trust the vitality of them will so far quicken the discernment and arouse the stubborn prejudices of those of his Lordship's enemies, who put down no good action to his credit, but seek to expose every trifling foible, which may tend to reflect ridicule upon himself and cast a shade of imbecility upon his Government. We heartily wish these vituperative egotists, joy in their undertaking, we doubt whether it may not be a more arduous one than they appear to contemplate, in as much as that every morsel of slander which their scouts may bring into the arena of public observation, will be examined by a scrutinizing public, and if not found to be genuine, the perpetrators of the forgery will assuredly meet at the instigation of that public, with ignominy and disgrace."—Bombay World.

CHARGE OF BARBAROUS TREATMENT ON BOARDSHIP.

A Mahomedan servant has just preferred a complaint before the Chief Magistrate, of the most inhuman and cruel treatment experienced by him from the master of a merchant vessel now in the river. The complainant had gone to England in charge of the children of a respectable gentleman from Calcutta. Having conveyed the children to the place of destination, their friends at home found the servant a passage to Calcutta in the vessel in question. at Liverpool, the passage money being duly paid. The complainant in his petition to the Magistrate states, that notwithstanding his having been a passenger, the Captain generally made him work along with the crew which he did as far as he was able. But falling sick he could not perform the work assigned to him, for which he was maltreated, and on one occasion flung into the sea with a rope fastened round his waist. Suffering from illness at the time, this made him worse, and he became less able to do the biddings of the Captain. He was next put into an empty cask, set edgeways with the top open. The cask was placed on the forecastle, with the complainant in it. He was so kept night and day for upwards of two months, as he states, exposed to all the vicissitudes and inclemencies of the weather, experiencing the heat of the sun by day and the damp dew at night. For the support of life a scanty allowance of food was daily given to him in the cask. The poor fellow says, that he was so worn out under this barbarous treatment, that he had scarcely power left to use his limbs, unable even to bear the exertion of going to the bows of the ship. The filth consequently that accumulated on the deck of the forecastle, drew the attention of the Captain, who on that actually had a quantity of it thrust into the mouth of his unfortunate victim, and forced him to swallow it. Such and similar shocking details are narrated in the petition, addressed to the Chief Magistrate, attributing the greatest cruelties and barbarities to the Captain. The man further states, that in consequence of the treatment he endured on board, he is now laid up and in the College Hospital, and has lost the use, as he believes for life, of some of his limbs. There is little doubt that the Chief Magistrate will direct the strictest enquiry into the matter, and if found to be true, will probably send up the case for trial to the Sessions, as one of the utmost atrocity. The names of the vessel and the commander complained against, are suppressed for the present, as it would be unfair to ascribe publicly such brutalities to any man by name, until they were satisfactorily established in a Court of Justice.—*Hurk. LATEST ACCOUNT OF THE LONDON MONEY MARKET.

* See S. P. C. K. Calcutta Comm. Report for 1824, Abstract of Accounts.

Although the quarter's revenue will, it is expected, shew considerable improvement, no corresponding advance has taken place in the public securities. MISCELLANEOUS.

The terms in which Sir R. Peel is now spoken of by some of the stanchest supporters of the present government are significant enough. Were it not sufficiently notorious, it would be easy to prove by reference to their speeches and writings that by the great bulk of his followers the ministerial career of the Premier is regarded as a single failure. That it is so, in fact, the state of the empire unhappily bears but too conclusive testimony. It may not be amiss, while his friends are reiterating this unquestionable truth, to glance at some of the causes which have produced it. Sir Robert Peel has now been thirty-four years in Parliament; and about twenty years of that period have been spent in office. He has risen from the humblest to the highest position of official life—from an under secretaryship to the premiership. He has served with some of the most eminent men, who, during the present century, have ruled Great Britain; he has been in constant contact with some of the most celebrated characters who, during the same period, have adorned the House of Commons and the country. From the earliest period nobody doubted his capacity for business, his industry, his plausibility, his adroitness; his possession, in fact, of all those qualities which, in office and in Parliament, render a man useful. Far inferior to Canning, but more prudent; unable to compete with Brougham in his better days, yet occasionally putting him down by a certain steady adroitness—serviceable to Liverpool; reputed to be attached to Eldon; occasionally convenient, though not always so, to Castlereagh; sometimes aping and sometimes rivalling Huskisson, and to all appearance devoted to Wellington; he has passed from office, to office, with a reputation occasionally depreciated, yet still continually growing. It would be unjust to deny that he has done "the state some service." He has done something for law reform; something for internal improvement; a little for the reform of the church; not a little for Catholic emancipation; and, latterly, a considerable amount for commercial reform. Not a particle of what he has done, however, has been his own; all his Parliamentary efforts have been based on the labours of other men, from the Bullion Committee Report of Francis Horner to the Import Duties Committee of Joseph Hume; but still he has the merit of knowing the time when delay was exhausted, when change was inevitable, and of carrying with him a party somewhat stupid in observation, and which would have ruinously resisted every alteration, unless it had been proposed by one of their own. Sir Robert Peel's exclusion from office was supposed to be favourable to the completion of what may be regarded as his political education, and the maturing of his character. All the time that the Whigs were in power, he had that leisure for reflection and consideration, which is denied to a busy and sometimes overwrought official; and as his party, under his management, became stronger from year to year, it would be a gross insult to his understanding to suppose that he did not contemplate a speedy return to power, and the consequences of it. Looking back to the past, and forward to the future, he must have made up his mind as to the relative strength of "old" and "young England;" and been prepared for the adoption of a line of policy marked by forethought and guided by discretion. This was fully expected of him by the country. The great bulk of the community, no matter whether they called themselves Conservatives, Tories, Radicals, or even Whigs, anticipated something novel—a combination of Toryism and Radicalism—the firmness of the one, and the pliancy of the other. Nor were they altogether disappointed. The measures of 1842 were marked at once by boldness and novelty, considering from whom their principles were adopted, and by whom they were applied. Sir Robert Peel changing the Corn-law; constructing a new tariff, on the principles of the preceding government, only leaving out the more important articles with which a tariff ought to deal; passing an act for grinding corn in bond; continuing the national system of education in Ireland; refusing to dip his hand in the public purse for the purposes of Church extension; and daring to impose an income and property tax on a country struggling with severe distress. No wonder that even a Whig, standing up in his place in the House of Commons, should have told Sir Robert Peel that his measures had no parallel since the days of Pitt. And during 1842 Sir Robert Peel, like Pitt, was the autocrat of the House of Commons. Every thing rested on his shoulders. He did nearly all the business, and much of the speaking; his presence expedited measures, his absence was like that of the schoolmaster; and neither Graham nor Stanley could keep the "boys" in order. The reputation of his firmness, determination, and impartiality spread in the country; he was considered to be the only man capable of ruling it in the critical circumstances in which it was placed; and having dared to do so much, in opposition, not only to his party, but to the principles on which he was placed in office, it was supposed that he would adventure still further, and complete for himself the reputation of being at once the most useful as well as the most potent Prime Minister that for many years has presided over the government of Great Britain. This feeling operated for some time during last recess. Not a few of the agricultural ministerial members, anticipating more calls upon their consistency, began to prepare themselves and their constituents by spouting free trade doctrines at rural dinners and meetings. A univeral impression prevailed that, during the present session of Parliament, Sir Robert Peel would proceed to apply free trade principles to corn and sugar, and thus complete the commercial emancipation of the country. But the sturdier monopolists became alarmed. Secret influences were set at work. Sir Robert Peel, unsustained by that feeling of self-reliance, which is the surest support of a statesman, began to quail. The artificial enthusiasm which had triumphantly carried him over 1842, died away. His mind, not original, self-acting, or largely resolute, succumbed. He adopted free trade principles, and uttered them; but, after their enunciation, their echo made his heart tremble. So he gave way before the powerful but concealed influences set in motion within his party; free trade doctrines at agricultural meetings were countermanded; and it was confidently announced that, for the present, no more would be done for the country in the direction of free trade. The session opened; and in the very first week of it, Sir Robert Peel, in his unmanly and foolish assault on Mr. Cobden, inflicted a severe wound upon his own reputation. Then came one after another the proofs that the autocrat of 1842 was the slave of 1843. Instead of boldly following up the policy he had begun, he permitted himself to be bound hand and foot, though even in that condition he ventured to proclaim now and then that he was still a free trader. Next came the admissions that his financial schemes had proved signal failures; and that with five millions of additional taxation, and a large amount from China, the country was still doomed to see the revenue not equal to the expenditure. Ireland, afterwards, to the astonishment of England, was declared to be in a state bordering on convulsion, the result of the failure of that government which boasted to have conquered its "chief difficulty." And now we behold the government in a dead lock: a divided Cabinet—an embarrassed executive—business at a stand-still—legislation suspended—the session wearing away—the whole country surprised, confounded, and amazed, at seeing a "strong" government, commanding large majorities, exhibiting a weakness worse than mortal. The cause is plain. The whole policy of the government is halting, irresolute, devoid of fixed principle, adapting itself to the expediences of the hour, without any line of action which deserves the reputation of being statesmanlike. It has disgusted the agriculturists, without satisfying the free-traders; it has roused the Dissenters, without pleasing the Church; it has excited the Roman Catholics and offended the Orangemen, in Ireland; and in Scotland it has first rent the Church, and then tries to mend it. Imbecility may call this an evidence of impartiality; but those who offend alike friend and foe are not usually classed amongst the wisest of men. Never was there so remarkable an instance of a "strong" government precipitating itself from the highest, to the lowest position in popular estimation within a space of time less than two years; and this signal loss of moral strength is attended with the still more signal disadvantage, that, in a critical condition of the country, its government is literally in a state of abeyance, incapable of action itself and standing in the way of all who would and could rule it constantly, vigorously, and prosperously.—Morning Chronicle.

IRELAND.—The Queen was to have visited Ireland this year, but troops and ammunition, arms and coercion bills, are to be her Majesty's substitutes. Instead of peace and the conciliation of a Royal visit, Sir Robert Peel sends war and irritating menaces. It is a happy illustration of the conservative qualities of Tories, that, in the last year of their long rule over this country, they made it so disaffected and riotous that William the fourth could not dine at Guildhall on the occasion of his succession, and now Queen Victoria, in the second year of Tory restoration, cannot visit Ireland; and yet two more popular monarchs than William the Fourth and Queen Victoria have never reigned. Between these two periods also—the one closing with Swing's fires and a menaced insurrection in the south of England, and the other opening with a dreaded rebellion in Ireland—there existed ten years of Whig rule, during which the persons and authority of the Sovereigns were universally respected. If the country were to judge of men and measures, like trees, by their fruits, the Tories would have small claim to their title of Conservatives.—Examiner.

On Monday, we understand, another of Mr. O'Connell's monster meetings is to go off in Dublin. His hundreds of thousands are to meet in the Irish metropolis, to parade along the Liffey, in front of the Castle, and disperse again or not, as Mr. O'Connell shall choose. He will of course choose that it shall disperse peaceably. He would be an idiot—and he is none—if he did not continue the process of training his troops and threatening the peace of the country, as long as he is allowed to do so in tranquillity. Meanwhile the Government stands with its hands before it, like a helpless special constable, who passively allows an ill-favoured ruffian to flourish a bludgeon round and round his head—every feint an inch nearer his nose—and thinks the law is not with him if he stirs hand or foot till felled to the ground by a first and last blow on the temple. Nor are the Government the only persons whose wits seem fairly to have departed in this crisis. By an infatuation incredible, if the history of great convulsions did not teem with fatal examples of the same inexplicable blindness—an infatuation,—we must dare to call it so, were the world as one man against us,—the more alarming because so alien from the usual energy and practical vigour of the English character—we allow a demagogue professing and stimulating a barbarous hatred of our very name and blood, to muster and harangue his myriads of deluded peasantry,—to fix their minds determinedly on a disruption of the British empige,—to organise them under his agents,—to collect taxes, to habituate them to combined movements on a scale probably unparalleled in any peaceful times,—to exact indefinite but solemn pledges of obedience to himself, as their leader, against an acknowledged enemy,—and to rouse vague notions of resistance, even to the death, against some vague and supposable oppression;—all these, we will again say, unparalleled phenomena we allow to pass, week after week, under our eyes; and all we observe is, that it "will blow over"—that "nothing will come of it"—that "it is the Irish way."

What reason can men have for expecting such a conclusion, except that idle or narrow incredulity which cannot imagine that any great thing can happen in its own day, or any great evil be impending over itself,—which would rather be burnt alive than believe it necessary to get out of bed at midnight,—which dares not or cannot look alarming facts in the face, and consoles itself by hating those who see as if they made the danger? We ask it in unaffected anxiety for an answer, what one ground have we for disregarding those symptoms which, in any other times, by any other rulers, in any other nation, would have been considered as rather the very crisis than the commencement of revolution? Does any man, other than a wholesale revolutionist, really contemplate acceding to O'Connell's demands? Can any Englishman actually intend a measure to which the plain and immediate effect will be to place the Executive Government of Ireland unreservedly in the hands of this open enemy of the "Saxon," or, failing him, of any nominee upon whom Drs. M'Hale and Browne—the "lion of Judah" and the "dove of Galway"—can agree? For the sake of ourselves, our own peace and security—for the sake of the minority, who will be ground to powder—for the sake of the very majority, ready, as they ever have been, to destroy themselves too, if we would only let them, can we for a moment allow this cleaving asunder of the British empire? If we do not intend to take this method of satisfying the demands of the Irish Roman Catholics, what conceivable reason can we have for supposing that they will be satisfied? Is rebellion, real sanguinary rebellion, a thing unheard of in Ireland? Is the sympathy with rebellion extinct? Are the agitators at all slow or ambiguous in their appeals to the memory of the "glorious Volunteers"—the "patriots of 1798"—the "conflicts between the Saxon and Irish" (of the same period), "in which the former were defeated?" Is there no "thirst for arms" among the people—no recommendations to drill and organise from their leaders? Are the symptoms of danger wanting? or does the experience of Ireland show that those symptoms are untrustworthy? We really hardly know which question least requires an answer.

But then "Mr. O'Connell professes so much peace—and enforces it. Observe the unheard-of numbers who meet and separate without a glass of whiskey or a broken head; look at the upshot of the 'wrecking' at Dungannon; remember the loss of life upon the Shirley estate in attempting to post bills of ejectment. Matters which a few years back would have filled half the newspapers in Ireland with furious invective, pass off in this critical and (as it is said) inflammable state of the political atmosphere like summer showers." Again we ask, does Irish history encourage us to repose with so much confidence on this unusual and un-Irish forbearance? Things inexplicable generally bode mischief, and not least so, whenever it has happened, a deep calm in Ireland. It is only a strong determination, a firm expectation of satisfaction in full, which represses—nay, which moderates—the expression of feeling in such a country and in such a time as this.—The present moment, we say, most alarmingly unites the two almost incompatible omens of evil—agitation and quiet. Both Irish agitation and Irish quiet are now plainly of that kind which are the most effectual preparatives for action.

"Mr. O'Connell promises peace!" Of course he does. Under cover of that promise he is allowed to review his multitudes—under cover of that promise he constitutes his repeal-wardens (who will order a file 'as well as sergeants')—under cover of this promise he is to collect his committee of 300 leaders in Dublin—under cover of this promise he will send them out with their instructions to summon simultaneous meetings, to the tune of 50,000 or so, in different counties of Ireland—under cover of the same promise, after a few rehearsals, when he has got his vaunted 3,000,000 of able-bodied Repealers, he will recommend that on some one fine simultaneous-meeting-day every true Irishman should bring—quite peaceably—a musket or scythe in his hand, and a few days' provisions at his back. We are but a few, a very few, steps from this "peaceable" consummation. Government opposes no difficulties—Government respects the sacred right of insurrection—Government will not anticipate scythes and muskets till it sees them—and then, when it does see them, Government, we suppose, will say, "Who would have thought it?" And we shall be obliged to answer, "Who would not?"

Meantime the flame is spreading. Not only are those Irishmen who formerly held aloof forced into the stream—but we hear rumours of sympthisers in France, of the collection of arms and adventurers in Brittany—and we have thrust upon us, in the shape of a public meeting, the evidence of a savage Repealism rising among the democratic party of New York.—Times.

COURT AND FASHION.—The contemplated visit of her Majesty to her Irish dominions during the summer, accompanied by her illustrious consort, having been abandoned, in consequence of the alarming and excited state of that portion of the kingdom, it is now expected the Sovereign and Prince Albert, with the Prince of Wales and the infant Princesses, will pay a visit to Walmer Castle, the official residence of the Duke of Wellington, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. In the event of this arrangement, the Royal Victoria and Albert yacht will be anchored off the Castle, in order that her Majesty and the Prince may take frequent excursions along the Kentish coast, and visit the ports of Dover, Ramsgate, Margate, &c.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert has been unanimously elected by the council of Plymouth, Lord High Steward of the borough.

Various speculations have been hazarded as to the name of the rev. divine who has been selected by her Majesty to become the early tutor of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. Among others mentioned, upon pretty good authority, is the Venerable S. Wilberforce, M. A., the Archdeacon of Surrey, and one of the chaplains in ordinary to his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

The Duchess of Inverness has visited Kensal-green Cemetery, in order to select a spot for the erection of a mausoleum for the remains of the Duke of Sussex, and the centre of the great quadrangle immediately fronting the chapel was ultimately determined on. The effects of the late Duke have been sold by public auction.

Besides the King of Hanover, the King and Queen of the Belgians, the Prince and Princess of Oldenburgh, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburgh-Strelitz, and the Crown Prince of Wurtemberg, have visited this country on the occasion of the nuptials of the Princess Augusta.

The Queen lately held a chapter of the most ancient and most noble Order of the Thistle, at Buckingham Palace, when the Most Noble the Marquis of Bute, lord high commissioner of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and the Right Hon. the Earl of Mansfield, were elected into the Order, vice his Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex and the Earl of Abergavenny, deceased.

Lord Melbourne has appeared once more in the House of Lords, in opposition, it is said, to the advice of his medical attendants.

The Marquis of Normanby, who is at Naples, is prevented from returning to England by continued indisposition. His medical advisers have recommended him go to the baths of Ischia.

We understand that the illness from which the noble and venerable Earl Grey is suffering is rather debility consequent upon his advanced age than disease, and is not of a character calculated to give grounds for any immediate apprehension. One of the consequences of this debility is that his lordship's sight is seriously affected.

The Marriage of her Royal Highness the Princess Augusta, eldest daughter of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, with his Royal Highness Frederick, Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg Strelitz, was solemnised on the evening of 28th June, with great splendour, in the Chapel Royal, Buckingham Palace.

The Anniversary Meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society, which had been postponed on account of the death of Lord Fitzgerald and Vesci, was held on 10th June, Sir A. Johnston in the chair. The report of the Council painfully reminded the members of the loss of their late President, so soon succeeding that of their previous respected one, the Earl of Munster. Two of their vice-patrons were also deceased—the Duke of Sussex and the Marquis of Wellesley. The Society had during the year lost twenty-one members, whilst thirteen only had been elected, giving a deficiency of eight. Amongst the foreign members the report painfully alluded to the deaths of Col. Stoddart and Capt. Conolly. Several valuable additions had been made to the library, and the proceedings of the Oriental Translation Fund were very satisfactory. The Society was still embarrassed in its finances: the receipts of the past year exceeded the expenditure by 205*l*. From the report of the Auditors it appeared that the assets of the Society were 1,942*l*., with the library, museum, and furniture, to the value of 3,000*l*. The expenditure for the past year was 1,037*l*. 13*s*. 11*d*., and there was a present balance in hand of 178*l*. 9*s*. 3*d*. Sir A. Johnston having announced from the chair the demise of the late noble President, Sir G. Staunton, Bart., proposed as his successor Lord Auckland, in terms of high eulogium. He also stated that the late noble President had made an application to Sir R. Peel for Her Majesty to grant an annual Gold medal to the Society, but which was at present dec[l]ined. The nomination of Lord Auckland was seconded by the Right Hon. Holt Mackenzie, who stated that, although a great deal of his attention had been turned to war during his government, he was well acquainted with the requirements of peace, and he was impressed with a knowledge of those arts, the extension of which would materially benefit India. The Right Hon. Sir Gore Ouseley, Bart., the Right Hon. Sir Alexander Johnston, Sir George Staunton, Bart., M. P., and the Hon. Mountstuart Elphinstone, were elected Vice-Presidents.

A remarkable scene took place in the Theatre of the University of Oxford, on the annual commemoration, when it is usual to propose some distinguished persons to convocation for D. C. L. degree. On its becoming known that Mr. Everett, the American Minister, formerly a Unitarian preacher, would be proposed for this honour, a considerable sensation was created. On the entrance of the procession the Vice Chancellor was received with loud cheers, but the junior proctor, Mr. Jelf, of Christ Church, was greeted with shouts of derision and hooting. The names of Drs. Pusey and Hampden, Messrs. Newman and Macmullen, were received with cheers and hisses and the undergraduates seemed nearly equally divided in their opinions. A scene now ensued which it is impossible adequately to describe. What business took place was transacted in dumb show. The honorary degrees of D. C. L. were conferred on Mr. Everett and Professor Daniell, of King's College, London, without a word of Dr. Bliss's speeches in introducing them being heard. All attempts to stop the marked disapprobation of the young men were useless, and the Vice-Chancellor was at length obliged to dissolve the Convocation without either of the prize essays being recited. The board of Heads of Houses met to consult on what steps should be taken in consequence of these insubordinate proceedings, and resolved on punishing four of those who took the most prominent part in the following manner:—Mr. Paul Parnell, Fellow of St. John's College, to be rusticated for five years; two Messrs. Marshall, of Brasenose, for three years each; and Mr. James Collins, Commoner of Baliiol College, for one year.

By accounts from the Cape of Good Hope, we learn that the Erebus, Capt. Ross, and the Terror, Capt. Crozier, had reached False Bay from the South Seas, all well. It would appear that in the voyage of discovery just completed they had not been able to get so far to the southward as upon a former occasion, having only reached on the 12th March, lat. 71°30′ S., when being beset in ice, with strong southerly winds, they were obliged to abandon all attempts to make further progress. In lat. 65°12′ S., long. 56°30′ W., some of the South Shetlands being then in sight, an island was discovered 1450 feet high; it was a perfect cinder, and had evidently been recently thrown up from the sea. These ships may be expected in this country in October.

PRECIS OF MISCELLANEOUS EVENTS.—FROM 7TH TO 10TH JUNE.—Mr. Chisholm, who was assaulted by Mr. Hugh Stratford, in mistake for Mr. Gregory, of the Satirist, is now quite recovered.—During the latter part of the week a report was current that a person had made an offer to Government to assassinate Mr. O'Connell. Government obtained a warrant for apprehension of this person, at Bow-street, on the 7th. He was arrested at Gloucester on the 8th, and on the 9th was examined at the Home Office, before Mr. Hall, the magistrate; Sir J. Graham and Mr. M. Sutton being present. On the 5th Sir J. Graham received at his private residence a letter bearing the Gloucester post-office stamp, dated "Gloucester, 5th June," and signed "Samuel Mayer." The letter was couched in very rambling language, relating chiefly to Irish politics, and it contained the following sentence:—"I will undertake, as I may be advised to run the risk of my life against O'Connell's." Mr Mayer explained that he wrote the letter on the 3rd, after dinner, under the influence of wine and a conversation with some friends on Irish politics. He had no intention of sending the letter, but he put it into his pocket, in which happened to be a letter to his mother; and, by mistake, he next day posted the wrong letter. On discovering his blunder, he intended to write an explanatory letter, but his friends advised him not, as Sir J. Graham would obviously regard the letter as mere effusion under the excitement of wine. He expressed his extreme regret at his folly, and produced testimonials of excellent character from the High Sheriff of Gloucester, and other very respectable persons. After a few remarks from Mr. Hall, the prisoner was ordered to enter into his own recognizances in the sum of £200, and find two sureties in £100 each, for his appearance at the Central Criminal Court, to answer any indictment which might be preferred against him. Two gentlemen who accompanied him from Gloucester immediately entered into the required sureties, and he was forthwith released. Mr. Mayer is of gentlemanly appearance, and about thirty-five years of age. Some years back he resigned practice as a solicitor to take a situation in the Custom-house at Gloucester, from which he has now been discharged, by order of Government.—It has been computed that the amount obtained by the Government, in the shape of income-tax, from the various railway companies throughout the country, will very nearly reach 100,000*l.* per annum. It was stated by the Secretary to the Great Western Railway Company, in his examination at the Oxford session, (in an appeal by the Company against its being assessed to the poor at 3,000*l.* for the two miles the railway passed through the parish of Goring,) that the amount of income tax paid by this company alone was 10,450*l.* for one year. The inhabitants of many small parishes through which the lines of railways pass have been very materially relieved by the various companies being assessed to the relief of the poor according to the estimated profits upon those portions of railways lying within their respective boundaries.

Considerable curiosity has been created by the erection of a large tablet on the walls of Allhallows Church to the memory of Milton, the poet. It bears as an inscription the following well-known lines:—

> "Three poets, in three distant ages born,
> Greece, Italy, and England did adorn.
> The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd;
> The next in majesty; in both, the last.
> The force of Nature could no further go,
> To make a third she join'd the former two."

"John Milton was born in Bread-street, the 9th day of December, 1608, and was baptised in the parish church, All hallows, Bread-street, on Tuesday, the 20th day of December 1608."—On the 14th a number of gentlemen of high respectability assembled at dinner at the London Tavern, for the purpose of presenting a magnificent service of plate, which had been voted to Sir J Pirie, Bart, and Lady Pirie.—On the morning of the 15th, a fire burst forth in the boiling-room of Messrs. Thomas and Henry Croft's soupery, in Comus-Street, Liverpool. The premises were nearly new, and of great extent. Though water was speedily obtained, the fire burned so fiercely that the engines could make but little impression on it, and in a few hours the premises were entirely destroyed. The tenements on the opposite side of the street were several times set on fire, but as quickly extinguished. The damage has been estimated at from 14,000*l.* to 18,000*l.*—The proportion of persons in the United Kingdom who pass their time without applying to any gainful operation, is quite inconsiderable. Of 5,812,276 males, 20 years of age and upwards, living at the time of the census of 1831, there were said to be engaged in some calling or profession 5,466,182, as follows:—In agriculture, 2,470,111; in trade and manufactures, 1,888,768; in labour, not agriculture, 698,588; in domestic service, 132,811; as bankers, clergymen, professional men, &c., 275,904; thus leaving unemployed only 346,094, or rather less than six per cent. of the whole, which, assuming that the proportionate number at each age contained the same in 1831 that it was found to be in 1821, is not quite a quarter per cent. beyond the number living in 1831 who were 70 years of age and upwards. It is probable that this number of unemployed persons is somewhat understated, and that noblemen and gentlemen residing upon their estates, many of whom intrust to agents everything connected with business employment, are reckoned among the number of those engaged in agriculture; but, if it be the case, it cannot very greatly alter the calculation.

A Parliamentary paper just published, shows that, according to the census of 1841, the population of England, Wales and Scotland, was 18,531,853—of whom 9,012,072 were males, 9,513,085 females, and 4,896 travelling by railways and canals. The population for Ireland by the same census was 8,175,238. The following is an abstract of the number of persons in Ireland ascertained by the Commissioners of Public Instruction to belong to each religious denomination in the year 1834:—Members of the Established Church, 852,064; Roman Catholics, 6,427,712; Presbyterians, 642,356; other Protestant Dissenters, 21,808—Total of abstract, 7,943,940.—The erection of the monument to commemorate Hampden's last struggle with the Royalist army at Chalgrove, near Oxford, was celebrated on the 19th, by a dinner at that place, it being the 200th anniversary of his death. —The Council of University College, London, at their Session on Saturday last, received another present of a 500*l.* Exchequer Bill from their former benefactor, "Patriot." The fund for which the College is indebted to this munificent friend to liberal education now amounts to 3,844*l.*

In the Court of Common Pleas on the 20th, the case of Gregory v. the Duke of Brunswick, which has attracted so much observation, was called on for trial. It was an action brought to recover damages for the injury which, it was alleged, the plaintiff had sustained by a conspiracy on the part of the defendant and others to drive him from the stage, and ruin him in his profession of an actor. Several witnesses having been called, Mr. Serjeant Talfourd addressed the jury for the defendants. He said they were charged with having packed a great number of persons in order to carry into effect a preconcerted scheme of hooting Mr. Gregory off the stage. The charge of conspiracy the defendants utterly and entirely denied; but they pleaded to the hooting and hissing spoken of in the declaration, that Mr. Gregory was a common libeller and defamer for hire, from the Queen on the throne down to persons in the humblest rank of life, and that he extorted money from various persons by dishonest means. They then said that Mr. Gregory presented himself on the British stage as a candidate for public favour, and that considering his appearance there as an outrage upon public decency, they hissed and hooted at him, as they had a right to do. The learned counsel then eloquently contended that there was no ground for the action, and that there was not the slightest evidence to sustain the charge of conspiracy. The jury found a verdict for the defendants.—The indictment preferred against Mr. Gregory for a tissue of libels published in the Satirist, in reference to the Duke of Brunswick, was called on for trial on the 23rd; Mr. Gregory pleaded guilty.

The Peninsular and Oriental Company's new steamer Bentinck, will leave Liverpool in a few days for Dublin, in progress to Southampton. She will leave this country for India about 24th August.

The steamer Precursor has left the East India Docks for St. Petersburgh, where it is probable she may be purchased by the Russian Government.

Sir Edward Ryan, late Chief Justice of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, has been sworn a member of Her Majesty's Most Hon Privy Council, and sits regularly at the Judicial Committee on Appeals.

The widow of the late lamented Bishop Heber has again married. Her husband is a French Roman Catholic gentleman.

H. T. Prinsep, Esq, late a member of the Council of India, has announced himself a candidate for a seat in the Direction of the East India Company; we have reason to believe with every certainty of speedy success.

H. S. Chapman, Esq., of the Middle Temple, has been appointed by Lord Stanley to the judgeship at Wellington, New Zealand.

It is understood that Mr. Patrick Murphy, Q.C., assistant barrister for the county of Cavan, will be appointed to the chief justiceship at Madras, or to the first vacancy on the Indian Bench. Mr. Murphy is a Roman Catholic, and took a leading part in the struggle for Catholic Emancipation; but since the Repeal agitation he has abstained from politics, devoting himself to his profession. We believe Mr. Murphy has been also appointed one of Her Majesty's counsel in England.

The Board of Customs have ordered that all goods imported from India vià Egypt shall be liable to the same duty only as if imported by the long sea route, on the consignee making an affidavit that the said goods are the produce of Asia, and have come direct from thence.

It is stated that the projected railway between Calcutta and Diamond Harbour, respecting which Captain Boileau, of the Bengal Engineers, has furnished a very valuable report, is likely to be taken up by some respectable parties.

From a return, printed by order of the House of Commons, we collect that the total amount expended for steam navigation to India, by way of the Red Sea, in each of the last four years, towards which Parliament has granted 50,000*l.*, is as follows:—1838-39, 149,723*l.*; 1839-40, 121,236*l.*; 1840-41, 107,209*l.*; 1841-42, 71,734*l.*

The remains of Rajah Rammohun Roy, who died at Stapleton Grove, near Bristol, the residence of M. H. Castle, Esq., several years since, and was buried in the grounds adjoining the house, have been removed to the cemetery at Arno's Vale, and interred in that portion appropriated to dissenters. A sum of money has been forwarded from India for the purpose of erecting a stately monument on the spot. It will be in the Hindoo style of architecture, and upwards of thirty feet in height.

Boghos Bey has published a notice regulating the terms on which merchandise shall be admitted to pass through Egypt. This document states that a transit duty of one-half per cent. on the declared value shall be paid on all merchandise landed either at Alexandria or at Suez, and in case of fraud in the estimation of the value, the custom-house officers may open the cases of merchandise and enforce a duty of 10 per cent.; no person to be permitted to convey merchandise through Egypt without a special permission.

A printed report of the Committee appointed to inquire into the transactions between the Union Bank of Calcutta and the late firm of Gilmore and Co. has been received in this country. The Times having noticed it, concludes thus:—"If the above abridgement of a report so curious is of no other utility, it will at least serve to give a notion of the very singular manner in which banking business has been conducted at Calcutta."

The present Mail takes out a Breakfast Service of Plate, silver gilt, as a present from Her Majesty to Shere Sing, with a letter from Lord Ripon thanking his Highness for the assistance afforded to our troops in their passage through the Punjab.

June 15.—Factories' Bill.—Sir J. Graham made a statement explanatory of the feelings which have induced the government not to press the educational clauses of the factories' bill during the present session. These clauses, he affirmed, had been framed in no sectarian spirit, with the view of meeting the evils so graphically depicted by Lord Ashley; and they had been received by the house, if not with favour, at least with forbearance. The powerful hostility of the dissenters to the clauses, as they originally stood, had induced him to endeavour, by modification, to make them more acceptable, an attempt which had entirely failed. Seeing, therefore, that the hostility of the dissenters remained unabated, and that the church, though it had acquiesced, did not give the measure its cordial support, and feeling that though the bill could be carried, yet that without general concord and co-operation, it would be practically a defeat, and worse than inoperative, inasmuch as it would engender religious strife and animosity, the government had come to the resolution of withdrawing the clauses relating to education; and it was now a matter of consideration with them whether or not, and in what form they would proceed with the other portions of the bill.—Lord J. Russel considered that a wise discretion had been exercised in withdrawing the educational clauses. He recommended that the government should, during the recess, consider some plan for rectifying the evils of general ignorance, and bring it forward in a shape more likely to be generally acceptable.

June 19.—Spain.—Sir R. Peel, in reply to Mr. Hindley, expressed his strong sympathy with the Regent of Spain, who in the midst of many difficulties had acted up to the responsibilities of his high station; and should he be driven from power, he would still have the consolation of knowing that he had mainly contributed to laying the foundations of constitutional government in Spain.

June 22.—Church of Scotland.—Sir J. Graham, replying on several points to Mr. F. Maule, having relation to Scotland, stated that the Government did not intend to provide endowments for the quoad sacra parishes of that country.

The ninth report of the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland states that the number of schools has increased to 2,721, and the number of children to 319,792. The Commissioners have undertaken to make grants towards the building of 200 schools, which have not been as yet completed but which will be attended by 25,793 children, which would thus give 2,921 schools, with an attendance upon them of 345,585. There were trained during the last year 136 male and 63 female teachers, making a total of 199; there are now trained altogether 980 teachers.

The Reverend Theobald Mathew has, from his own private resources, distributed some thousand copies of the Douay version of the Holy Bible; and with the approbation of the Roman Catholic Prelates of Ireland, has in the press a new edition of the Sacred Volume, to be published in 12 numbers, at the low price of 6*d.* each number. This will place the Old and New Testament within the reach of every teetotaller in Ireland.

Lieut. W. H. Hall has been promoted to the rank of Commander, and has been appointed to the royal steam yacht Victoria and Albert. This officer commanded the Nemesis during the operations against the Chinese.

At the suggestion of Capt. Sir T. Hastings, the Lords of the Admiralty have ordered the stern of the Trafalgar, 120, lying at Chatham, to be altered according to a plan proposed by Mr. Fincham. In consequence of the introduction of war-steamers into the Navies of the various maritime Powers, it has become necessary to make the sterns of the ships of the line so that they can carry a powerful battery for their protection. This has been fully provided for in the two last line-of-battle ships launched at Chatham, the Goliath, 80, and the Cumberland, 80, whose sterns are built so as to present a front of defence in every direction, at the same time blended with a degree of elegance and efficiency not to be surpassed.

On the 19th, the judges attended the House of Lords to answer certain questions which had been put to them respecting the law in cases of monomania. Lord Chief Justice Tindal read the opinions of the judges, who all concurred, with the exception of Mr. Justice Maule. The first question was, What was the law respecting an alleged crime committed by a person afflicted with an insane delusion, in respect to making him liable for his acts where he knew that he was acting contrary to law, but where he did the act complained of with the view of redressing some grievance or injury, or of producing some public benefit? In answering that question, the judges assumed that the inquiry was confined to those persons who laboured under a partial delusion; and they were of opinion, that notwithstanding the party did so act with the view of redressing some injury, or producing some public benefit, he was punishable according to the nature of the crime committed, if he knew that he was acting contrary to the law, by which expression they understood to mean the law of the land. The second question was, What was the proper question to be left to the jury, in respect of a person labouring under an insane delusion, and such delusion was set up as a defence to the indictment? The third question was, In what terms ought the question to be left to the jury, where the unsoundness of mind appeared in the course of the trial? The judges thought that these two questions ought to be answered together, and their opinion was that the jury ought to be told that every man was presumed to be of sane mind, and in possession of sufficient reason to be responsible for his acts, till the contrary was proved; and that to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be proved that the party was labouring under the defect from such a disease of the mind as not to be in a state to know the nature of the act, or, if he knew the nature of the act, then not to know whether he was right or wrong in the doing of it. The fourth question was, If the person was under an insane delusion only as to the existing case, what consequence ought to follow—ought he to be thereby excused? The answer to that question must depend on the nature of the delusion. But making the same assumption as before, that he was labouring under a partial delusion, and was not in other respects insane, he must be considered the same with respect to his responsibility, as if the fact on which he entertained the delusion was a reality. The fifth question was, Can a medical man, conversant with the disease of insanity, who never saw the prisoner previously to the trial, but who was present during the whole trial and the examination of all the witnesses, be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, or his opinion whether the prisoner was conscious at the time of doing the act that he was acting contrary to law, or whether he was labouring under any and what delusion at the time? The judges were of opinion that the question could not be put to the witness in the precise form stated above; for by doing so they would be assuming that the facts had been proved. That was a question which ought to go to the jury exclusively. When the facts were proved and admitted, then the question, as one of science, could be generally put to a witness under the circumstances stated in the interrogatory. [From the opinion on this question Mr. Baron Maule stated his dissent on the ground of the opposite practice, hitherto sanctioned by the judges.]

"Rebecca and her Daughters" have grown in the audacity of their crusade against the tolls in South Wales, until they have drawn retribution on themselves. On the 14th, a party of farmers of the hundred of Elvet met in the neighbourhood of Talog, and resolved "to demand from the trustees of the Newcastle trust a debtor and creditor account for the last eighteen years; and if found fair and correct, and the money received from the tolls fairly and honestly laid out on the roads, then the gate at Water Street is not to be disturbed; but if unsatisfactory to them, then the gate is to be immediately demolished." On the nights of the 15th and 16th, all the gates between Carmarthen and the Tivy, and along the banks of the river, were destroyed. On the 17th, a party of police, twenty-two in number, with twenty-eight pensioners, went from Carmarthen to Talog, and levied a distress on a person who had refused to pay toll. They did so; and soon after they were surrounded by a party of 400 men, many of them armed; who disarmed the police, and made them march to the house of Capt. Davies, the magistrate who had signed the distress-warrant, obliged the constables to pull down the wall round the house, and then released them. In the mean time, rumours spread abroad that there was to be a great "demonstration" in Carmarthen on the 19th: and a large body of magistrates, with the mayor, assembled in the Town-hall, to be prepared for any emergency. Representations of the excited state of the neighbourhood had been sent to the Home Office; and a troop of the Fourth Light Dragoons had been ordered from Cardiff, to be in Carmarthen at two. From an early hour the streets were crowded; and about ten o'clock was announced the approach of the rioters by the Newcastle-Emlyn road. Mr. J. L. Davies endeavoured to persuade the rioters to return to their homes. They read a list of their complaints and the changes they desired; which included not only the removal of all the turnpike-gates in the county, but also the abolition of all tithe and rentcharge in lieu of tithes, the total alteration of the present Poor-law, abolition of church-rates, and an equitable adjustment of their landlords' rents. These with other alleged grievances, six or seven in number, they stated their determination to get remedied. An express was sent to meet the Dragoons and hasten their arrival; and in the mean time the Royal Carmarthen Fusileers were called out and stationed near the Workhouse; and bodies of special constables were stationed at the Hall and at other points. About noon, the rioters began to march into the town, through Water Street gate, headed by a band. The leading body consisted of some thousands on foot, many of whom were Chartists and rabble of the town; a large number of women was among the crowd, and men bearing inflammatory placards. These were followed by a man in disguise to represent Rebecca; some bearing brooms with which to sweep the foundations of the toll-houses and the Workhouse, and the rear brought up by about 300 farmers on horseback. They paraded the town; passing the hall, and hooting the magistrates, and proceeded to the Workhouse, which they attacked. They climbed over the high wall with which the building is surrounded, and then burst open the lodge-gates and porter's door; the horsemen rode into the yard and surrounded the premises and the rioters on foot soon forced an entrance into the building, and commenced their work of destruction. While the rioters were in the act of pulling down the premises, the military arrived. Mr. T. C. Morris read the Riot Act, and summoned them to surrender: but they made an attempt to rush on the military. The dragoons charged, using the flat of their swords, and soon put the rioters outside the wall to flight. Those within offered some resistance; and for a few moments the edge of the sword was turned upon them; when they succumbed. Many escaped over the wall; but about a hundred were taken prisoners, and several horses were abandoned by their riders. Two men and a woman were wounded by the swords, but not very seriously. A farmer fell from his horse, and his head was cut by a kick. Several prisoners were immediately examined before the magistrates, and committed for trial. A disappointed provincial barrister is said to be a leader of the riot; and the brother of a Member of Parliament is supposed to be among the prisoners.

The Rev. George Talbot, M.A., formerly of Balliol College, has resigned the living of Evercreech-cum-Chesterblade, Somerset, and joined the church of Rome. This is the fifth member of the University of Oxford who has turned Romanist since the conversion of the Rev. R. W. Sibthorp.—A handsome building, in the enriched Roman style of architecture, with a theatre capable of accommodating 800 persons, has just been completed at the corner of Basinghall-street, in the City, at a cost of 7,000*l.*, for the delivery of the Gresham lectures.—The Rev. Henry Erskine Head, rector of Feniton, Devon, has been, at the suit of the Bishop of Exeter, sentenced to three years' suspension from the office of the ministry, the loss of his living, and the costs of the action, for having published a letter, in which he maintained that the Church Catechism, the order of Baptism, and the Order of Confirmation, in the Book of common Prayer, contained erroneous doctrines. Mr. Head is an evangelical clergyman, and the Bishop of Exeter belongs to the Puseyite school. Mr. Head preached his farewell sermon on the 25th, to a crowded and deeply affected audience, choosing for his text the well-known words, "The lively oracles of God." He commenced by remarking, that on an early day his name would be posted on the church door as a criminal of no ordinary magnitude. He recapitulated the whole of the circumstances connected with the proceedings which had been taken against him, and expressed his unalterable attachment to the great truths, for the advocacy of which he has been made a living martyr. He stated that he was now cast upon the wide world without a farthing in his possession, not knowing where he was to go, or what he was to do; still he rejoiced at the stand which he had been enabled to make against the dreadful errors to which he had referred, and on behalf of the great truths of evangelical religion. The scene towards the close of the rev. gentleman's sermon, when he earnestly, and with the deepest sole[illegible] of manner, invoked on his hearers the Divine b[illegible], bidding them farewell, is said to have been one [illegible] most affecting ever witnessed.

Colonial.—The Io, now on her passage from Jamaica to Liverpool, has on board three thousand weight of Sea Island seed cotton, grown and ginned at Aranjuez pen, in the parish of St. Andrew, a district of about a mile and a quarter from the seashore, and in a dry sandy soil. The cultivation of cotton, which at one time formed one of the principal staples of the island, ceased upon the introduction of the cane and coffee plants. Hundreds and thousands of acres along the coast, which used to be profitably employed in its cultivation, have been suffered to lie waste till Mr. Gourgues came forward and showed that they might again be made both available and profitable. In Jamaica much anxiety will be felt to know what prices the cotton will realize, and whether it will be sufficiently remunerating to induce other pen-keepers along the coasts of the island to employ their land and their small capital in its cultivation.

Sir C. Bagot, late Governor General of Canada, expired on the 19th May. His remains have since reached England in Her Majesty's ship the Warspite, on board which ship Lady Mary Bagot and family have also returned to England. The correspondent of the Colonial Gazette remarks, that of all the many Governors of Canada, Sir C. Bagot's is "the only memory that will live in the affections of the colonists," a popularity, ascribed first to his thorough goodness—his kindness and honour, his love of truth and justice; and secondly, to that policy of ruling by and for the many, by which "he converted a Government minority into a majority of ten to one."—"His success in this matter, as in converting the rebels of French Canada into loyalists, was not owing to any boldness in his character, but to his honesty: he avoided a system of half measures, from repugnance to the false pretences, the shuffling, and the lying which it requires: he did thoroughly what he thought right, and intended to do, not because he was a resolute man, but because it would have been against truth and honour to do less. It was the thoroughgoing character of his acts which crowned them with success; but the seeming boldness was only honesty and consequent earnestness of purpose." The same writer states that Sir C. Metcalfe differs from his predecessor in some important particulars. He says—"Those who ought to know, say that he never reads the newspapers! Be this as it may, he looks into everything else, works like a horse, and keeps his opinions to himself. I observe that the class of jobbers and tricksters seem afraid of him: they say they 'can't make him out.' As respects parties, he at present leaves everything as he found it—which was perhaps inevitable; and speaks publicly of his predecessor in the most complimentary terms, which may be only a generous departure from his ordinary and very marked reserve on matters having any relation to party. * * * He says that he finds the difficulties of his position greater than he had been led to expect, though he had been prepared for no easy task. People who had been long on the spot know that his difficulties are not great—that it is an easy task to govern Canada if you only know how; and it is hence inferred that Sir C. Metcalfe resembles all his predecessors during the early days of their government, in being considerably puzzled as to the best mode of proceeding. Others think (and I own to being one of them) that he is somewhat disposed to administer too much with his own hand. Not but that Canada would gain in all sorts of ways by having her affairs managed chiefly by a very just and capable individual; but then, what is to happen afterwards if his successor should be unjust and incapable? A really wise Governor would surely not expect his successor to be gifted with more than the average of governing qualities, and would therefore put things in such a state that the good government of the country should not depend on the perpetual exercise of his own rare ability."

The differences which have hitherto existed between her Majesty's Government and the New Zealand Company, respecting the title of the latter to land, having been satisfactorily adjusted, colonising operations are now likely to be carried on with renewed activity. We have seen a prospectus put forward by Mr. G. Rennie, the late member for Ipswich, Mr. W. Cargill, and Mr. W. P. Croke, which we understand has been very favourably received by the Company. It is for the formation in the colony of a settlement for Scottish emigrants of all the various classes which constitute society, which shall comprise a provision for religious and educational purposes, in connexion with the Presbyterian Church of Scotland; the whole of the Emigration Fund arising from the sale of the Company's lands in the settlement, being employed in promoting the emigration of persons of the labouring class from Scotland only; Englishmen and Irishmen, however, being permitted to join if they approve of the scheme of endowments. It has, therefore, been proposed that, for the purpose of forming a distinct settlement, the Company shall appropriate 120,550 acres of land; to be divided into 2,200 lots of ¼ acre each for the town, 2,000 of 10 acres each for suburban, and 2,000 lots of 50 acres each for rural lands. That there shall be reserved, free of charge, for future municipal purposes, 200 town lots. That one town lot, one suburban lot, and one rural lot, shall constitute a single property; 200 properties being reserved for the Company; and the remaining 1,800 properties being submitted for sale at the price of 120*l.* each. That the purchase money received, viz. 216,000*l.*, shall be disposed of as follows:—54,000*l.* to the Company, as the price of the land, at 10*s.* per acre. 30,000*l.* for surveys and other expenses of founding the settlement, 81,000*l.* for Emigration. 26,000*l.* for roads, bridges, &c. 5,000*l.* as a Church building fund. 10,000*l.* as a provision for ministers. 10,000*l.* as a school-fund for building, and masters.

The New Zealand Company are to choose the place of settlement, and be trustees for that portion of the purchase money to be appropriated to specific purposes.

France.—The minister of Marine and the Colonies has announced that the harbours of the Marquesas and Society Islands shall be opened to the vessels of all nations.

The Chamber of Deputies spent three days in discussing a bill to provide for the maintenance of the new French settlements in the Pacific. Ministers demanded 5,500,000 francs. They vindicated the necessity of the settlements as affording shelter to the whaling-ships in the South Sea, and an entrepot for French commerce in that quarter, after the canal should have been cut across the Isthmus of Panama; and the English possession of Honduras was referred to as showing the foresight of England in respect to the future canal. They would also be a station in the event of war in the Pacific between France, England, and America. The Opposition condemned the settlements in the Pacific as unnecessary; especially at a time when the ill-secured possession of Algeria costs so much. Others condemned the seizure as part of a mere religious scheme. M. Guizot strenuously defended the settlements, but made an unexpected concession, offering to reduce the vote by 397,000 francs in the money for the troops; making good the difference on that head by subtracting the like sum from the pay of the Marines at home. Further, he proposed to strike 100,000 francs from a sum of 300,000, to be left at the disposal of Government. This saved the bill, which was voted by 22 to 140.

The Ministry, though they succeeded in carrying their demands for the French establishments in the Pacific, have met with numerous small defeats, as, for instance, in the Chamber of Deputies, the rejection of their demand of 130,000 francs for the service of the French possessions in India. The refusal of the grant was occasioned by "the profligate misapplication of the public money of late years in Pondicherry and elsewhere."

PORTUGAL.—The Queen and the King Consort have again given up a portion of their annual income, in order to relieve the necessities of the country. This was to meet an intended address of the Cortes praying for such reduction. Instead, the Cortes voted their Majesties an address of thanks for their generous concession.

SPAIN.—The determination of the Regent to dismiss the Lopez administration, and to form a government under Gomez, Bererra, and Mendizabal, has kindled a spirit of revolt which now rages in Catalonia, Valencia, Granada, Gallicia, and Malaga.

Upon the retirement of Lopez, considerable excitement prevailed at Madrid. Granada declared against Espartero, and the movement spread to Malaga, Corunna, and elsewhere. At Barcelona, on 5th June, an Independent Junta was formed, who declared for Isabel II. and the constitution of 1837, with death to the Regent. Lerida next effected its movement, and appointed a junta. San Andres de Palomar, Igualeda, Granollers, Mahorca, Murroreil, Manresa, Cardona, and other towns, raised the standard; and the Supreme Provisional Junta, which centered in its hands all the powers of the province, was definitively constituted at Sabadell. On the 8th, it addressed a proclamation to the inhabitants, apprising them of that circumstance, and suggesting the expediency of establishing a central junta, composed of deputies from all the provinces that had shaken off the yoke of the government of Madrid. The junta resolved, in the mean time, to declare the province of Barcelona independent of that government, and to take into its hands the reins of power in the name of Queen Isabel II. It appears that, although no tangible reproach was made against the Regent, a disposition to resist his authority was general among the population, who were successfully operated on by a number of restless or disaffected persons. One of the alleged causes of their discontent was the bombardment of Barcelona, for which they cherished the warmest resentment; and one of the avowed or pretended objects of their revolt was to procure the declaration that the Queen was now of age, and thus get rid at once of the Regent, and of the pretensions of the ex-Queen Regent.

On the 14th and 15th Figueiras, Cardona, and Tarragona joined the movement, but Montjuich, a fort well furnished for a siege, the possession of which determines the military possession of Barcelona, remained faithful. On the 18th and 19th Seville, Corunna, Santiago, Lugo, Orense, Vigo, and Betanzos, and subsequently St. Jago, Valencia, Valladolid, Vittoria, Estella, Guetaria, Lucena, Zamora, and Ubedo, declared against the Regent.

On learning the death of the Political Chief of Valencia, Espartero resolved to head the forces against the insurgents; and steps were taken to concentrate troops at Saragossa. On the 14th, he issued an address to the nation, to explain conduct which calumniators laboured to blacken. He calls to mind his solemn oaths on accepting the Regency, his public pledges, and disclaims every intention of violating them, particularly the imputed intention of prolonging the term of his office. He reviews the history of his regency, vindicating some of its stronger measures by referring to the state of the country. He disclaims alike the genius and the ambition of Napoleon, who expiated his usurpations on a rock in the ocean; and avows his determination to return to the private life whence he came. He holds his office only by virtue of the constitution; without the constitution there is nothing but ruin for him and his country; and he will deliver up his sacred trust, not to anarchy, but only to the Queen and Cortes; meanwhile defending it as a soldier. On the 15th, he reviewed the garrison, and was enthusiastically cheered. On the 16th, the Gazette contained a proclamation of the Regent, signed by all the Ministers, declaring illegal and rebellious all Juntas found in opposition to the Government, and ordering their members to be tried and punished with all the severity of the law of the 17th April, 1821.

In an express proclamation, the Spanish Government have contradicted a report that there was an intention to remove the Queen from the Palace of Madrid towards Portugal, to marry her to a Prince of the family of Saxe-Coburg Cohury, who was then in that country on a visit to the King, one of its sons.

On the 21st, Espartero took his departure for Valencia, with 6,000 infantry, 2 regiments of cavalry, and 15 pieces of artillery.

AMERICA.—A letter, lately published, addressed to R. H. Greg, Esq., by the shippers of the 400 bales of American cotton manufactures, consigned to Messrs. Baring Brothers, of London, and improperly detained here by the officers of the Customs, for an alleged infraction of the Custom Duties Act, states that the Americans will soon become extensive exporters of twist as well as of manufactured fabrics of yarn under No. 30's. The quantities of cotton shirting, sheeting, and drills now exporting from the northern states of the union is said to be much larger than at any former period; the prices having been materially reduced by the reduction in the prices of cotton and labour. "In all the finer fabrics," the writer states, "we shall continue to be large customers to Great Britain;" and he adds, "we are literally burthened with agricultural products, and the prices very low." Mr. H. Greg, in drawing attention to these facts, and in mentioning that he had examined the goods in question, which he found to consist of cotton drills, a stout-twilled nankin used for summer trousers, states also that the house in which he was concerned used to manufacture this article largely for export; but their orders fell off, until at last their correspondents stated that they could buy the article in America 10 per cent. cheaper than it could be sent to them from England. These articles and the common plain "domestics" have long since replaced the English article in the markets of South America and Canton. There are 900 cotton mills in the United States, and a capital of 10,000,000*l.* sterling is invested in the cotton manufactures. They have nearly 40,000 looms, and produce 253 millions of yards in a year. The exports from the United States to China during the present season are stated already at 250,000lbs. of twist, and 420,000 pieces cotton cloth.

Mr. Louis Bourbon, who was one of the Canadian patriots of 1839, sent into exile in New South Wales, and who made his escape from that place, has arrived in the States from Rio Janeiro.

To show that, notwithstanding the principle of "repudiation," the great majority of the people of the United States are in favour of honesty and good faith, a tabular statement has been furnished, in which is given the population of the several States, which then are divided into the four classes of States having no public debt; States indebted and paying their interest regularly; States indebted and acknowledging, but not paying interest; and States indebted and disavowing part of their debt, or, in modern parlance, "repudiating." The satisfactory result is shown, that out of a population of 17,000,000 inhabitants, 30 States and territories, 12,600,000 inhabitants, inhabiting 21 States and territories, have no debt, or pay their interest punctually. Two States and one territory have alone openly proclaimed repudiation.—London Mail.

BY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Head Quarters, Simlah, 25th July, 1843.

Instances having recently occurred of General Courts Martial having been improperly constituted, by the nomination of an undue proportion of Subalterns as members, His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to direct the publication of the following extract from Her Majesty's regulations, for future guidance:

"In every case where such a Court (Courts Martial for the trial of officers) can be assembled without serious embarrassment or inconvenience to the service, the members ought to be of equal, if not superior, rank to the prisoner, and in no case, but one of absolute necessity is a Colonel to sit upon the trial of a General Officer: or a Captain on that of a Field Officer, or a Subaltern Officer on that of a Captain; and on the trial of Subaltern Officers, two officers of that rank are considered a sufficient proportion to be placed as members of the Court. Of course there can be no objection to the members of the Court being of any rank superior to that of the prisoner, and the greater the proportion of officers of superior rank, the better and more respectable the constitution of the Court will be considered."

The undermentioned officers have leave of absence:

5th Battalion Artillery.—Major T. Lumsden, c. b., from 4th November to 4th March 1844, in extension, to enable him to visit the presidency, preparatory to applying for permission to retire from the service.

15th Regiment Native Infantry.—Surgeon A. McK. Clark, from 15th October to 15th March 1844, to visit the presidency, preparatory to applying for permission to retire from the service.

47th Regiment Native Infantry.—Lieutenant and Brevet Captain W. C. Hollings, from 21st May to 21st August, to remain at Bauleah, and proceed on the river on medical certificate.

55th Regiment Native Infantry.—Ensign W. E. Sandys, from 20th July to 20th March 1844, in extension, and to enable him to join his present regiment at Sukkur.

19th Regiment Native Infantry.—Lieut. W. K. Wollen, from 17th July to 1st Nov.—To visit Simlah, on medical certificate.

The leave of absence, for six months, preparatory to applying for furlough to Europe, on private affairs, which was granted to Lieutenant and Brevet Captain W. C. Hollings, in General Orders of the 2d ultimo, is to be calculated from the 21st of August, instead of the date herein specified.

In every case, where a man who has sustained injury, alleged to have occurred on service, the date when, the place where, and the circumstances under which, the injury was received, are to be briefly stated.

A new medical officer joining a regiment, is not a sufficient reason for leaving blank the column headed "diseases, or medical reasons for removing the individual from the effective strength of the corps." On such occasions, the hospital records are to be consulted, and the requisite information inserted from them.

In assigning pensions for wounds received in action, committees are to be guided by the extent of the injury sustained, and the ability of the party towards earning a livelihood, with reference to the headings of the several columns, 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th degree, of the General Orders by the Honourable the President in Council, of the 13th August 1838.

PREPARED BY

BATHGATE AND CO.

4 and 5, Old Court House Street,

CALCUTTA.

THIS agreeable purgative, made from a recipe of the celebrated Dr. Christison, Professor of Materia Medica in the University of Edinburgh, is chiefly recommended by its facility of administration to children.

From one to two tea spoonfuls is a dose for a child according to its age, and one to two table spoonfuls for an adult according to constitution.

THE Friends and Acquaintances of the late Mr. JOHN HENRY MOOR, for many years Head Master of the Singapore Institution Free School, will learn with regret that he died without leaving means to satisfy the claims against his Estate, and that his Widow and a family of eight Children, the eldest of whom is a Girl of fifteen and the youngest an infant of three months old, are thus left in a state of absolute destitution. In a case so peculiarly distressing it is trusted that the Communities of the Straits settlements where the deceased was so long and so well-known, will feel that this Orphan Family have no common claims on their charity and benevolence, which have heretofore never been appealed to in vain.

This Paper is put in circulation by the following Gentlemen who will form a temporary Committee for the collection of the funds subscribed and until the same be placed in the hands of the Trustees appointed by the Subscribers, at large for its future disposition and management for the benefit of the family.

"A volume deeply embued with genuine poetical feeling."—Edinburgh Advertiser.

"In these times of poetical amplification, it is refreshing to meet with a work like this, which unites a sweet harmony of verse with depth and sublimity of thought, and is at once pleasing and instructive. * * * The author is a very pleasing, and, moreover, an exceedingly interesting writer. * * * The principal poems, 'The Highlands and the Scottish Martyrs,' do great credit to the head and heart of the worthy author. The first is decidedly the cream of the volume, and is, moreover, splendidly illustrated by steel engravings of Loch Lomond, Loch Ard, Loch Katrine, and the celebrated Pass of Killiecrankie. As a modern production, it merits a respectable place among the best Poetry of the day. * * * It abounds in passages of striking beauty and graphic truth. * * * The next poem, 'The Scottish Martyrs,' is chiefly descriptive, narrating the sufferings and trials of our forefathers during the Reformation, and presents a lively picture of those dark days. The other pieces evince poetry of no mean order. The annexed lines, in particular, ('The Solace of Friendship') with which we conclude our notice of this delightful volume, are so delicious that we cannot resist extracting them.—Scotch Reformer's Gazette.

Defence of Col. Sleeman.—Since the appointment of Col. Sleeman to the management of the Bundlekund and Saugor territories, he has been the object of repeated vituperation in the columns of the Delhi Gazette. These attacks on his public character have been so uninterrupted, and occasionally so virulent, as to shake the public confidence in their truthfulness. They evidently originate in the personal feelings of some one to whom the Editor has lent a favourable a ear; he cannot therefore be too cautious in mistrusting the authority on which they are published. Such a crusade against a public officer, is not usual with our public journals. In almost every instance in which it has been exhibited, the public has been enabled, sooner or later, to trace it up to the malevolence of some individual, who has laboured to accomplish his own base object, by poisoning the sources of public information, and who, by writing to various journals under different signatures, has hoped that by a kind of ventriloquism, he will be considered as echoing the public voice.

An attempt was made last month to enlist the Bombay Times in this attack on Col. Sleeman's administration. Some individual sent a long paper to that journal, cast in the form of an editorial article, in the hope that the Editor would be soft enough to adopt his prejudices, and give them the weight of his own authority. There is something of superlative impudence in such attempts to entrap an Editor, and to make him the instrument of giving effect to the passions of another, upon his own responsibility. We have carefully noted the various instances in which correspondents have attempted to supply us, and our contemporaries with articles which were intended for the editorial column, and we have found that, with few exceptions, their object has been to wound the reputation of some opponent. Those who have any genuine and important information to communicate, are generally content to send it in the shape of a letter to the Editor, with some appropriate signature. A contribution to the editorial columns, always comes in a very questionable shape, and is usually found to be dictated by malignity.

The paper which appeared in the Times, furnishes so many particulars, that with the exercise of a little ingenuity, we should probably find it no difficult matter to establish the identity of the writer; but we will not attempt to draw him from the obscurity which he has chosen. The spirit exhibited in that document is indeed so unusual, that we are almost tempted to believe that we have met the slanderer before; but we will dismiss every thought of his personality, and attend only to the subject matter of his communication, which is to shew, "that Col. Sleeman has disappointed public expectations, and is altogether unfit for the situation he holds;" that "he is totally unqualified for the duties which it is generally believed"—and as erroneously as generally—"he voluntarily undertook;" "that there can be but one opinion," —namely that of the writer—"of his total incapacity for so responsible a situation as he now holds,"—that having an object in view, which every one must reprobate, "he set himself to work to have all the old district officers removed, ruining their reputation and prospects in the pursuit of his own views of advancement." How far Col. Sleeman was instrumental in removing the district officers, we have no means of ascertaining. General and uncontradicted report attributes that measure to a higher source; but if the writer of this communication be one of those officers,—which seems scarcely probable, for they were gentlemen—there was at least one exception to the injustice of that sweeping sentence.

The measures on which the writer endeavours to establish the total incapacity of Col. Sleeman, are fully detailed in his communication. If his premises were correct, his conclusion would be unanswerable. But the Colonel, in a letter which he has addressed to the Bombay Times, and which we give below, has so entirely demolished his facts, as to leave his conclusions without a leg to stand on.—The writer stated that the Jytpore Rajah was the most powerful chief in Bundlekund, and was looked up to as their head. On the contrary, it is a fact that he is one of the least considerable of those independent Chiefs, and that they look down upon him, and upon all the other descendants of Chuttérsal, because he was the rebel servant of their ancestor.—The correspondent of the Bombay Times, who aspires to the chair, states that the notorious leader of banditti, Dhakunjoo was murdered for a bribe; whereas it turns out that although a reward was offered for his apprehension, no men were sent in pursuit of him, and that he was murdered by his own nephew, whose father, brother, and wife he had deliberately put to death five years before. That his nephew, Jowahir Sing, tracked him with an unquenchable thirst of revenge, and as he came suddenly on him, would not suffer any of his followers to fire, till he had lodged his own ball in the heart of his uncle, whom he then approached as he lay weltering in his blood, and perceiving some signs of life, gave him the coup de grace with his sabre on the right side.—The writer states that Dhelun Sa, the chief of Mudumpore, is a lad of fifteen and that Nizam Sa, his uncle, is the ruler of the state; when the truth is that Dhelun Sa is a man of more than sixty years, and Nizam Sa is his brother.—Lastly, the writer states, that Dhelun Sa and Nizam Sa, the noted marauders whom our troops had long pursued in vain, were secured by the admirable arrangements of Capt. Boland, but that instead of being hung, they were pardoned by Col. Sleeman, and restored to their estates, with an entreaty that they would keep the peace. This tissue of misrepresentation is at once destroyed by the assertion that these men surrendered themselves to a Native officer Ramcharn, a Tuhsheeldar, on condition that their lives should be spared, and that their property should not be confiscated. All the documents of the case were submitted to the Governor General, without note or comment from Col. Sleeman, and his Lordship declared that the pledge of no British officer under his Government, whether wisely or unwisely given, should be violated. They were released with much reluctance, but even their enlargement is a less calamity than the violation of a solemn promise made by a public officer, would have been. Should they renew their depredations, our police will, doubtless, be found strong enough to recapture them, but had our national faith been violated, no subsequent efforts could have restored its integrity. Thus falls to the ground this malignant attack on the new administration of Bundlekund.

Col. Sleeman has acted wisely in thus making the press, which has been the instrument of abusing him, the channel of his vindication. He had the option of a prosecution for damages against the Editor of the Bombay Times for the injury his public character had sustained, or of a plain and manly justification of his conduct by a counter statement. He has chosen the latter alternative, and his triumph is complete. We are fully aware that a public officer, responsible as he is to his own Government for his public measures, may well rest satisfied with its approbation. His refusing to notice newspaper attacks, and his determination to stand on the ground of his established character, cannot be considered as a confession of guilt. But every gentleman who holds a prominent position in the administration of this country has the public eye in England, more or less, upon his conduct, especially since the establishment of steam communication has brought Indian affairs more prominently into notice. He cannot be indifferent to the unfavourable impression which such slanderous assertions may produce, if they remain uncontradicted. While the censure of his proceedings spreads through the land of his birth, wherever his name happens to be mentioned, and his character receives its stamp from these charges of incapacity, it is poor consolation to him to reflect that the archives of Government, which the present generation are never likely to see, contain the amplest vindication of his conduct. He has relatives and friends at home, whose feelings cannot but be deeply wounded by these malignant representations, and it is in some measure a sacred duty he owes to their affection, to put them in possession of counter statements, through the same channel which had been employed in abusing him. And we are certain that in this instance the attempt to remove an unfavourable impression by means of the Press, will be found to have been completely successful.

Of the general merits of Col. Sleeman's administration in Bundelkund, it is too early to speak. His established character as a public officer affords every promise of success; and the present tranquillity of the province, during the season when it was predicted that the disaffected would have full swing for their designs, because our troops could not keep the field, is a favourable omen of future peace. Col. Sleeman may possibly err on the side of mildness and conciliation; on the other hand, a bloody campaign against our own dependents, is a measure which cannot be too much deprecated. Considering the force already established in that country, and the troops which can so easily be poured into it, it is quite possible that the mildness he has adopted may not be considered by the disaffected as an index of fear, and may not lead to subsequent disturbances.

To the Editor of the Bombay Times.

Sir,—A correspondent from Allahabad, whose letter you have published in your paper of the 22d of last month, has made some mistakes which you will perhaps permit me to correct.

1. He states, that the Jytpoor Rajah was the most powerful Chief in Bundlekund—that he is looked up to by the Bundelas as their head, being the lineal descendant of Chuttursaul; and that no chief considers himself duly installed in his own Raj without receiving the Tilak from him.

2. That the notorious leader of Banditti who infested the Jhansee state for some years, was murdered for a bribe!

3. That the chief of Mudunpoor, Dhelun Sa, is a boy of fifteen years of age, and his Uncle, Nizam Sa, the ruler of the estate de facto.

4. That the leaders Dhelun Sa of Mudunpore, and Nurwur Sing of Delwar, "were secured by "the admirable arrangements of Captain Boland, "and ought to have been hung, or transported, or "at least imprisoned for life; and would have "been so had Mr. Fraser remained in office."

5. That I shall excite the indignation of the English nation for not hanging them, and for having sent them back not even as pardoned criminals; but with an entreaty that they will exert their influence to preserve peace throughout the country.

These are your correspondent's facts—with his arguments I have nothing to do.

1. The Jytpoor Rajah is the smallest of the Bundelkund chiefs who are descended from Chutturssaul, as you will find by a reference to Mr. Rushton, and was peculiarly a creature of the British Government, his father having received in free gift from us, in the year 1809, one-half of his estate, and been suffered to retain the other when he had by his conduct forfeited all claim to it. Their estates are all east of the Dussan. But the large Bundeela chiefs, who are all west of the Dussan, Orcha, Duteea, and Chunderee, look down upon all the Dunghaee Rajahs, as they are termed, the descendants of Chutturssaul, because he was a rebel servant of their ancestor, and got possession of his estate by treachery. Of the other two large chiefs west of the Dussan, the Jhansee chief is a Brahmin, and the sumpter a Gojur; and they have no fellow feelings with Bundeelas of any kind. No chief ever received a Teeka from the Jytpoor man, who was despised for his personal character, and associated with by only one of the Chutturssaul descendants, and by none of the others. A more atrocious robber and murderer could hardly be named.

2. A reward of two thousand rupees was offered by me through Captain Ross, the Agent at Jhansee, for the apprehension of Dhakunjoo, who had murdered and maimed, I believe I may say, some hundreds of innocent and unoffending men, women, and children, among the peasantry of the Jhansee territory. I never sent any man in pursuit of him; nor had I ever any communication whatever with any man who went after him.

He was shot while sitting by a fire at the head of his horrible gang, just after he had murdered and maimed twelve innocent villagers, not by a person bribed, but by Jowahir Sing, the only surviving son of his elder brother, Dungul Sing, whom he, Dhakunjoo, had in 1838 deliberately and treacherously murdered in order to get the exclusive possession of the family estate. He murdered, at the same time, the brother of Jowahir Sing and his wife; and inflicted eighteen sword cuts on his mother who survived!

Dhakunjoo was about six feet four, and the handsomest man in Bundlekund. He was considered the bravest where all are brave. Jowahir Sing is, I believe, about six feet high, but I have never seen him. He is said to be almost as fine a looking man as his uncle was; and his uncle was often heard to declare, that he was the only man on earth that he feared; and that he felt that if he was to die by any man's hand it was by his. He did all he could to murder Jowahir Sing as he had murdered his father, brother, and sister-in-law; and in his attempts murdered many other people. Jowahir Sing knew that both could not long live in the same province, and was too proud and brave a man to quit his inheritance to make room for him.

He tracked his uncle with an unquenchable desire to avenge his father's and his brother's blood, and when he approached the fire by which he sat with his gang, he had with him fourteen true men of his own clan. He was considered the best shot in these parts; and he would not suffer any man to fire till his ball had passed through the heart of his uncle. They then fired at his followers as they made off, and killed one and wounded four. Jowahir Sing walked up to the body, and finding some signs of life still in him, he gave a cut on the right side with his sabre.

The horses of the gang, five in number, were picketed near the fire. Of these they took possession; and mounted on that of his uncle Jowahir Sing accompanied the body to Jhansee, where it lay in state the whole day, by Capt. Ross's orders, for the inspection of the people of the city to whom his name had been so long a terror. Jowahir Sing thought that in putting him to death, he had done his duty to his father, brother, and sister-in-law, and he was not ashamed to show the wounds he had inflicted, and who shall blame him, or call him a bribed murderer? I was at Jhansee at the time, but I neither saw the body of the uncle nor the person of the nephew.

3d. Dhelun Sah is not, as represented, a lad of fifteen, but a man of more than sixty years of age; and Nizam Sa is not his uncle, but his younger brother.

4th. & 5th.—In reply to these statements, I must beg you to do me the favour to publish the enclosed translations of documents which were submitted by me to the Right Honourable the Governor-General of India, with the letters which accompanied them, and without any comment of my own. His Lordship, feeling like an English nobleman, directed the release of the prisoners, and their restoration to their estates, determined that the pledge of no British officer under his Government, whether wisely or unwisely given, should ever be violated. I transmitted his Lordship's orders to the officer in charge of thedistrict, Captain Elliott, and never held any communication whatever with the persons who were to be released. Much did I regret the necessity of releasing such men, but, as an Englishman, I feel that His Lordship's orders were the only ones that could in honour have been given. What Mr. Fraser might have done, I know not; but I know him to be a man of the highest honour, and believe that he would have recommended the measure that has been adopted.

It would be charity to believe that your correspondents know nothing whatever of Bundlekund; for if they do they must know that there is not a word of truth in what they state regarding it. Of course they will tell you, that the above points are all minor ones in which it is venial to state what is not true; but they should remember, that facts are the only foundations for arguments; and that Gentlemen's characters are judged of more from their statements than from their reasoning powers.—Your's faithfully, W. H. Sleeman.

Lieut. Eyre's Court Martial.—The documents connected with Lieut. Eyre's Court Martial, which was held at Ferozepore in January last, have just been reprinted in the journals of Calcutta from the United Service Journal of London; but they throw no additional light on the dark tragedy of the retreat. Lieut. Eyre was tried on the charge of having abandoned the British force on the 9th of January, and sought personal protection in the Camp of Sirdar Mahomed Akbar, the leader of the enemy. He was honourably acquitted on the plea that the Sirdar was not regarded—officially we suppose,—as an enemy, but rather as our ally; that our troops were forbidden to fire on him both before and after the 9th of January, and that in going over to him, he acted in strict conformity with the orders of the General. Capt. Johnson, who was called to give evidence at the trial, put the matter in the clearest light by saying, that Mahomed Akbar "was the chief of the enemy who followed us from Cabul; or rather I cannot call him an enemy, as he was looked on as a friend at the time by the late General Elphinstone." He was officially our ally; in reality, our bitterest foe. To save appearances, some of his horsemen, as Lieut. Mein deposed, accompanied our troops through the defile on the 8th, and called out to some Ghilzies who were keeping up a heavy fire on our troops, and on their calling out, the firing ceased. It appears then that the enemy, who on that day put three thousand of our troops to death, in the Khoord Cabul, were not beyond the influence of the Sirdar. Our annihilated army had full opportunities of appreciating the generous sympathy and friendship of this good Samaritan, in their melancholy retreat, on the 7th January, when the troops might have pushed on through the Khoord Cabul, with comparative safety. They halted on his earnest entreaty, if not at his express command. The next day (the 8th) the heights were crowned by the enemy, and the slaughter of our troops was terrific. It was at the particular desire of the good Akbar, again, that the army halted at the Khoord Cabul on the 9th, on the promise of obtaining supplies, which promise, like every other, except that of exterminating the army, he never honoured. On that fatal day, while the half starved troops were exposed to the utmost severity of a Cabul winter in the bleakest part of the mountain range, the enemy were assembling for the next day's slaughter, which nearly annihilated the army. Two thirds of the troops who perished in that retreat, fell in marching up the defile of Khoord Cabul, and in descending from it. In both instances, had they pushed on at the time when they halted, a large remnant might have been saved; in both instances, they halted in consequence of the friendly advice of the Sirdar Mahomed Akbar. It was owing to the fatal mistake of regarding him as a friend, and placing a reliance on his promises, that the army of Cabul perished in the mountains. Had the General not been so infatuated as to regard him in the light of our ally; had he pushed on at once after the 6th, without paying the slightest attention to the treacherous advice of the Affghan chief, there is every probability that one half that army might have reached Jellalabad.

Puseyism.—We have carefully examined the papers of June, which have dropped in at successive intervals, and find that they fully bear out the assertion that Puseyism is losing ground —that is, in the political world and among the Laity. The Tractarian movement originated in a great measure in a desire to counteract the liberal views of the Whig Ministry, in ecclesiastical matters, and the growth of that Dissenting influence which it was supposed such a Ministry would not fail to foster. The liberal tendencies of the age were to be checked by disseminating and enforcing certain Church principles, which it was thought would strengthen the spirit of Conservatism. Hence the movement found favour with the great periodical organs of the Tory party, the Times and the Quarterly; and it was encouraged, not so much for the spiritual elements of which it was compounded, as for the support which it was likely to minister to the politics of the party. In a political point of view. Puseyism is identified with Toryism. It is true that the British Critic, the mouth piece of the Oxford School, has thought fit to heap its vituperations on Sir Robert Peel; but this is only the ebullition of that disappointment which the Puseyites experienced, when they found that the Ministry whom they had assisted in their struggles for power, forgot them after their success. When the Whigs, as a party, had been all but annihilated, and the Conservatives had obtained an overwhelming majority in the House of Commons, the aid of Puseyism was no longer necessary. The increasing bigotry of the party was also found to be inconvenient to a Ministry, which, having discovered that during its ten years' absence from office, liberal principles had taken deep root in the country, had adopted the wise conclusion that it was no longer either safe or practicable to conduct the administration of the country without a large admixture of those principles. The Quarterly has therefore thrown Pu-seyism overboard, and the Times is evidently making preparations for doing it the same kind office. Tractarianism having lost all its political importance, has been repudiated by the Ministry; for though Mr. William Gladstone, who appears to have taken his stand on the verge of absolute Puseyism, has obtained a seat in the Cabinet, yet Sir Robert Peel's repeated cheers when Mr. Plumptree denounced it in the House, more than counterbalances this advantage. The hope of seeing Dr. Pusey enthroned at Lambeth, and of reviving the Convocation, is, therefore, more remote than ever.

From the origin of the Tractarian movement, it has been steadily opposed by the Laity, and for reasons which it is not difficult to understand. Puseyism aims at reviving that spiritual despotism of the Priesthood, and that abject submission of the Laity to the Church, which Protestantism has broken up. Is it therefore any matter of surprise that the Laity should have resisted its encroachments, and placed themselves in opposition to a system, which nourishes ecclesiastical arrogance, and embitters all the relations of society by the malignity of its bigotry? Laymen, however warmly attached to the Establishment, recoil from that superfluity of intolerance which only wants the power, to establish an Inquisition in England, and to cover the face of society with universal gloom. Nor are they less disgusted with the ritual innovations of the sect, with its surplice preachings, its candlesticks, its waxlights, its crucifixes on the altar, its "postures and impostures, its flections and genuflexions;" its new "ecclesiastical millinery" and its aping the ceremonies of the Romish Church. In the House of Commons, Lord John Manners, who has written a book to shew the propriety of restoring the Romish holidays, and Mr. Milnes, are we believe the only two representatives of the Tractarian party. The Laity generally are sound and firm in their attachment to Protestantism; and their increasing opposition to these innovations serves to justify, in one sense, the assertion that Puseyism is losing ground.

But there can be no doubt that it is making fearful progress among the clergy. We hear of no clerical dissenters from its ranks; on the contrary, the increase of its adherents throughout the country is matter of painful notoriety. Almost every paper gives fresh evidence of the spread of this pestilence among the clerical members of the Church. The instances which are continually turning up of the adoption of these sentiments and practices by one Clergyman after another, in various parts of the country, would almost lead to the supposition that the majority of the body was tainted with them. The University of Cambridge appears to have adopted them almost to the same extent as the University of Oxford. The Camden Society of Cambridge is the hot bed of Puseyism. At its last anniversary Meeting, a strenuous effort was made by some members of the University to obtain a disapproval of some of the most objectionable passages which have appeared in the Society's publications. Their evil tendency was faithfully exhibited, but every fresh allusion to them, was received with rapturous applause. In the course of the proceedings, the President spoke of Dr. Pusey in the most flattering terms; and the room rung with acclamations. From the statements given in the papers, it would appear as though Cambridge has gone almost as far as Oxford in the adoption of Puseyism.

The suspension of the Head of the party from preaching in the University of Oxford so far from damping the ardour of his partizans, appears rather to have inspired them with fresh zeal. He has now the credit of being a persecuted man; he is encircled with the glory of a martyr; and the cause of Puseyism is considered to have acquired a fresh claim on the mind, from the very opposition which it has experienced. Thus is the Church of England torn with internal discord, at a time when the elements of change, of religious change, are powerfully at work in the two other divisions of the empire. Had Puseyism been vigorously discountenanced at the very outset by the Hierarchy, as an anti-protestant movement, it might probably have died a natural death in its cradle. But the Puseyites flattered the Bishops with the offer of a profound submission to episcopal authority, and thus lulled too many of them into fatal security. That submission is now reserved only for the Bishops who look favourably on the Sect. It has struck its roots deep, and extended its branches widely, and more than half the clergy are said to be reposing under its shade. We question whether it be any longer in the power of the Episcopal bench, by any effort they can make, to arrest its progress. It appears to gain additional strength from opposition; and even the contempt of society is deemed a badge of honour. It must, we apprehend, run its mischievous course through the establishment, till it perishes in the convulsion which it creates.

This article has extended to such length that we can afford only two quotations, both of which however will serve to shew the spirit of the Tractarian movement, and its inevitable tendency, if not design, to root out Protestantism. At the last anniversary meeting of the Catholic Institute, the President thus alluded to recent transactions at Oxford:

"Look at the controversy now going on in the established church, especially at Oxford. There was one Regius Professor (Dr. Pusey) just condemned and suspended for having advocated the doctrine of the real presence in the Eucharist; whilst another Regius Professor of the same university (Dr. Hampden) had been subjected to an action for damages for his maintenance of an entirely opposite doctrine. Now, if the action were to terminate against Dr. Hampden, he thought that the University of Oxford would be in what the Americans were accustomed to call a "fix"! He had heard at one of the meetings of that Institute a hope expressed that they (the Roman Catholics) might live to see the day when high mass would be celebrated in Westminster Abbey. He knew not how probable such an event might be, but this they knew, that the doctrine of the mass had been preached in the cathedral of the University of Oxford (loud cheering); and it had been authoritatively declared, that if Dr. Pusey's sermon had not been condemned, six or seven colleges of Oxford University were ready to have mass said directly (tremendous cheering and applause). There was indeed a very slender barrier between Puseyism and the Church of Rome; and, oh! what a field was now presented for the Roman Catholics to demolish that slender barrier at once, and to restore this great country to that Catholic union which was so exceedingly desirable. (Vociferous cheering)!"

Some letters from Oxford appeared about two years ago in the L'Univers, the organ of French Catholicism, which were evidently written by one who was no friend to Protestantism. They have now been traced up to Mr. Delgairus, the disciple and friend of Mr. Newman, with whom he frequently resides at Littlemore. The following extract from them will serve to shew the character of Tractarianism more than a hundred sermons and tracts, written under a feeling of reserve, and with a conviction that it is lawful to practise deceit for the benefit of a spiritual patient.

"Mr. Newman, one of our theologians, published, a few days since, the ninetieth number of the Tracts for the Times, in which he designs to demonstrate that the Church of Rome has fallen into no formal error in the Council of Trent, that the invocations of the saints (the Ora pro nobis for example), purgatory, and the supremacy of the Holy See of Rome, are in no way contrary to the Catholic traditions, or even to our authorized formularies; in fine, that the dogma of transubstantiation should be no obstacle to the union of the Churches, as in this Article there is only a verbal difference between them. At the same time he is but little satisfied with our Thirty-nine Articles, although he maintains throughout that the providence of God hindered the Reformers from openly inserting in them the Protestant dogmas to which they were but too much attached. You will perceive, Sir, all the importance of those opinions, and the more so, as they are not the opinions of an isolated theologian. I can assure you, that at the same time that an opposition was raised by the elder members of the University, (as might be expected, seeing that they lived under the system of the eighteenth century,) that very opposition gave me an opportunity of observing that even the most moderate of the Catholic party at Oxford were ready to sustain the author of the tract."

Again this gentleman writes:—

"In the second place, we have a sacred duty to discharge towards the members of our Church. We cannot yet bring ourselves to believe that our dear England is in the same position as the heretics who boast in the names of Luther and Calvin. Of a truth, Sir, is not the Episcopal order still worth something? A sacrilegious king may, indeed, have stolen from the altars of Canterbury the sacred bones of St. Thomas, but, think you he had the power to drive away the great soul, who, from his throne in the skies, ever watches over the See which he has illustrated by his life, and consecrated by his blood? God forbid that the august line of Lanfranc and of Anselm should ever cease. If we have not preserved it, it is no more; for of a truth you will not say that its succession has been kept up by you. There is no Archbishop in partibus of Canterbury or of York, as there is of Cambysopolis or of Siga. But perhaps you may say, that the moment an Archbishop ceases to be in communion with Rome, he also ceases to exist. But permit me here to become a little scholastic, and to borrow the terms with which the schools supply me, in order to give more precision to my ideas. . . .

"There are at this moment in the Anglican Church a crowd of persons who balance between Protestantism and Catholicism, and who, nevertheless, would reject with horror the very idea of a union with Rome. The Protestant prejudices, which, for three hundred years, have infected our Church, are unhappily too deeply rooted there to be extirpated without a great deal of address. We must, then, offer in sacrifice to God this ardent desire which devours us of seeing once more the perfect unity of the Church of Christ. We must still bear the terrible void which the isolation of our Church creates in our hearts, and remain still till it pleases God to convert the hearts of our Anglican confreres, especially of our holy fathers, the bishops. We are destined, I am persuaded, to bring back many wandering sheep to the knowledge of the truth. In fact, the progress of Catholic opinions in England, for the last seven years, is so inconceivable, that no hope should appear extravagant. Let us, then, remain quiet for some years, till, by God's blessing, the ears of Englishmen are become accustomed to hear the name of Rome pronounced with reverence. At the end of this term you will soon see the fruits of our patience."

STEAM VIA BOMBAY.—In the Monthly Times of the 6th of July, there is a brief notice of a negotiation between the Peninsular Company and the Court of Directors, which seems to confirm the suspicions of our correspondent S. It runs thus:

COMMUNICATION WITH INDIA.—The returns moved for in Parliament under this head have been produced, and we gather the following result therefrom:—Over a period of four years the communication between Suez and Bombay has cost the East India Company £281, 177, or at the rate per annum of . . . . . . . . £70,000

|---|---|
| Annual grant from the Crown . . . . | 50,000 |
| £302,094 capital embarked—wear and tear calculated at 15 per cent. . . . . . | 45,000 |
| Insurance, 6 per cent. . . . . . . . | 18,000 |
| Egyptian expenses . . . . . . . . | 10,000 |
| Interest on capital, at 4 per cent. . . . | 12,000 |
| Annual cost . . . . . . . . . | £205,000 |

The Peninsular and Oriental Company have offered to contract for a bi-monthly communication between Suez and Bombay for an annual sum of £150,000. It may be said the East India Company do not insure. Admitted; but then a larger per centage should be calculated for wear and tear.

Upon this we have to remark, that the insertion of the annual grant from the Crown, of £50,000, as a part of the expenses of Steam navigation to Bombay, appears altogether unaccountable. In what can it have been expended? It does not refer to the communication between England and Alexandria, for the memorandum expressly mentions the communication between Suez and Bombay, and no other. The first item of £70,000, gives all the expense incurred in the pay and allowances of officers and crews, fuel, stores, provisions, &c. deducting the amount of passage money received. The third item of £45,000 covers the wear and tear of the vessels, calculated at 15 per cent. per annum. The entry can be assigned to no imaginable outlay, and must have been introduced either by inadvertence, or with the view of swelling the apparent charge, and assisting the negotiation then pending. The actual cost to the East India Company must therefore be taken at 155,000£—of which Parliament pays one third—and the Peninsular Company appears to have made an offer of contracting for a bi-monthly communication between Suez and Bombay, at 150,000£ a year.

Although the negotiation refers only to the line of navigation between Egypt and Bombay, there can be little doubt that it is intended to embrace the other Presidencies, likewise, and that it will eventually result in an arrangement by which the Peninsular Company's steamers shall start from Calcutta, and, during eight months of the year, call at Bombay on their way to Suez. It is to this project that our correspondent, S. has endeavoured to rouse public attention, with the hope of preventing its consummation, by the united expression of public opinion at this Presidency, and at Madras and Ceylon. Ardently as we desire to see the steamers which the Peninsular Company have devoted to the communication between Calcutta and Suez, employed exclusively in that line, we can scarcely flatter ourselves that the feeble voice of the community will be sufficient to defeat a project in which the interests of the Steam Company and of the Government of India, are so closely involved. It must be for the interest of that Company to secure a large bonus from Government, as well as all the passengers to and from Bombay; and they will easily persuade themselves that the inconvenience to the Calcutta, Madras and Ceylon passengers of being detained four or five days longer on board, will be but trifling, and scarcely worthy to be compared with the advantage of obtaining a sight of Bombay on their way to Suez. Although Government will gain little actual relief from expense, yet it will doubtless be considered no small advantage to be exempted from the necessity of building new steamers for this line, when those now employed become unserviceable; to have the present vessels disengaged for the service of the state, and to enjoy an opportunity of sending and receiving despatches every fortnight. Those despatches will of course be sent, as at present, by express, and will constitute no new charge on the public exchequer. The public will however be subjected to the same charge for postage across the country which is now incurred, and which is so severely felt; but this inconvenience will be little heeded by those who do not suffer from it. It is quite possible that Government may calculate that the bulk of letters and newspapers will be brought from Suez by way of Bombay by the Steamer, quite as quickly as they now come across the country, and of course at a more reasonable charge; and that though the deviation of the Steamer to that port will deprive Calcutta of the benefit of receiving communications direct from Suez as speedily by steam as they are now obtained by express, yet on the whole, the community will be in a better position than it has been in for the last four years. Thus, by magnifying the advantage to the state, and extenuating the inconvenience to the public, Government may persuade itself of the propriety of this new arrangement. On this view of the interests of the two more powerful parties to this negotiation, we are inclined to think that it will be completed at no distant time, and that the inconvenience it will inflict on the third, or weaker party, will create little concern or sympathy. But it is quite possible that some fresh improvement in Steam navigation may turn up before the plan is matured, and produce another revolution, and demolish all our present calculations.

The Exports of Java and Madura.—We have been favored by a friend with an official statement of the exports from the Island of Java from 1825 to 1841. Although the trade between that island and Calcutta makes no figure in our annual return of exports and imports, the subject will not be altogether unimportant to those engaged in mercantile pursuits. It may even afford some interesting reflections to the general reader, who remembers how fondly the English nation cherished the idea of reckoning this fertile island among its colonial possessions, and how bitter was the disappointment which Lord Castlereagh's surrender of it, at the Congress of Vienna, occasioned. They will now have an opportunity of estimating the value of this possession, which was restored to the Dutch, under the impression that the Prince of Orange would espouse the Princess Charlotte, and in the hope of cementing the alliance between the two countries.

We pass over minor articles of export, to examine the progressive increase of the great staple productions of the island, which supply its export trade. And first, with regard to the article in which it has been supposed to threaten the interests of the Bengal Presidency with a formidable competition; we allude to Indigo. In the cultivation and export of this article, there has been a gradual and steady progression during the last seventeen years, as the following statement will shew.

| | Mds. | | Mds. |
| 1825 ... | 76 | 1834 ... | 3810 |

The value of the Indigo exported in the last year is put down in round figures at sixty lakhs of Java Rupees, or at the rate of about 250 Java Rs. the maund. If however this be the average price below which it cannot be manufactured, Bengal has little to dread from any increase of produce in Java; for the augmentation of the supply, will necessarily lower the price; and eventually give the command of the market to those who can raise the article at the least cost; and our prime cost in India,—Agents' charges of course excluded—is within a Hundred Rupees a maund.

The increase in the exportation of Coffee has been almost equally remarkable. The export in

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1825 was, pks. | 277,622 | 1834 ... | 486,018 |

| 1832 ... ... | 314,174 | 1841 ... | 961,467 |
| 1833 ... ... | 360,166 | | |

The value of the exports in this last year are estimated at 288 lakhs of Java Rupees, or about two millions and a half sterling. Hogendorf, a warm reformer, and a bitter opponent of the Government of his day, writing in 1800, said that under a more liberal system of administration, he had no doubt Java could raise without difficulty fifty millions of pounds of Coffee a year. In the year 1841, in addition to the coffee consumed on the island, she exported One Hundred and thirty millions of pounds.

The exportation of Rice is not noted in any year before 1837; in that and the subsequent five years, the export is put down at about 30 lakhs of Java Rupees annually.

The value of the exports of Mace, Nutmegs and Cloves, in the year 1825, is stated at 11,83,000 Java Rupees; in the year 1841 at 21,83,000.

The gradual and uninterrupted increase in the export of Sugar shews the amazing capabilities of this fertile island. The exportation in

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1825 was pks. | 16,357 | 1834 | 372,885 |
| 1826 ... .... | 19,795 | 1835 | 432,624 |
| 1827 ... ... | 32,220 | 1836 | 539,514 |
| 1828 ... ... | 25,870 | 1837 | 676,085 |
| 1829 ... ... | 73,780 | 1838 | 734,980 |
| 1830 ... ... | 108,640 | 1839 | 842,017 |
| 1831 ... ... | 120,298 | 1840 | 10,13,877 |
| 1832 ... ... | 245,872 | 1841 | 10,31,094 |
| 1833 ... ... | 210,948 | | |

In seventeen years it has risen from about 30,000 maunds to 18,45,000, that is, more than six thousand per cent. And the value of the sugar thus exported is estimated at One Hundred and twenty-three lakhs of Rupees.

In the article of Banca Tin, we also find an increase of more than 500 per cent. in the exports; though the price appears of late years to have fallen considerably. In 1825 the quantity exported was, 9118 pekuls, valued at 519,500 Java Rupees; in 1841, the exports were 48,300 pekuls, and the value was estimated at a little less than 23 lakhs of Rupees.

The exportation of that whimsical luxury of the flowery nation, Bird's nests, presents almost as great a fluctuation in quantity as in price. Thus in the year 1833, the export was 394 pekuls, valued at about 570,000 Java Rupees. In 1841, the export did not exceed 264 pekuls, but the official value is reckoned at more than Ten lakhs of Rupees, or Two thousand Rupees the maund.

But in an article of real necessity, Tea, we find the export so small as entirely to baffle all our expectations. We were given to understand that the cultivation of this plant had been so largely extended, under the direction of scientific botanists, as to give it weight in the export market, and to hold out a hope that Java would be the first country to break up the monopoly of the Celestial Empire. We were therefore not a little surprised to find that the export in 1841, the most flourishing year in the table, did not exceed 1408 pekuls, or 191,000 lbs. and that the whole value of the tea thus sent to Europe, did not exceed 176,000 Rupees. The great bulk of the tea raised must therefore have been consumed in the island itself. If however it should be found that tea is as well adapted for cultivation as Sugar, in the diversified soil and climate of this beautiful island, there can be no reason why the export of it should not in time attain something of the same importance, if the cultivation be pursued with the same assiduity.

From these data, it will easily be perceived that the exports from this island have increased during the seventeen years under review in no common ratio. Turning to Sir Stamford Raffles's standard work on the Island, we find that the exports amounted in 1771 to 62 lakhs of Java Rupees. In the next twenty years the increase did not exceed twenty-three per cent., the exports in 1791, the year preceding that in which Holland was swept into the vortex of the French revolution, and the prosperity of the island was suspended, being only 75 lakhs of Rupees. In 1815 the island was restored to the Dutch. Of the ten subsequent years we have no record, but we find the exports in 1825 officially stated at 142 lakhs of Rupees. In the next seventeen years the progress of improvement has been very remarkable, the exports in 1841, having been not less than 607 lakhs; an increase to the extent of four hundred and twenty-five per cent. We cannot better describe the astonishing resources of the island than by comparing its exports with those of the Bengal Presidency. With a population not exceeding four millions, its exports in the year before the last were between five and six millions sterling; while the exports of the Presidency of Bengal, with a population of seventy millions did not exceed eight millions sterling.

RIVER STEAMERS.—We are happy to find that the Assam Steamer has again been despatched with freight to Allahabad. The reason assigned for the measure is the inadequacy of the present establishment of Government Steamers to supply the growing demand for freight. If we mistake not, this is, the second trip of the vessel, and we may therefore reasonably conclude that the first expedition was sufficiently remunerative to encourage a repetition of it. In addition to the Assam, the vessel which came out for the extinct Floating Bridge Association is in course of preparation for the same route. We hail this enterprising spirit with great delight. The present Government vessels are not equal to the public exigencies; and the charge for freight is higher than the trade can well afford. There can be no reason why steamers should not be employed in a tenfold degree in the conveyance of merchandize between the great marts in the Western Provinces, and the Port of the Gangetic valley. There can be no reason why they should not be employed as largely on the Ganges, as on the Mississipi. A little wholesome competition would enforce economical contrivances, and serve to bring down the charge for freight to such a level as to render the transmission of goods on our rivers by steam, the rule and not the exception.

This heavy charge for freight is occasioned in a great measure by the heavy cost of fuel. Latterly, the price of coal had been raised from 12 to 15 per cent. beyond the charge of former years; but the new competitors who have entered on this field of labour, have so greatly augmented the supply, as to render it impossible to maintain those prices; and they are giving way under the influence of competition. In addition to the mines worked by Messrs. Carr, Tagore and Co., and by the London Joint Stock Company, Mr. Erskine has made a very successful effort in a new locality, and two enterprising natives have, we hear, been working another mine, and have already a large supply to bring into the market. Mr. Taylor, as we stated some time back, has expended a considerable capital in the district of Palamow, and though he has met with many discouragements, he will be able this year to deliver the article at the mouth of the Soane at a cheaper rate than that for which it can be transported thither from Calcutta. These circumstances are favourable to a reduction of the expense which has hitherto been incurred in fuel, and which has acted as a heavy clog on the enterprize. The period of the contract for the supply, if we remember right, will close in another month, and we trust the new Superintendent of Marine will embrace the opportunity of opening the contract to public competition. There can be no reason why this healthy mode of operation, which is found so useful in other departments as to be considered indispensible, should be excluded from the Steam department. We hope more particularly that as the hands of Government will shortly be untied, by the extinction of the present agreement, there will be every disposition manifested to encourage the working of mines in the Western Provinces, and to bring their mineral wealth into use in river navigation.

THE KISHNAGHUR RELIEF FUND.—We have been favoured with a report of the distribution of the Kishnaghur Relief Fund, established to assist the destitute Native Christians in that district, from Mr. Brietzcke, the Secretary, which commenced its operations in January 1842. It originated in a donation of 500 Rupees entrusted to the late Mr. Boyes, on whose death it came into possession of Mrs. Boyes, who resolved to devote it to the relief of sick and infirm Native Christians. Since January 1842, a farther subscription of 732 Rs. has been raised for this object through the exertions of the Secretary, and transmitted to the Missionaries in the Kishnaghur district. The relief which it has afforded will be best understood from the following extracts from their letters.

The Reverend Mr. Alexander, of Solo, writes—" I believe the Relief Fund to have been the means of feeding "the hungry, clothing the naked, and comforting the "destitute, who must for want of means have been sent "empty away, had I not received the aid so kindly afforded by Christain charity. Several poor destitute creatures have been with me wanting assistance. But I "really have not the means of assisting them. I beg "you to observe that to furnish money to people without "due regard to their circumstances would be productive "of the worst results. But I have, to the best of my "power, given relief to the poorest of the poor, and I "earnestly solicit a continuance of the endeavours of your "Committee for the relief of the same objects of pity."

The Reverend Mr. Lipp, of Ruttunpore, pleads very urgently for the continuance of the Relief Fund, and observes regarding its advantages—" It was the only source "whereby I was enabled to assist those of the poor Christians who are really deserving support as far as my "knowledge went, and I have taken care not to give any "thing to others. But if your fund should now be discontinued, the really poor and deserving, for instance, "widows, and orphans, and sick, must be left without "assistance, as it is impossible for me to assist them. I "have tried last month to support them from my own "resources, but shall not be able to continue: at the "same time I cannot see them starve, which they will do "if not assisted, or else go back and become Mussulmans, "in order to be supported by them. Several have done "so already."

The following are the observations of the Reverend Mr. Krauss, of Kapasdanga—" If we keep in mind that almost "all our Christians in the Kishnaghur District are of low "caste, and the poorest class, and therefore a set of people living from hand to mouth, we may understand a "little the sudden changes which take place among them. "As long as one can do his ticca-work, there is no need of "supplying him with a single pie, as he can earn his daily "bread by his handy-work: but as soon as such a ticca-workman is taken ill, he must either starve and die, or "be supported by a Relief Fund, or by the Missionary "himself, if this were possible in so many cases. There "are not seldom half villages laid up by this or another "disease; and in this case what shall we do? To leave "them to their fate while the sick heathen is cared for by "his heathen brethren would be against nature itself. "Besides these sick and distressed people, there are in "my District about 30 or 40 widows, 26 of whom are "unable to work, and are without relation or friend who "would care for them; these receive one rupee every "month for their support."

The Reverend Mr. Kruckeberg, of Chupruh, enters fully into the subject of the advantages resulting from the Relief Fund, and uses very cogent arguments to shew that it should by all means be continued. Amongst other things he observes—" The Native Christians need our aid, not "only with regard to their spiritual well-being, but "also with regard to their temporal position. This will "be admitted when we consider their changed relation to "men and things around them."

* * * * * * * * * * * * And again, Mr. Kruckeberg says—" There are many independent of those in the Society's service, who would starve if not regularly supported by the Missionary in the place, being rendered "helpless on account of their change in religion, by which "they are lost to every spark of sympathizing feeling on "the part of their former connexions."

The Reverend Mr. Blumhardt, of Kishnaghur, proceeds to observe—" It will hardly I think be necessary to mention that the general condition of the people in our congregations at Kishnaghur is such, as will not allow of "the possibility of providing for their own poor, neither "indeed can it be expected that this Christain grace should "so soon have found its way to their hearts, so as to lead "them to consider the support of their own poor a work "of duty and praise. It will also be unnecessary to prove, "that there are many among our people who are really "objects of charity, who either through sickness or old "age, or other calamities, have not the means, neither "the ability to provide for the necessaries of life. In my "own division of the District, which in point of number "is the smallest of all, I have 12 people on the list who "receive regular support from me, limited as my means "are; but I cannot withhold it from them as I know them "to be really in distress. But there are many other "claims besides this: a Christian Minister in a heathen "country, who has native congregations under his care, "feels that besides the duties of imparting spiritual instruction, he has also the obligation laid upon him to "care for the bodily sustenance of those of his people, "who are really poor. If he neglects this his latter duty, "he exposes his flock to dispersion among the enemy, and "makes his sheep seek pasture on the barren ground of "heathen deserts, which by acts of benevolence no less "than by the excellence of our religion is to be converted "into a Garden of the Lord."

These extracts afford a satisfactory proof that the relief the fund has afforded, has been substantial, and that the contribution of Christian friends has been distributed with a wise discrimination, and limited to those who were really unable to support themselves. So strong is the love of inaction, and the spirit of dependence in this country, that beneficence must always be accompanied with great wisdom and discretion, lest it should serve to encourage indolence, and thus become the source of mischief. Nothing can be more injudicious than to grant eleemosynary support to a man simply on the ground of his poverty; for poverty is frequently a vice, as well as a misfortune; and the aid that is indiscreetly administered, may be found rather to encourage the vice, than to relieve the calamity. The total want of all independence of character and exertion, is the great bane of India, and the object of all missionaries should be to correct this natural propensity in their converts, and to foster a spirit of manly independence. At the same time, a Native who embraces Christianity is so entirely cut off from the sympathies to which he looked for succour, that he requires something beyond mere verbal encouragement, in his struggles through life, from those whose communion he has joined. When totally disabled from work, or when reduced to a state of destitution by the death of a husband or a father, the Native Christian has a claim on the kind assistance of his fellow Christians, which cannot be withheld without a violation of the principles of the Gospel. In the perfect confidence that the future donations of the benevolent will be distributed with the same caution and discrimination by the Missionaries, as the fund already entrusted to them, we trust Mr. Brietzcke's appeal will not fail to produce a happy result.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 24.

— The Madras Athenæum states, that Mr. Stocqueler will not return to this country, and that during the brief period of his stay at Madras, he engaged himself as the monthly correspondent of that paper. That paper goes on to say, "A more suitable person could not be found, nor one better qualified to meet the varied tastes of the readers of Indian newspapers."

— Col. Butterworth, who has been appointed to supersede Mr. Blundell in the Strait's Government, embarked at Madras on the 11th Instant, on the Charles Forbes, under a salute of eleven guns. The Singapore papers last received, allude to the second supersession of Mr. Blundell, in terms of just indignation. It is evident that when he proceeded on public duty from Penang to Singapore, he had not the least idea of the blow that was likely to fall upon him. The report that has been somewhat widely disseminated, therefore, that he has voluntarily resigned the Straits' Government, is totally without foundation.

— Virtue is sometimes as contagious as vice. The worthy Sheriff of Calcutta, Mr. Adam Frere Smith, having resolved to become the founder of a Library in the Jail, usually denominated No. 1, Chowringhee, the Sheriff of Madras, Capt. Biden, has determined not to be behind his brother of Calcutta, and has resolved, likewise, to found a library in the jail of Fort St. George.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 25.

— The Star of this morning has an Editorial article on the subject of Railways in India, occasioned by a proposal which has been published in the Monthly Times. That a rail road in India of any length and cost, cannot be completed by a joint Stock Company, is self-evident. There are no funds here adequate for the purpose, and capitalists at home have no confidence in Ditch management. It must be done by the Government, the great Landlord of India; and there can be little doubt, that such a road, connecting the Western provinces with the port of the Ganges; —there is but one port, and will probably not be another in this century—would be of the highest service, and afford a good return. But we notice this article more particularly on account of the following sentence: "As it is, we have but one made road in Bengal, and that wants bridges." —We think our contemporary will find on examination, that very large sums are now in course of expenditure on the bridges of this road.

— The Bombay Times of the 16th August quotes letters from Hydrabad of the 27th July, which state that Shere Mahomed was collecting a force among the Murees and Boogties. It was rumoured that the Affghans from Dadur,—that is we suppose the marauders of the Bolan,—were to join him, and that his negotiations had been extended to Mooltan. That journal also remarks that rumours were rife in England that the conquest was not to be retained; but it is to be hoped that we shall be spared the exhibition of so great an act of insanity.

— The Delhi Gazette gives an occasional item of news from Cabul, through the news writers of the Lahore Durbar stationed there, which is not without interest. From this source, we now learn that Dost Mahomed had offered a reward of 2000 Rupees, besides a Jaygeer, to any one who would bring in Ameenoolla; and that nearly all the buildings destroyed by the English had been rebuilt.

— The Bengal Spectator states, that Mr. Lyall, the Advocate General, has been appointed Law Lecturer at the College of Fort William; and that the students of the Hindoo College will be allowed to attend his lectures. This is the first instance in which an Advocate General has had leisure for any exertions out of Court, and Government has acted discreetly in turning it to the best account. The Lectures here spoken of will, we suppose, refer to the Laws of England, and not to the legal institutions of British India. After this was written, we met with the correspondence which led to this appointment, and have copied it from the Star.

— There has been an unusual degree of sickness in the city of Delhi, for some time past, which seems to have affected all classes. The Delhi Gazette says, on the 16th, that it is on the increase. The king has been advised by his spiritual mentor to order a buffaloe to be slain, and the flesh to be subsequently exposed with vessels full of wine, sherbet and milk, on each of the towers at the three gates of the palace, with a view to stay the progress of the disease. The Editor tells us, that the same superstitious ceremony was observed at each of the gates of the city, by permission of the Magistrate. Impossible!

SATURDAY, AUGUST 26.

— His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has appointed Major Havelock, of H. M. 13th Light Infantry, Persian Interpreter. He held the same appointment in Affghanistan under Sir Willoughby Cotton and General Elphinstone; and subsequently bore an active share in the labours of the Illustrious Garrison of Jellalabad. The appointment is spoken well of in the Star and Hurkaru, and will we believe meet with general approbation.

— A correspondent of the Star, in the number of this morning, informs us that Government has deputed Col. Lloyd to investigate the causes which have led to the frequent insurrections, which have of late broken out in Assam. The writer who is evidently no friend of the public Authorities in the country, traces the dissatisfaction to the repeated appropriations of fresh territory which have been made of late years. We were rather surprised to find him censure the occupation of Poorunder Sing's territory. The resignation of this fine country to a man so totally unfit to manage it, was a mistake; and the re-occupation of it was considered by all men at the time as just, politic and benevolent. We must however have the other side of the question, before a fair and safe opinion can be formed on the subject.

— We have papers from Singapore to the 3d of August, on which date the steamer with the treaty, ratified by the vermilion pencil, had not arrived from China. We regret to learn that H. M. S. Samarang, which had been laudably employed in destroying various nests of Pirates in Borneo, had struck on a shoal in the river, at high water mark, and as the tide receded, fell over on her side and filled. The only other item of news from the settlement is the increasing ravages of the tigers. It appears that Government formerly gave a reward of a Hundred dollars as head money for every tiger brought in. This sum was afterwards reduced to 50; and the inducement to destroy them ceased. The tigers began accordingly to increase and multiply, and they have now extended their ravages to such a degree, as to affect the value of property, in the interior. A patch of land which fetched 300 dollars some time back, cannot obtain a purchaser at 25 dollars, owing to the dread of these animals. Our Government in Bengal usually gave 10 Rs. a head, or rather a tail, for every tiger, and this reward was found strong enough to clear some of the districts of them.

— A correspondent of the Englishman states, that the Indigo season has been so favourable in Tirhoot, that the district is likely to yield the enormous quantity of 40,000 maunds, which is, we believe a greater quantity than it has ever manufactured. If the same abundance marks other districts, the year will probably be one of the most productive on record.

MONDAY, AUGUST 28.

— The Agra Ukhbar states that the Cholera has been raging at that station with fearful violence, and that several of the neighbouring stations have been visited with this malady. It has created such alarm among the natives that the cessation of rain, which, at this season of the year, is a source of deep anxiety, has scarcely been noticed.

— Both the Hurkaru and the Star have this morning published the decision of the Privy Council in the appeal case in which Aga Kurbolae Mahomed and others were appellants, and the Queen, on the prosecution of Mahomed Koolee Mirza, was respondent. The Council has reversed the decree passed by Sir John Grant and Sir Henry Seton, and taken the same view of the case which Sir Edward Ryan, and Sir Lawrence Peel, then Advocate General, took.

— At the close of last month a volcano broke out on one of the groups of islets lying on the S. E. shore of the Island of Cheduba, on the coast of Aracan. It has led to the formation of an entirely new island. We have copied a few remarks on the subject from the Star.

— The Military Staff of Calcutta has resolved to give an entertainment to Lord Ellenborough on the 8th of next month. The matter was settled at a meeting held in Calcutta on Saturday morning, when we are told there was a stormy debate whether the Civil portion of society should be invited to join in the compliment; 18 are said to have voted for, and 10 against their admission; but the proposal fell to the ground on the announcement that Lord Ellenborough had been already informed that the dinner was to be given exclusively by the Military, who will thus have all the credit to themselves.

The Delhi Gazette of the 19th August states, on the authority of advices from Scinde, that Kohun Dil Khan, one of the Candahar Sirdars, who fled to Persia on the approach of our army, and has returned to it on our retirement, had come down to the Pesheen valley to watch the progress of events in Scinde. It is said that the fugitive Ameer of Scinde, Shere Mahomed, has joined him, which is some indication that he himself has not been joined in any satisfactory manner by the Beloochee tribes.

— The Hurkaru this morning affirms that the charge of unheard-of cruelty brought by a Native returning to India against the Captain of a Liverpool ship, who put him in a tub and exposed him to the elements, for two months, has entirely broken down. The case has been carefully investigated by the Chief Magistrate and Mr. Montriou, and they found that the man had been after all kindly treated by the Captain, that he was ill the whole voyage, and very peevish.

— The Hurkaru, also chronicles a rumour that the Board of Customs is to be abolished and the management and responsibility of the department committed to a Commissioner or Superintendent. The Board will in this case have no other duties to attend to but those of the Salt, and the Opium departments.

— Mr. Montriou has revived the laudable custom of whipping criminals. The culprit well deserves his score of stripes. He is a notorious offender, is better acquainted with the House of correction than with any other House in Calcutta has never pursued an honest calling, and knows no profession but roguery. He is a brahmun, one of the twice born; he belongs to the class, which a friend of ours facetiously described as furnishing the oldest gentlemen in the world.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 29.

— From an extract given among our selections from the Madras Spectator, we find that the Rev. Mr. Wolff, who amused the society of India ten years ago by his eccentricities, discredits the fact of Col. Stoddart's and Captain Conolly's murder, and offers to proceed in company with any officer, or, if necessary, alone, to Bokhara, to procure their liberation, if his expenses are found him. He would not be employed on a more appropriate or benevolent errand; and we hope the home Government and the Court of Directors will not fail to encourage him by the promise of ample support.

— The Hindoostan steamer arrived at Madras at midnight, on the 15th instant, having left the Sand Heads on Saturday, the 12th, at 5 P. M. at the very height of the monsoon, when vessels from Bombay are constrained to run down to the south. The Hindoostan was to take fifteen passengers on board at Madras, which she intended to leave at sunset of the 16th.

— A Meeting of the Civilians of all classes will take place this afternoon at five P. M. to consider of some mark of appropriate attention to the Governor General. The month of September seems to be destined for gaiety and entertainments, as our readers will find by turning to a short notice from the Hurkaru, which we have given elsewhere.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 30.

— We deeply regret to hear of the death by fever, after a few days illness, of the Rev. Rodolph de Rodt, one of the Missionaries of the London Society, and one of the most zealous and indefatigable labourers in the field of missionary labour. We trust the Christian Advocate, of Saturday next, will furnish us with full particulars of his life, and of his last moments.

— At the meeting of Civil Gentlemen, yesterday afternoon, Mr. T. Bracken was voted into the chair, and it was resolved. "That a Ball and Supper be given to Lord Ellenborough."

— A correspondent of the Englishman, in the paper of this morning, states that Mr. James George, of the Parental Academy, has added 300 volumes to the Jail Library.

— The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette mentions that a report had been current since the arrival of the last Mail, that the Ameers of Scinde would in all probability be restored. But this is evidently a mere idle rumour. To do so would be contrary to all precedent. The terminus of our empire may be extended, but cannot be contracted; that which has once been incorporated with it territorially, has never been dissevered. We never intended to occupy Affghanistan, and the abandonment of it is no exception to the rule.

— The papers announce the sudden demise of Capt. Campbell, of H. M. 9th, at Simla of cholera. He had long been labouring under attacks of dysentery contracted in the Affghan campaign, and intended to proceed to Europe in the approaching winter on sick leave. Disease has made fearful havoc in the chief stations of the West, of late. A fortnight ago the deaths by cholera in Agra were estimated at 100 or 150 daily. By the 22d, the malady had abated, but the mortality was still great; not fewer than fifty a day. In addition to this calamity there is a prospect of want of rain. Unless seasonable showers were obtained in a fortnight, it was supposed the crop would perish.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

FREE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH OF SCOTLAND IN CALCUTTA.

On Thursday evening the 24th instant, a meeting was held at the Mechanics' Institute Room (taken for the occasion,) of those Members of the Scottish Church Community and others, who have already declared themselves adherents of the "Free Church of Scotland." The object of the meeting was not to give any exposition of the principles involved in the late separation from the establishment of that country—but simply to consolidate and organize those, whose minds had already been informed and decided on this important subject, and to unite in the adoption of such measures, as might seem necessary and right for their confirmation and continuance, as a Free Church of the Lord Jesus Christ. A number of other Christian friends, not professing adherence, were also present.

The Rev. Dr. Duff, as Senior Member of the Provisional Committee, was invited to take the Chair. Prayer was offered up by the Rev. D. Ewart, and after a brief explanation of the objects of the meeting by the chairman, the following Resolutions were unanimously agreed to, as the basis of future operations, by the blessing of God.

I. That all those gentlemen present, who may now subscribe themselves, "Adherents of the Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland," do form themselves into a Committee, under the name of "The General Provisional Committee of the adherents of the Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland, in Calcutta," with power to add to their number, from the future adherents to the same.

II. That this General Committee, now formed do embrace this present and earliest opportunity of expressing their entire and heartfelt concurrence in the measures which were temporarily adopted, for the ministration of the ordinances of God amongst them, by the former Provisional Committee—and their purpose, until more definite arrangements can be made, and a Church organized, of still committing to them, in their capacity of ordained Ministers and Elders of the Free Church of Scotland, to minister to their spiritual wants, and to suggest what may be further for their spiritual edification.

III. That there be now appointed, by this General Committee of Adherents, a Special Sub-Committee for executive purposes, and which shall report from time to time, to the General Committee—to consist of the members of the former Provisional Committee, and others from the body of adherents to be now named, with Secretaries and a Treasurer—as follows:—

The Rev. Dr. Duff, W. S. Mackay, D. Ewart, J. Macdonald, T. Smith:—Simon Nicolson, Esq., Jas. Calder Stewart, Esq., A. B. Mackintosh, R. J. Rose, Esq., D. Macallum, Esq , Wm. Nichol, Esq., Malcolm Macleod, Esq.—The Rev. J. Macdonald, and J. C. Stewart, Esq., to be Joint-Secretaries, and Mr. Stewart, Esq: to be also treasurer.

IV. That, in our present circumstances, it is evidently necessary, that, as a congregation of adherents, however small in number, we be provided with a suitable and permanent place of worship, for our own special use; and that, therefore, the Provisional Sub-Committee be authorized and empowered to take such preparatory steps, as may to them seem best, for the attainment of this end, and to report thereon, at a future meeting of the General Committee.

V. That, as it is desirable that some public exposition of the principles and grounds of separation from the established Church of Scotland, and of adherence to the Free Church of Scotland, should be given, the Senior Missionary, the Revd. Dr. Duff, be requested to undertake this important duty, at such time and place as may be found most convenient.

After Dr. Duff had given his assent to this request, and added some remarks on the vital importance of the subject, the meeting was closed with prayer, by the Rev. T. Smith.

The amount of subscriptions announced, for the erection of a new place of worship, (inclusive of Rs. 1,000 from a "Non-Intrusionist," and of Rs. 1,000 from J. A. F. Hawkins, Esq.), was Rupees 4,550.—Hurkaru, August 26.

BAPTISM OF TWO NATIVES.

To the Editor of the Bengal Hurkaru.

Dear Sir,—Yesterday I was present at the Union Chapel in Dhurrumtollah, and had great pleasure in witnessing the Baptism, by the Rev. T. Boaz, of two Hindoo youths, belonging to the Christian Institution at Bhowaneepore; on enquiring as to their condition in life, I was informed by a very competent person, that the elder of the two lads, was a kooleen, brahmin of high caste, his name Kalley Prosuno Muckerjee, age about 18 years; on the mother's side, he is one of the holdars, who are the hereditary proprietors of the temple at Kallee Ghaut, of Kallee Takooraney, and heir to his maternal uncle's property, also a high priest of Kalee Takooraney, and his three days, pala, (or turn of worship) per month, in that temple, and which three days, yield about seven hundred rupees. The lad is also a Zemindar, and heir to his uncle, mother, or grandfather, and father-in-law's properties, being the male representative of all these families. He was educated at the Christian Institution under the Revd. J. Campbell for six years, and a boy of the first or monitorial class. The other lad was an orphan brought up and educated at the same institution. This information, I know, will gladden every true Christian, who loves his Saviour in sincerity, and prays for the spread of his Kingdom. This is my reason for sending it to you. I am,

Dear Sir, yours faithfully,

ESPERANCE EN DIEU.

GAIETIES OF SEPTEMBER.

Gaiety and hospitality seem the order of the day, both within and without the Ditch. On the 1st proximo, we have the Fancy Ball to Lady Gough, which might have been better managed in details, but to which, we hope, all honour will nevertheless be done. Then the Governor-General gives a Ball to the Station of Barrackpore on the 6th, for which cards have been also sent to some of our citizens. On the 8th, the Ball to the Governor-General given by the Staff of Calcutta comes off. On the 7th H. M. 10th give a Ball, at the Town Hall, to the Society of Calcutta, in honour of the Regiment receiving new colours from the hand of Lady Gough.

There are rumours of Dinners and Balls at Dum-Dum and Barrackpore, to Sir Hugh and Lady Gough, before their departure for the Upper Provinces;* and the Governor-General, it is whispered, purposes to give a Ball at the Government House, on or about the 16th, and last, though not least, we hear the Bengal Club is also "on hospitable thoughts intent," and talks of an early dinner to Lord Ellenborough, as President of the Club.

Should there be any survivors after this formidable series of constitutional dangers, in this merry month of September, we shall be truly obliged by a true and particular account of all the sayings and doings of the campaign. We ourselves are not equal to any great achievements in that line—we affect early hours, and must trust to our sprightlier friends—at all events, for the after supper addresses.—Hurk. Aug. 29.

* We have since heard, that these have been declined on account of his Excellency's speedy departure for the Upper Provinces.

KABUL.

Our latest news regarding the proceedings in Affghanistan, represent Dost Mahomed as having opened a correspondence with the British Government, a step to which he has probably been led by the difficulties he has encountered. He has commenced at all events by professing his attachment to us, expressing his gratitude for all we have done for him, looking upon us as superiors and assuring us he shall always be happy to meet our wishes. Moss Khan, the Agent of the Dost at Lahore, has been dismissed by Maharajah Shere Singh with a present of Elephants, &c., in return for the horses brought from Kabul. The chiefs of the Kohistan continue refractory, and now the Eastern Ghilzies, decline acknowledging the Dost. The party of the good Nawab (Zeman Khan) is daily increasing, and he has demanded the release of the scoundrel Ameenoollah Khan, but the Dost has hitherto refused to liberate him. Khan Shereen Khan was invited to an interview by the Dost, under the most solemn assurances of safety, but he had no sooner presented himself than Dost Mahomed seized and imprisoned him on the slight pretext of his having assisted Mohun Lall in the release of the British prisoners. The price of grain has increased greatly in Kabul in consequence of all these disturbances. Mahomed Ukbar has sent emissaries into the Peshawur territory to enlist as many Hindoostanees, Eusofzyes and others, as Infantry, as they can, in pursuance of his father's and his own plans of forming efficient Battalions of foot. Their cavalry is being reduced greatly as they have found by our experience that in a hilly country like Kabul, they are useless. An order has however been sent from Lahore, to prohibit the enlistment of men without the sanction of the Maharajah previously obtained. It is stated on pretty good authority that emissaries have also been sent by Dost Mahomed into our territories to report to him on the state of our position, so that he may be au fait of any events bearing on himself or his prospects."—Calcutta Star, August 28.

PROFESSORSHIP OF LAW.

TO THE DEPUTY GOVERNOR OF BENGAL.

SIR,—I believe it has been for some time past the anxious wish of the Government and of the Council of education that a professional chair should be established at the Hindoo College, for the purpose of instituting a regular course of Lectures on the Law in the various forms in which it is administered in this country.

I understood however that some obstacles had arisen to the immediate adoption of any particular plan, and resolved after some consideration to volunteer such services as it might be in my power to render in furtherance of this object. I have been induced to make this offer from the interest I take in the promotion of a sound and systematic education among the natives of this country, and from my earnest desire during my residence in India to devote to the public service all the time and attention I can bestow consistently with my official and professional duties. It has been a great gratification to me to find this offer has been welcomed by yourself and others in the spirit in which I intended to make it and hoped it might be considered.

It only remains for me to express my readiness to enter upon a Course of Lectures with all convenient expedition and to request that I may be made acquainted with any views the Government may entertain in connexion with this subject, as I cannot but feel anxious on every account to see the proposed objects carried out in the most efficient manner.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your most obdt. servt.

FROM SECRETARY TO GOVT. OF BENGAL,
To J. E. LYALL, ESQ., Advocate General.
EDUCATION.]

Dated Fort William, 14th Aug. 1843.

SIR,—I am directed by the Honourable the Deputy Governor of Bengal to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th instant, offering to deliver for the instruction of the Students in the Hindoo College Lectures on Law as administered in this country.

2. In reply I am directed to express the very strong sense entertained by his Honour of the value of this important and public spirited offer. It has not merely removed the obstacles which had been found to oppose themselves to the adoption of the system of instruction which the Government was seeking to complete, but it has placed within its reach in the influence which your position, your abilities and acquirement will give to the undertaking, advantages such as could scarcely have been anticipated.

3. The Deputy Governor is well satisfied to leave to your judgment and intimate knowledge of the subject, the entire arrangement of a plan of instruction practical in its nature and suited to the attainments of the pupils and the circumstances of the country to which their knowledge is hereafter to be applied.

4. It is desirable that the lectures should be delivered at the College of Fort William in order that the Students of that Institution as well as those of the Hindoo College may profit equally by the occasion. The term of their commencement which you will probably wish to be as early as possible, you are requested to arrange with the Council of Education and the Secretary to the College of Fort William to whom a copy of this correspondence will now be transmitted.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your most obdt. servt.

VOLCANO AT ARRACAN.

Accounts from Arracan mention that on the 26th to the 29th of last month a volcano broke out in the sea at a short distance South of False Island, one of a group of islets lying on the S. E. shore of the Island of Chedooba, which has led to the formation of a new island altogether. This curious phenomenon will be highly interesting to geologists, and men of science. It will be remembered that Capt. Halsted's interesting report on Chedooba noticed the evidence of a very recent upheavement of the whole island, native tradition confirming the testimony of geological appearances as to the occurrence of this upheavment within the last ninety years. The present remarkable event proves that volcanic agency is still felt in the neighbourhood of Chedooba, and leads to the supposition that further interesting phenomena may be looked for in that quarter. Any Government, but an English Colonial one, would despatch a scientific person to watch, and report upon geological changes of so remarkable a character occurring within the limits of it's own territory, and at no great distance from the seat of central authority.—Calcutta Star, August 28.

NEW ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.

Our readers are aware that the principle of the electric telegraph depends on the property possessed by electricity of attracting or repelling bodies in a similar or dissimilar electric state, with the body excited which is presented to them. The common experiment of rubbing a piece of sealing wax on woollen, and then presenting it to a pair of balls, the size of common peas, made of the pith of the sola or other large hearted tree, illustrates the phenomenon. The balls, suspended by a filament of silk, hang peaceably side by side until the excited wax is presented to them: they first approach and receive their charge of electricity—they then fly off from the wax, which now repels as vehemently as it before attracted them, and keep hanging apart from each other by the influence of the electricity with which they are mutually charged until this flies off and is lost in the air, when they return to their natural state of repose. Should a rod of glass, rubbed with a piece of silk, be presented to them in their excited state, they will first tend towards it, and if the charge it imparts be just sufficient to neutralise that received from the wax, they will simply collapse and remain inert as at first. Should it be in excess, the same phenomena will be exhibited by vitreous as by resinous electricity. If, instead of suspending the pith ball by a filament of silk, we place it at the extremity of a nicely balanced slip of wood poised on a pivot, having attached to it a card of say an inch square with a letter of the alphabet represented on it; should excited sealing wax be now made to approach the pith ball it will attract it as formerly, and make the letter and card of course partially turn round. If we suppose a board with twenty-four little holes or windows to be filled up with the letters of the alphabet in this way, by presenting to them in turns a body charged with electricity, each may be gently moved from its place in succession so as to spell off any word or series of words that may be desired to be communicated to a party watching the movements of the letters. If, instead of bringing the excited body in contact, or nearly so, with the letters desired to be moved, a little knob so placed be connected by isolated wires of sufficient number, denoting the places betwixt which the intelligence is desired to be conveyed—say York and London,—any one at the former place imparting electricity to the wires successively, may occasion an instantaneous movement of the letters at the latter, so as to give any amount of information that is desired,—a person sitting opposite the letter-board, writing down the words as they are spelt off, letter by letter. Of course, spaces, points and figures, may equally be supplied, as must the letters themselves, so as not only to complete the words, but punctuate the sentences. Now, this is what is actually done along our leading lines of rail ways, and what may be done where found necessary along any lines whatever. Not only can information in this way be conveyed from the extreme terminal parts, but as many letter boards as may be desired can be set up at intermediate stations, so that, if certain directions were to be sent from Windsor, to dispatch from London—say a train of carriages for her Majesty—or to desire the Cabinet ministers to be forwarded at once to the Castle—the whole parties along the line where boards existed might be made aware simultaneously of what was in progress, and the arrangements to be expected, without the least damage or impediment to the movements of the telegraph. On this system, it will be observed, it has hitherto been found necessary to have a separated isolated wire the whole length of the line, for each letter, space, point, or figure on the board; these, at the fewest, amounting to betwixt thirty and thirty-six each, all of them requiring to be kept in the most perfect order, otherwise the operations of the telegraph became at once obstructed. The new invention about to be described gets rid of this in a way equally simple and beautiful. In place of a bundle of 30 to 36 isolated wires, a single wire is now employed; and instead of a galvanic apparatus being requisite, a plate of copper is placed at one end, and one of zinc at the other, the moisture of the earth being found sufficient to occasion electric excitement. They are connected by a single isolated wire, and instead of a board with 24 moveable letters, &c., a dial plate is placed at either end, with the letters of the alphabet arranged in a circle like the hour figures in face of a watch. A hand like that of a clock is set in motion by machinery independent of the electric arrangements altogether, and one such machine as is here described is set up at the point whence, as well as at each of those to which, information is desired to be imparted. The clock hands keep moving round pretty rapidly while the electric current is left uninterrupted; but the moment this is cut off the index hands are stopped opposite any letter that is desired to be noted. This, by a contrivance not explained, they print off, and then proceed again till a further letter is desired to be marked. We have been thus minute in explaining a matter, part of which is sufficiently familiar to people at home, but strange and new, we suspect, to the majority of Indian readers, because it appears to us of equal interest, novelty, and importance. A short article on the subject, entitled "The World a Torpedo," will be found amongst our extracts. We have given some additional details, to make the extreme simplicity and beauty of the contrivance apparent. There is no limit to the extent to which communications of this sort may be carried—the transmission of electricity from point to point is almost instantaneous, and by the means just described, a single isolated wire is sufficient to communicate it to any number of signs.—Bombay Times, Aug. 16.

THE WORLD A TORPEDO!

Be not alarmed, gentle reader, at the startling announcement; though "the great globe which ye inhabit" is now proved to be one vast voltaic battery, with power equal to effect its own destruction, there is no present danger of its committing suicide. He who has detected the latent torpedo has no intention of employing it to annihilate the world, but solely for the annihilation of space. Yes, truly, we and the antipodes may soon be placed in contact by galvanic influence—mentally at least—with heads to heads in lieu of feet to feet.

In a former notice of the improvement effected by Mr. Bain in his electrical telegraph, we communicated his discovery that the circuit of a voltaic battery may be completed, by the earth as a conductor, from any points however distant. We then anticipated that the next step would be the application of the air as a conductor for the return current, so that earth and air might call and respond to each other from all quarters of the globe. M. Bain has, however, shown that he can do more than this. He has converted the globe itself into a constant voltaic battery and proved that it may be rendered the means of carrying on instantaneous correspondence through the earth. This result was the sequence of the previous discovery: for having ascertained that the moisture of the earth is sufficiently conductive of the electric current of a voltaic battery, he inferred that by placing a plate of copper and a plate of zinc under-ground and connecting them with an isolated wire, an electric current would be formed. The experiment was tried in Hyde Park, with zinc and copperplate placed a mile asunder, and with complete success. This discovery made, it was readily applied to simplify and work the electric telegraph. A single wire, connected with a copper plate at one terminus and with a zinc plate at the other, is now all the electrical apparatus required. The principle on which the telegraph operates with this simple self-acting battery is this—At each terminus there is a corresponding apparatus, with series of wheels like clockwork, which are set in motion by powerful springs or weights: this apparatus is so contrived that when the hand of a dial is stopped at any letter marked thereon, that letter is printed on paper; the hands on the dials at each station are adjusted alike; therefore, when set in motion and stopped at the same instant, the hand of each dial will point to and print the same symbol. Electrical agency is required only to set the apparatus in motion: this is effects, whenever the voltaic connexion is broken, by deflecting a coil of wire, which action removes a stop; the instant the voltaic circuit is renewed, the machinery ceases to act. The communications may thus be carried on for any time with great rapidity; the symbol indicated on one dial being indicated on the other instantaneously, however far apart. As the velocity of electricity is immeasurable; and as the conducting-power of the earth is without stint, there appears to be no assignable limit to the action of this terrestrial voltaic telegraph. Should the Lords of the Admiralty conclude satisfactorily their pending negotiation with the patentees for the construction of a telegraph on this principle between Portsmouth and London, the copper sheathing of the guard-ship in Portsmouth harbour would form a magnificent negative plate for the actuating battery; the positive pole of which could be supplied by the water-tanks at the Admiralty, the space between them constituting an earthenware cell, on a large scale.

These curious results of scientific investigation are probably capable of many other and even more important applications than Mr. Bain at present contemplates. To military men, for example, it may suggest the idea of applying the galvanic agency of the earth to the means of impregnable defence against invaders, by converting the islands of Great Britain and Ireland into gigantic torpedos. It is well known, that instant contact with a few plates of metals differently oxidizable will melt the hardest rocks and convulse the strongest animals: who then can calculate the effects when all the copper and tin in the bowels of Cornwall combine with the iron of Wales to produce a never-ending succession of shocks?—Spectator, July 1.

THE REV. MR. WOLFF.

In the Standard of July 6th, we find the following remarkable letter from the Rev. Joseph Wolff, the well known Missionary to the East. It will be seen that he disbelieves the reported murder of Colonel Stoddart and Captain Conolly at Bokhara, and is willing, if funds be provided, to undertake a journey there for their liberation. We fear however after the circumstantial accounts received of their death, there is little hope that these unfortunate Officers may yet survive.

"PROPOSAL FOR THE LIBERATION OF COLONEL STODDART AND CAPTAIN CONOLLY.

TO ALL THE OFFICERS OF THE BRITISH ARMY.

13, Richmond-green, Richmond, July 2.

Gentlemen,—Though a missionary and a clergyman myself, and not an officer, I do not take up my pen in order to excite your sympathy in behalf of a clergyman or missionary, but in behalf of two of your fellow officers, Captain Conolly and Colonel Stoddart, who are at present captives in the great city of Bokhara; but having been myself two months at Bokhara, and knowing as I do the character of the inhabitants of Bokhara, I am fully convinced that the report of their having been put to death is exceedingly doubtful—much more so by the source from which the report originated. If, therefore, one of you, gentlemen, would be inclined to accompany me to Bokhara, or merely pay the expense of the journey there, I am ready to go there, and I am fully confident that I shall be able, with God's help, to liberate them from captivity with the assistance of my Turcoman friends in the desert of Khiva and one of the dervishes; but I would undertake the journey without making myself responsible to the British government, and entirely upon my own responsibility. I merely want the expense of the journey, and not one single farthing as a compensation, even in case of complete success. I shall be 10 days more at Richmond, Surrey; if, therefore, one of your brave officers is now ready to accompany me, or to assist me in making the journey, let him come to me—and we may talk over the matter more fully.

I am, gentlemen, your humble and obedient servant,
JOSEPH WOLFF,
Late Curate of High Hoyland, in Yorkshire, and formerly Missionary in Persia, Bokhara and Affghanistan."—Spectator.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BENGAL MEDICAL RETIRING FUND.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR SIR,—As a considerable body of your subscribers, are deeply interested in the proceedings of the Bengal Medical Retiring Fund, I shall feel obliged by your affording room for the following resolutions of the Medical Officers of this station, on a correspondence between the Committee of Management, and J. T. Pearson, Esq., "relative to the funding annually of 30,000 Sicca Rupees and to the necessity of continuing the maximum rates of subscription."

Your obedient servant,
W. JACKSON,

Dinapore, 15th Aug. 1843.

At a Meeting of the subscribers to the Bengal Medical Retiring Fund, at Dinapore, on the 9th of August, the Medical Officers in the *Margin agreed to the following resolutions.

*W. Jackson, Esq. Offg. Superintg. Surgeon.
K. McKinnon, Esq. M.D. Surg. 25th Regt. N. I.
S. F. Batson, Esq. Asst. Surg. 36th Regt. N. I.
J. H. Freeman, Esq. Asst. Surg. Artillery.
E. B. Thring, Esq. Asst. Surg. doing duty H.M. 62d Regt.

1. That the Meeting approve of the exertions of J. T. Pearson, Esq. to reduce the present heavy rates of subscription to the Medical Fund.

2d. The Meeting agree with Dr. Pearson that the present rates are ruinous to the younger Assistant Surgeons, who will pay more than double the real value of the annuities, if they are continued, and by impoverishing the service, it prevents us from raising a Bonus Fund, a measure which has so much improved the prospects of our Bombay brethren.

3d. That we so far agree with the managing Committee that the "reserve Fund" now amounting to 1,28,000 Rupees should not at present be dissipated from its purpose of making up the value of 5,000 Sicca Rupees, to be added to each annuity so long as it may be required, but with the lapses which will soon bring in a large sum, we see no reason for continuing the present heavy rates of subscription and we should further urge upon the Committee, that the surplus of that sum which may have become accumulated, should be appropriated to the granting of annuities, whenever the Committee think it safe and expedient.

4th. The Meeting, therefore, are of opinion that the subscriptions may with perfect safety be reduced one third from the maximum rates which we are paying. Thus, let a Surgeon pay 40 Rupees, and so in proportion through all the grades. We shall then preserve the juste milieu, the "Something intermediate between the minimum and maximum rates," without endangering the stability of the Fund.

5th. That the safety of the Fund is completely ensured by Article V. which empowers the managers, with consent of the 4th Quarterly Meeting, to enlarge the subscriptions for any year, always providing that they are never to exceed the maximum rates.

6th. That we are fortified in the necessity of reducing the subscriptions, from the conviction that the present heavy rates are felt as an intolerable burthen by the great body of subscribers.

7th. That if the Fund works well with this reduction and the "reserve" is not much entrenched on them we should return as soon as possible to the minimum rates, as at first, the managers having it always in their power, to raise for any particular year, the sum originally stipulated, namely, 30,000 Sicca Rupees, and that we consider Dr. Pearson has successfully established his position, that only one surplus sum was originally intended to be ready to meet contingencies.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

FENITON—MR. HEAD.—The Bishop has given the benefice of Feniton to the Rev. Mr. Cuming, of Chudleigh. Mr. Cuming was the curate of Chudleigh, who contested that living with Mr. Palk, and by whose contest the Bishop was enabled to get up a case (though a bad one) for contesting the title to that living. On Sunday last the Rev. Dr. Cornish did the services. His congregation consisted wholly of the tenant and household of Mr. Justice Patteson, who has a residence in the parish. The parishioners feel deeply indignant at the treatment which their Reverend pastor has received at the hands of the Bishop.—Exeter Times.

THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT AND THE ISLAND OF TAHITI.—The two following despatches contain the substance of the communications which have passed between the British and French Governments on the subject of Tahiti:—

"LORD COWLEY TO THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

"I had some conversation with the Minister for Foreign Affairs, yesterday, on the subject of the proceedings of the French squadron in the Pacific, and particularly with relation to Otaheite. M. Guizot told me that the suzerainty of that island had been tendered by the Queen to the King of the French, and had been accepted provisionally by Admiral Dupetit Thouars.

"He said, 'We have nothing to conceal with respect to our proceedings in the Pacific. We should gladly avail ourselves of any means of strengthening or improving our possession of the Marquesas, but beyond this we have no views of conquest or appropriation of any kind. With respect to the Sandwich islands, for instance, we are quite ready to acknowledge their independence.' This he repeated several times. He afterwards observed that there were some grounds for apprehending that the tranquillity of the islands in the Pacific might be disturbed by dissensions on account of the difference of the religious tenets of the Catholic and Protestant missionaries. He did not, however, say that any disturbances had yet taken place."

"M. GUIZOT TO LORD COWLEY.

Paris, April 6.

"Monsieur L'Ambassadeur.—I have received the letter which your Excellency did me the honour to address to me yesterday, in which you speak of the fears that are entertained in England respecting the future welfare of the Protestant missions established at Tahiti. The language held by the Government of the King ought to have been sufficient to allay any such apprehensions. M. L'Ambassadeur, you very candidly acknowledge, yourself, that the British Government was entirely satisfied with it. I, however, appreciate, as I ought, the interest which leads you to ask me, in a spirit of amicable confidence and conciliation, the confirmation of these assurances; and I have no hesitation in repeating to you, that the Government of the King, in the system which it proposes to apply to the Marquesas and Society Islands, will remain faithful to the three great principles which it has never departed from—the liberty of religious worship, protection of the subjects of a friendly Power, and, finally, the no less sacred duty of assisting in the labours taken to spread the benefits of Christianity. Accept, &c.

(Signed) "GUIZOT."

MISCELLANEOUS.

GENERAL REMARKS.—We are happy to say that the present mail conveys to India particulars of the rewards which her Majesty has thought proper, at present to confer for the distinguished successes lately achieved in Scinde. In addition to the G. C. B., the colonelcy of the 97th Reg. has been given to Sir C. Napier. Nothing definitive has been determined upon respecting the distribution of the prize money captured at Hyderabad, as, according to Lord Stanley's statement in parliament, the Government have been awaiting intelligence which we hope has reached them by the mail just arrived.

The news received from India by this opportunity is considered rather of an unsatisfactory character. It appears quite evident that the establishment of our power in Scinde is very far from secured, and that, in fact, the victories of Meeanee and Hyderabad may have been only the beginning of many yet to be won. With respect to China, it is sincerely to be hoped that we were not premature in withdrawing our naval and military forces from that country, pending the ratification of the treaty.

The marriage of the Princess Augusta of Cambridge with the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, which took place on the 28th June, has been the great event in fashionable life. It was solemnised in presence of the Queen and royal family, the King and Queen of the Belgians, the King of Hanover, and a host of distinguished visitors at Buckingham Palace, by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Mr. Hume and Punch have each in their way laboured strenuously to give this affair the most extended celebrity.

We lately announced the fact that a number of noblemen and gentlemen, among whom are to be found the names of several officers of distinguished service, had formed themselves into a society for discouraging the insane and un-Christian practice of duelling. An event has just occurred, perhaps the most melancholy upon record, which is likely to promote, in no slight degree the benevolent purposes of these individuals. Lieut. Col. Fawcett, of H. M. 55th Regt., who recently arrived from China, has fallen by the hand of his own brother-in-law, Lieut. Munro, of the Royal Horse Guards (blue).

Parliament has been principally engaged with the Irish Arms Bill, which is so very stringent in its provisions that nothing can justify its enactment but the most urgent necessity; and with a measure for the settlement of the Scotch Church, which will probably be discussed in every stage. For some interesting debates on the Corn Laws and Sugar Duties, we must refer to another page. Ministers, it will be seen, have been obliged to yield to the opposition against the education clauses of the Factory Bill; but this scheme having been abandoned, it does not seem as if any less objectionable remedy is to be proposed for the vast amount of popular ignorance which, according to Lord Ashley, prevails.

Spain is again in open revolt, ostensibly occasioned by the removal of the Lopez ministry, but really effected by means and agencies from across the French frontier. The Regent has left Madrid, and marched against the insurgents, but how far he can depend upon the fidelity of his own troops in such a country, and in such times, is matter of great doubt. His position is therefore most critical, though he is the only man in Spain at all equal to the present emergency, or fitted for the government of such a people.

Both in France and America Lord G. Paulet's possession of the Sandwich Islands has given occasion to much angry feeling, though, after all, it is not likely to be confirmed by this country. The matter is thus explained by the Times:—"It appears that certain claims having been preferred against the government of the Sandwich Islands on behalf of British subjects, and by the British admiral, the sovereign of those islands professed his inability to meet the demands in question, but offered to divest himself of the sovereignty of his dominions in favour of the Queen of England. The British admiral, emulous perhaps of the recent policy of France in the groups of islands south of the line, accepted the cession of these territories conditionally; but he acknowledged, at the same time, that he was acting without instructions, and the arrangement was to be regarded as provisional, until it should be ratified and approved by her Majesty's Government."

The Free-Church movement in Scotland appears to have gained ground, for, according to the statements put forward by the deputation at present in London, seeking aid for the erection of seven hundred churches and a college, no less than between five and six hundred ministers, and over one million of persons, have joined the ranks of the seceders, and numbers are only remaining in the Establishment till they see the nature and effect of Lord Aberdeen's bill, which will probably please neither the one party nor the other. Lords Brougham and Campbell have denounced it as, on the one hand, re-enacting the Veto, and, on the other, extinguishing all power in congregations; in fact erecting a spiritual tyranny. We elsewhere give extracts from the pastoral letters put forward by the Established and Free Churches, which cannot fail to be of interest to many of our readers. From this subject we naturally turn to the religious movement at present going on in the Church of England, which is every day assuming an aspect of graver importance. Divisions have sprung up, and congregations are beginning to protest against novelties both in form and doctrine, which are maintained and denounced with equal asperity. Upon these matters we offer no opinion; but it is impossible not to see that the question is no longer one of wax lights and candlesticks, of surplice or gown, of praying to the East or praying to the West. The day of small things has passed, for the leaders of the movement have put forward doctrines which whether true or false, are of a very startling character, and throw all minor matters into the shade. Dr. Pusey, it is true, has been condemned by the University of Oxford, but it is not so much because he offended, as that he offended in degree; he has been sentenced, but it is not because he has preached a doctrine that is false, but that he carried the doctrine too far for the spirit of the times. The matter cannot rest here. The Tractarians have demanded the precise points upon which their champion has been condemned, and have published the obnoxious sermon.

The intensity of Repeal agitation in Ireland has rather increased than abated. Mr. O'Connell continues almost daily to address immense masses of the people, and by the most stirring appeals to their feelings and prejudices, to excite them to a degree that nothing but perfect organisation could possibly control. In fact, "temperance" is now the very best, if not the only, security there exists for general tranquillity. Such a state of things is quite incompatible with public safety; and the Government have therefore done wisely in anticipating the possibility of a collision which may at any moment be brought about, either by accident or design. To this is to be ascribed the distribution of a large military force throughout the country, and not to the absurd rumour of French Emissaries and American Sympathisers having landed in Ireland, and of depots of arms and ammunition, and large bodies of adventurers having assembled in Brittany.

Though, generally speaking, sufficiently vague, Mr. O'Connell has latterly, upon some occasions, become rather more specific in his plans. Instead of cheap "everything," he talks of what he will do when three millions of repealers have joined him. He will next require three hundred of those in whom the people so far confide, as to intrust each with 100*l*. They will meet in Dublin, and in talking over their affairs at the breakfast-table, they will be violating no law, for they cannot be prevented from eating together. They will not be elected delegates, nor appointed for any special purpose, and then they will frame the future constitution of the Irish Parliament, on the grounds of the Convention Act. To be sure, no one would be bound to obey their Acts, but neither were the Americans at first bound by the Acts of the Congress at Washington. When Mr. O'Connell has effected all this, he will have done nothing towards realising the absurd expectations he has himself raised, for his votaries look not only for ultimate relief, but for a present mitigation of the miseries they suffer, and very many for the restoration of a faith, for which they have prayed, and would, if necessary, bleed; and towards the promotion of which they have contributed largely to the fund for the Propaganda.

Come what may, all this agitation has done much towards directing public attention to the wretchedness of the lower classes in Ireland, and the necessity there exists for some amelioration of their condition. But how this may be effected; whether by a reduction of rents, or a "fixity of tenure,"—the abolition of the Poor Laws, or the passing of a Vagrancy Act;—the destruction of the Establishment, or the payment of the Roman Catholic Clergy; or whether all may not be accomplished, according to the views of Lord John Manners, by an embassy to the Papal Court, time must determine.

During the past month the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and the Courts at Westminster have been engaged upon a number of cases intimately connected with India. Captain Douglas, of the Madras Army, has succeeded in his action against the Morning Herald for libel.—London Mail.

ROYAL MUNIFICENCE.—We understand that through an application made to H. R. H. Prince Albert, by the Rev. J. B. M'Crea, of Fortress-terrace, Kentish-town, the affecting case of the widow and family of the late Professor Kidd has been made known to the Queen, and that her Majesty has been graciously pleased to command the handsome sum of 20*l*. to be transmitted for Mrs. Kidd's benefit, to which her illustrious consort has added 10*l*. We have no doubt that these acts of Royal munificence will induce many persons to contribute liberally to the fund which is being raised for the purpose of aiding Mrs. Kidd in the maintenance and education of her family so suddenly bereft of their excellent and learned father.—Pat.

EDUCATION.—Lord John Russel has placed upon the notice books of the House of Commons an intimation that it is his intention, on Tuesday, the 18th of July, to move the presentation of an address to the Crown on the subject of education in Great Britain. Mr. Hume's motion for a Bill on the same subject has been deferred until Tuesday, the 25th of July; and on the same day Mr. Colquhoun has given notice that he will move resolutions on the subject of education.—Ibid.

A HEALTHY PARISH.—An ancient record has been lately found at Alton, in the vale of Pewsy, Wilts, of which the following is a copy:—In nine yeares together, from the yeares of Our Lord 1592 unto the yeare 1601, there was (God be thanked) neyther man, woman, or child, buried in this parysh.—Ibid.

DR. HAHNEMANN, the founder of homœopathy, died in Paris on Sunday, aged 88.—Pat.

A series of experiments have been carried on, during several months, upon the Birmingham and Liverpool Junction Canal, under the superintendence of the Company's skilful engineers, by which it is clearly proved that steam-power can be safely and economically applied to boats of ordinary form upon narrow canals, and without the much-dreaded wear and tear of the banks. The successful result of these experiments is about to be followed up by the adoption of steam-power as the ordinary means of transit upon the Birmingham and Liverpool canal.—Record.

A Meeting has been held at Devizes for the purpose of establishing an Agricultural College for a district comprising Wilts and the adjoining counties of Gloucester, Oxford, and Berks.—Ibid.

THE PROPERTY OF THE LATE DUKE OF SUSSEX.—The property sold on Saturday by Messrs. Christie and Manson consisted of "arms and canes." The rooms were crowded, and much interest was evinced in the articles submitted for sale, which fetched proportionate prices. Many of the canes, indeed, were disposed of at prices far beyond their real value; several of the most valuable being the subjects of a spirited competition. The sum realized by the sale of the swords was about, 55*l* 18*s*.; of the pistols, 89*l*. 7*s*.; of the fowling-pieces, &c., 619*l*. 14*s*.; and of the canes, 223*l*. 4*s*. 6*d*.; making a total of 1,083*l*. 3*s*. 6*d*.—Ibid.

SILK PORTRAIT OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.—Several weeks ago a portrait of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, which was formed alone of black and white silk, was presented to her Royal Highness by a Committee of silk weavers, which was established for the promoting of the improvement of British silks. Since then a portrait of the Duke of Wellington has been finished, and which also is composed entirely of black and white silks, the shades of the portrait being drawn out so as to effect a very exact representation of his Grace. The portrait has been executed for some time, and only awaits the arrangements of the Committee for its presentation, the object being to induce the Noble Duke to give his patronage to the fabrication of silks of British manufacture. The Portrait is placed in a very elegant gilt frame, surmounted with the coronet and the arms of the Duke of Wellington, the sides being carved out with designs emblematical of the profession to which his Grace has been attached with so much honour to his country. The Committee have also in progress a portrait of the Queen-Dowager, composed of similar materials, which, when completed, will be submitted to her Majesty for her acceptance.—Ibid.

PEACE CONVENTION.—A deputation waited on Sir Robert Peel, by appointment, on Saturday, July 1, to present to him an "Address to the Civilized Governments of the World," agreed to in the recent sittings of the Peace Convention in this metropolis. The deputation was introduced by Dr. Bowring, M. P., who briefly stated the object of the deputation, to present an Address from the Peace Convention urging the introduction of a clause in all international treaties, binding the parties to refer all disputes that may arise, to the arbitration of one or more friendly Powers. The Address was read by the Secretary, and was very courteously received by the Prime Minister, who promised to place it before the other members of Her Majesty's Government.

The sales of paintings, engravings, &c., in Manchester, by auction, have of late been unusually numerous. The difference betwixt the price paid by their late owners and the amount realized by auction, cannot be less than 75,000*l*. It is stated that all the sales have been under commissions of bankruptcy.—Ibid.

Merthyr iron-works exhibit no improvement—they are growing worse weekly. Several hundred tons less of iron are to be made at Cyfartha, and unfortunately at Plymouth (Messrs. Hill's) several of the poor workmen have been discharged.—Monmouthshire Merlin.

THE REVENUE.—The Quarterly statement of the Revenue is not so satisfactory as it seems. It shows an increase of 1,700,532*l*. upon the present quarter as compared with the corresponding quarter of last year; but the actual increase upon the regular branches of revenue is not more than 50,000*l*., the receipts being swollen by 803,000*l*. of silver from China, and 850,000*l*. of the Income-tax. The increase is in the important branches of the Customs and the Excise; in the former, of 135,015*l*.; in the latter, of 140,013*l*. The decrease is, in the Stamps, 39,369*l*.; in the Taxes, 74,408*l*.; in the Post-office, 9,000*l*.

The general balance for the year shows an increase in the total revenue of the country amounting to 2,442,942*l*.; but this includes the Income-tax for the year, 3,317,997*l*.; and at least 1,000,000*l*. of silver from China. Deducting these items, the actual decrease on the ordinary sources of revenue will be found to be little less than 1,900,000*l*. The decrease, in the Customs, is 514,926*l*.; in the Excise, 1,013,868*l*.

Upon the whole, the state of the Revenue affords little prospect of great or permanent improvement; but, at the close of another quarter, we shall be better able to judge whether the increase on the Customs and the Excise is the result of a temporary flush, or the indication of general and progressive improvement. We confess, however, that we have no hope of a sound and stable condition of things, while our commercial relations continue upon their present unsatisfactory and uncertain footing.—Pat.

The steam-frigate Penelope, which has created so much interest in the nautical world by being cut in half and lengthened 63 feet amidships, and transformed from a sailing to a steam-frigate, is now ready for commissioning. The fitment of the engines has been completed by Messrs. Seaward and Capel. There are two of them, and they are believed to be of the greatest power of any that have yet been made, either for marine or other purposes; the power of the engines conjointly being nearly 700-horse, although the nominal power is stated at 625-horse. The diameter of the cylinder is 92 inches, and the length of stroke nearly seven feet. Every part of the engines and boilers are made adequate in capacity and strength for 700-horse power. On the 28th June an experimental trip down the river, as far as Queenhithe, took place, for the purpose of trying and adjusting her engines. In getting under weigh from her moorings at Blackwall, nothing could exceed the extreme ease with which her ponderous and powerful machinery was set in motion and controlled. Having on board the Lords of the Admiralty, she made a second trip on the 1st of July. In her passage down, notwithstanding her great size, she gained upon some of the most rapid of the river boats; only three out of her four boilers were used, as it was found that sufficient steam could be generated from them, and that if the whole four had been used there would have been more steam than was required, and which must have been wasted. In these trials she proved herself to be a vessel of extraordinary velocity, her maximum rate of steaming, with the tide in her favour, being 13 8-10 miles per hour, and her minimum speed 10 3-10 miles per hour. On her return to Blackwall she performed 11 miles in the hour with the tide against her.—London Mail.

In January, 1840, there were in the Army—of Englishmen, 51,559; of Scotchmen, 13,232; of Irishmen, 41,218.—Ibid.

SIR R. PEEL AND HIS GOVERNMENT.—The Whigs were inefficient under Lord Melbourne, certainly. They passed few of their measures, no doubt. But this at least they could say, that the cause of their failure was in the strength of their adversaries, not in their own imbecility. If they were able to accomplish little, they proposed and attempted much. No one could allege that they acted as if they would have been at a loss what to do, with a strong majority at their back. While they had such a majority, they governed with a high hand, and carried many measures of first-rate importance, and of various degrees of merit and demerit—the Reform Act, the Municipal Act, the Tithe Communication Act, the Negro Emancipation Act, the New Poor Law. When Ireland was more turbulent than usual, they did not hesitate to ask for a Coercion Act. Did Canada rebel, they suppressed the rebellion with prompt determination and vigour.

But the Government which has succeeded them seems ambitious of exhibiting in the face of the world the union of absolute inefficiency with absolute power. With a degree of Parliamentary strength unprecedented of late years, they are about to close a session, the legislation of which, for all important purposes, will be an absolute blank. Two measures only, pretending to any largeness of character, did they introduce—the Factories Education Bill and the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill. Both these measures have undergone in their passage through the House of Commons (not yet completed) such reverses, curtailments, and transmutations, as scarcely any Whig measure ever experienced, even at the lowest period of Whig decline. Their fundamental principles discarded, every provision which made them objects of public interest stripped away, they now remain mere capita mortua, laughingstocks of the whole country. Yet these are all, absolutely all the fruits of the united wisdom of the Conservative Cabinet, with its majority of 100, which the present year has seen. For the rest, so utterly barren has been the campaign, that the Liberal Opposition is reduced, in very despair for something to oppose, to spend thirteen nights in fighting a bill, the first twelve clauses of which are only as yet agreed to, for the mere continuance (under circumstances which made them unusually necessary) of powers which have been granted to every Government in Ireland since the beginning of the century, and to Whig Governments without dispute.

How is this to be accounted for? Did not Sir R. Peel hold mysterious silence for nearly a year after his accession to power, while every one supposed him to be maturing some grand scheme of policy, for the development of which the whole nation waited with impatience? Is this grand scheme, after all, merely and simply—nothing? Or is it nothing but a system of administering, at long intervals, such small doses of free trade as the corn-law and the tariff of 1842? People will not fail to observe that the same Minister, who has proved as yet so marvellously scanty in legislative resources of his own, cherishes as the very apple of his eye everything which was formerly done (often in spite of his strongest opposition) by those on whose ruins he stands. Was mere power, then, after all his object? Were there no purposes for which he sought power? No evils to be remedied, no bad laws to be amended, no dangers to be prevented, no great deeds to be performed? Does Sir R. Peel really imagine that he persuaded the people of England to overturn a Government only for his sake? Is there no principle in his Conservatism, but to adhere to just what the Whigs did, and timidly advance a little further in their direction? If so, it is time he should learn that this was not the Conservative principle which seated him in power, and that most assuredly this will not keep him there. It is impossible to wonder, if such is the case, that with all his seeming majority he is so slow to act: for action must necessarily show the man, and exhibit a principle and purpose in Conservatism, before which the professing Conservative Minister who does not adopt it must infallibly fall.

Meanwhile, the vigour which is wanting in legislation does not show itself in the executive department. Elements of mischief have been gathering in many quarters, while the Government has looked idly on, and displayed neither activity, nor decision, nor prudence. In Wales, in spite of many warnings, causes which a little care and concern for the practical grievances of the people might easily have obviated, have at length issued in a formidable system of agrarian insurrection; and with the prospect, unfortunately, before us of an extensive and sudden reduction of employment in the iron trade, it is impossible to look upon such a state of things without the most serious alarm. In Ireland, O'Connell has been and still is disciplining his armies,—if for no evil result, the thanks undoubtedly will not be due to those who have thrown away unexampled opportunities of conciliation, and met disaffection without firmness. They have done enough to condemn themselves for what they have not done; for, by dismissing magistrates for attending Repeal meetings, they have emphatically asserted those meetings to be dangerous to the public peace; and yet they have taken no step to make or declare them illegal.—Times.

The Gazette of Friday night contains an order for restoring the old white facings to the royal navy, superseding the red collar and cuffs which have too long confounded the naval service with the artillery. The stiff box-epaulette is also discontinued in favour of that with loose bullion. The change will be very welcome to the service.—Record.

An Order in Council has just been made, under which thirty pursers are to be permitted to retire on the half-pay of 8s. 6d. per diem. The Board of Admiralty will select those whose qualifications come up to the rule laid down by their Lordships.—Naval and Military Gazette.

THE CARTOONS AT WESTMINSTER HALL.—The following is the award of the judges on the subjects entitled to the several prizes offered by the commissioners.

The under-mentioned classes constitute the only gradations of merit upon which the judges have been called on to determine:—

The parenthetical figures indicate the number in the catalogue.

There are 140 subjects altogether, and the sizes vary from fifteen feet to ten feet square, none being admitted over or under that standard. The subjects are chiefly from British history, embracing many of the most important incidents in the annals of our country. Shakspeare, and Spenser's Fairy Queen, have also afforded several specimens of great beauty.

The judges were, the Marquis of Lansdowne, Sir R. Peel, Mr. S. Rogers, Mr. R. Westmacott, Mr. R. Cooke, and Mr. W. Etty, and they have taken occasion to express an opinion that, however liberal the number of premiums, they were still found by no means equal to the number of approved productions.—Record.

OXFORD DOINGS.—As we find the recent uproar in the Theatre at Oxford, in its origin and objects, is not thoroughly understood, nor the character of the opposition to the degree conferred on the American Minister, we think it well to lay the following simple exposition of them before our readers:—

It is always the custom, at the Commemoration, for the young men to express their feelings towards official persons in the University and elsewhere by clapping or hooting, and if either of the Proctors is unpopular, he is sure to be victimized in the latter way. Mr. Jeif, the junior Proctor, this year has done his duty vigorously, and, it may be, had not sufficiently combined the suaviter in modo with the fortiter in re. The Undergraduates, in consequence, were unusually violent, and hoped to drive him out of the Theatre by preventing Convocation proceeding to business till he took his departure. The tumult lasted so long that the Vice-Chancellor was obliged to dissolve the Convocation before the recital of the poems; the first case of the kind, we believe, which has occurred in the annals of the University. Some of the ringleaders who were detected have been punished—assuredly as severely as they deserved; and there is an end of the matter.

The Globe has connected with those proceedings an affair of much more serious consequence, with which they had nothing whatever to do.

It has been the custom in both Universities to confer honorary degrees upon strangers of distinction, without any reference to their religious creed. In Oxford the Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia have been thus complimented, not to mention Dr. Dalton, the Quaker. And at Cambridge, it is on record, that a degree was conferred on the secretary of the Ambassador of the Emperor of Morocco, a Mahometan. Exception has occasionally been made to individuals on the ground of moral character, as for instance to Talleyrand, but such instances are rare. Just now, however, members of Convocation are in a very excited state. Of the residents, about one-fourth are Tractarians, and extremely irritated against the Vice-Chancellor on account of the suspension of Dr. Pusey. Indeed they entertain the same feelings towards the entire board of Heads of Houses who support him, and especially towards the Master of Balliol College, who would not suffer the Fellows to employ a Roman Catholic architect (Mr. Pugin) in the repairs of the building. Such being the prevailing feeling, the malcontents were informed that Mr. Everett, the Ambassador from the United States, one of the individuals about to be presented for his degree, had once been a Unitarian preacher, and immediately a cry was raised that the Vice-Chancellor, after condemning Catholic views in the person of Dr. Pusey, wished to confer a degree upon a Socinian. Some of the party went so far as to solicit an interview with Mr. Everett, who treated them, it is said, with great courtesy, and informed them that he was a member of the Independent community but that since he had been in England he had attended public worship in the Established Church. This it appears did not satisfy them, and they attempted to oppose his degree; but it passed amidst the confusion created by the tumultuous proceedings of the Undergraduates. The protest we published on the 29th ultimo, and the subsequent letter to Mr. Everett appeared in our last number. Both documents are signed almost exclusively by the Tractarian party, who threaten to institute legal proceedings against the Vice-Chancellor.

Such is the history of this very vexatious affair, of which the result may be, that the Romanizing party in the University, after inflicting incalculable injury not only upon their own academic body, but upon the Church at large, will have contrived to embroil us in a quarrel with the United States, who may think proper to say that they have been insulted in the person of their Representative. Our readers would remark that Mr. Dalgairns, whose jesuitical letter to L'Univers, we recently published, takes his due share in the proceeding in relation to Mr. Everett.—Pat.

COPENHAGEN, JUNE 22.—The day before yesterday the premises of Mr. J. Holm, in Christianshavn, were struck by lightning. The fire continued to burn yesterday. The damage is estimated at 200,000 rix dollars. The merchandise is said to be insured for 160,000 dollars, and the buildings for 15,000.—Record.

A letter from Vienna, June 22, states that the soi disant Duke of Normandy, the pretended son of Louis XVI., is now in that city, where he is provided with the means of subsistence by some of the partisans of the old monarchy, who believe him to be really the Dauphin.

A letter from the Hague of 28th ult. says, that it is the intention of the provincial states of Limburg, on their assembling at Maestricht next month, to demand the administrative separation of Limburg from Holland. The King of Holland is to govern Limburg as a separate duchy, in the same manner as he governs Luxemburg as a grand duchy. There is, however, great doubt as to whether this proposition will be carried.

The Augsburg Gazette states from Athens that, in addition to the numerous reductions in the army on account of the embarrassed state of the finances, it is proposed to make reductions in the navy, and to suppress the Greek embassies of London, Paris, and Constantinople.—Record.

Egypt.—Alexandria, June 20.—We have been caught by surprise by the unexpected arrival yesterday of the Indian Mail, without any previous warning or telegraphic despatch.

Here we have news which, if viewed relatively to its important possible consequences, is not without political interest. The Pasha has publicly declared that, advancing in years and suffering infirmities, he is unequal to all the cares and necessary application incidental to his government, and that his successor Ibrahim being also an invalid, it is his intention to associate with himself his grandson, Abbass Pasha, as his Wakeel, or assistant, with full powers to act on his behalf. The question is—what mischief may this not produce on the demise of the Pasha? Between Ibrahim and Abbass there now is a long-cherished deadly hatred, and each has numerous and enthusiastic partisans. Will Abbass Pasha, who during the lifetime of his grandfather will thus have all but absolute power, be ready on his decease quietly to surrender it to Ibrahim, for whom he not only feels unqualified and ill-concealed aversion, but from whom he has received gross personal indignities? On the other hand, Ibrahim is by no means likely to resign his claims to the succession, and the consequences of this measure may likely enough be a civil war.

Ibrahim Pasha has just now arrived here, under a salute now firing from the forts.

The plague of locusts still continues; in abatement of the evil the Pasha pays liberally for their collection, giving for them, to the Zellahs who collect, two piastres for every oke they bring (or about 5d. for every two pounds and three quarters, English weight). Depôts for the issue of this pay are established all over the country; in one depôt alone I have seen myself in one day 120lbs. English weight of these destructive insects brought in and paid for—it is almost incredible.

The Pasha is now remitting to Constantinople his tribute, arranged by drafts on Trieste, for one million and a-half of dollars, on the brother there of the Minister here, to whom the Pasha, in reimbursement, consigns for sale for his own account, 300,000 of cotton, about 100,000 to be shipped as the balance of this crop, and 200,000 from the crop of this autumn (if so much escapes the locusts.)

The Pasha's smaller ships of war and transports are to be employed in the conveyance to Trieste of this cotton, which is another blow to European, commercial, and shipping interests.

Occasional cases of plague still continue, although happily the disease does not spread; as, also, the murrain among the cattle, now much diminished in its malignity.—Ibid.

American Affairs.—New York, June 15.—During the past six or eight days the all-exciting topic has been the arrival of the President. He has accepted an invitation to be present in Boston on the 17th inst. (being the sixty-eighth anniversary of the battle); at the celebration of the completion of the Bunker's-hill monument. On his journey from Washington to this place he has been received in the large cities and principal towns with all the attention and distinction due to the chief magistrate of a great and growing nation. He arrived here on Monday, the 12th, and last evening took his departure.

The citizens of New York have been celebrated for their hospitality for a period "beyond which the memory of man runneth not." On this occasion they have given Mr. Tyler the evidence that they know and understand the respect that is due to the President of the United States. No party or factious feeling was mingled with his reception. Even those who were most opposed to his policy united in bidding him welcome to the empire city of the American confederation. This is as it should be. For details I refer you to the public journals, which you will find crowded with them.

A great question is about to agitate the public mind. At present it seems only to be viewed as of a local character. It is the question of slavery or no slavery in Texas. As confined to Texas, the statesmen of this country have no right to interfere; but if the design is, ultimately, as many apprehend, to annex Texas to the United States, then the question of slavery becomes one of vital importance, and will be so treated by politicians of all parties. Sensible and reflecting men in this country care not what influence Great Britain or any other nation acquires and exercises in Texas, if they do not extend or attempt to extend that influence to the United States. The American fanatics, it is well known, are directing their efforts to the abolition of slavery in Texas. It is believed here that they are, or will be, sustained by British philanthropists. If this be true, and money is liberally advanced by the British (for the Yankees give no money for such purposes), the object can be accomplished. A more profligate, unprincipled, or corrupt people, as a people, never existed, than now hold the destiny of Texas in their hands. No American citizen of sound mind complains, or will complain, of the institutions of Texas (whatever they may be), so long as they do not interfere with the institutions of this Union; but whenever such interference shall be made manifest and complained of, it must be abandoned, or the shedding of blood is inevitable.

Now, what is the position of affairs as it relates to slavery in this young and unsettled republic? And what the wishes and apparent determination of the men that possess, or seek to possess, the power of its Government? It is believed that no one inhabitant of every fifty has the least feeling on the subject. They are prepared to adopt that course which will promote their pecuniary interest. As to principle, they have none in relation to slavery, and would laugh to scorn the man who would talk otherwise to them. The great landowners and speculators well know that the annexation of Texas to the United States would increase immensely the value of their lands, and, therefore, they are favourable to the plan of annexation, with or without slavery. But this can never be accomplished. It is not intended to enter upon a laboured argument to prove the correctness of the position assumed. It is, however, boldly and unhesitatingly asserted, that the north, before it would receive Texas, with the weight of slavery, as a part of this Confederation, would dissolve the union; that the south, if slavery is abolished in Texas, would, with not less unanimity and firmness, dissolve the union rather than submit to its annexation.

Under such a state of facts, every friend to the good understanding and kind feelings which subsist between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States should discountenance all projects to annex Texas to this country, with or without the abolition of slavery; inasmuch as such projects will inevitably sow the seeds of jealousy and dissatisfaction, and ultimately terminate in exciting the angry passions.—Times.

Fifteen slaves from Key West, Florida, recently succeeded in escaping in a pilot boat, to Nassau, New Providence. They were chased by their owners in a schooner, but the latter arrived too late to recover either the slaves or the pilot boat. Twenty slaves passed through Cleveland for Canada on Saturday last, as their master arrived in pursuit—"just in time to be too late."

The recent census of Upper Canada shows a population of 506,055. Near Odeltown, Lower Canada, several barns and buildings were burnt, on Wednesday night week, by incendiaries from the American side of the line.—Record.

Dreadful Conflagration at Valparaiso.—From the Valparaiso Gazette of the 16th, 17th, and 18th of March, just received by a vessel arrived at Swansea, we learn that that city has been the scene of a calamity such as has never before been equalled in Chili. At a quarter past eight p. m., on the 15th of March, flames were first seen breaking through the roof of the naval stores of Messrs. Julian and Lopez. An attempt to break down the connexion between the burning edifice and a newly built house having failed, the fire spread with the utmost rapidity, embracing a wide range, threatening to extend over the whole circumference, which it brilliantly illuminated. Great efforts were made to save the Bourse, by pulling down houses in its vicinity, and, fortunately, with success. On the other side of the place, however, where the fire originated, its progress was not arrested till it had destroyed the whole range of houses reaching near to the sea. Finding no further material in this direction, it crossed the street, and speedily caught hold of the printing establishment occupied by the Mercury. The pumps, which up to this time had been worked with the greatest activity, now became unserviceable; no futher resistance could at this point be offered to the raging element, which showing itself sometimes in clouds of black smoke, at other times in sheets of bright flame, enveloped everything in its way, until it reached to the front of the Customhouse. In anticipation, a house had been here pulled down, to prevent the further progress of the fire, and at half-past three the minds of the inhabitants were greatly quieted by the assurance that it had done its worst, and that its ravages might be considered to have ceased. An attempt had been before made to arrest the conflagration by blowing up with gunpowder the store of Signor Cioro, but, the quantity of powder being insufficient, no result was produced, but a slight earthquake, which increased the terror of the enormous and compact crowd of spectators who occupied the pier, every street, the neighbouring heights, &c., the boats and ships in the bay, whose masts and rigging were crowded with human beings. To persons ignorant of the topography of the town, it is impossible to convey an exact idea of the cause of this terrible conflagration, the damage caused by which is estimated, by the Gazette, at 2,000,000 dollars, (or 400,000*l.*) though this statement in a subsequent number is somewhat modified. Immediately after the first alarm, the Minister of War, the Governor, and other persons of influence, were on the spot, and prompt assistance was rendered, under their and others directions, by a great number of firms of various countries, many of whose names are gratefully and honourably recorded in the Gazette. In the list we observe especially mentioned M. Alèe, the commander of the Reine Blanche, and the greater part of his crew, Captain Hammond, of the Salamander, assisted by Lieutenant Carpenter and seventy men, Captain Carrick, of the Pearl, who narrowly escaped from the flames, and Captain Heath, who rendered great service in the preservation of the Bourse. The crews of the vessels, both French and British, gave the most valuable aid by their courage, promptitude, discipline, and strength. Prompt measures had been taken to repair the consequences of this sad calamity—to collect in one place all goods rescued from the flames, and to make arrangements for the resumption of business, which had been wholly interrupted.—Record.

2. It would not come within the limits of an order to convey to the army Sir Hugh Gough's views and his expectations on assuming a command of such vast responsibility other than to express his perfect assurance, that, in carrying through the important trust confided to him, he will have the energetic support of every officer from the General of division to the junior grade in the army, and the ready and willing obedience of the soldiers, both European and Native. Sir Hugh Gough's interests and his character are identified with theirs.

3. An honourable record of brilliant deeds in the field, and well performed duties in quarters, have deservedly established for this army a high character, and ensured for it both admiration and confidence.

4. In following the example of a long list of distinguished predecessors in command, Sir Hugh Gough trusts he will, under the guidance of Divine Providence, be enabled to hand over the army of India, whenever he may cease to be its head, with unimpaired honour, and in a state of undiminished discipline.

5. General Sir Hugh Gough much regrets, that he is precluded by the absence of his immediate predecessor, from deriving personally from that gallant officer, that valuable information, which his long residence in India so well qualifies him to afford.

7. The General Staff of the army and office establishments will join the Commander-in-Chief at Cawnpore, by the 15th October next.

ENTERT[illegible]NT TO LORD ELLENBOROUGH BY THE CIVILIANS.—The Civil Branch of the public service, and the Civil portion of the community in Calcutta, have at length resolved, to give a ball and supper to Lord Ellenborough, as a "mark of attention," on his Lordship's return to the Presidency from a successful termination of hostilities in Affghanistan and Scinde. This entertainment, which creates a new precedent in society, will close the series of festivities to which this happy event has given birth. The Army took the lead on the occasion, and the Civil Service, to avoid the imputation of singularity, has resolved to bring up the rear. The entertainments offered by the Army have a character of appropriateness on two grounds. His Lordship has taken every occasion of declaring himself the Friend of the Army, and these marks of attention may therefore be regarded as an expression of its gratitude for the magnitude of the obligations under which his Lordship is understood to have laid the Army by his good wishes. The Army, moreover, has no other legitimate mode of exhibiting its satisfaction with the conduct of the Head of the Government. It has been decided by high military authority, that an address of thanks from those who hold military commissions to those at the helm of affairs, would be incompatible with the position which the army occupies in the commonwealth, and would imply an equal power of expressing its disapprobation of the public measures of its superiors. Hence a public entertainment appears to be the only mode in which the Officers of the army are able, without impropriety, to offer a compliment to the Head of the Government.

The civil community of Calcutta, however, stands in a different position. It comprises a large body of independent gentlemen, engaged in various professions, and a small percentage of the civil servants of the state. It is not debarred, by any sense of impropriety, from the expression of its sentiments upon the measures of the Governor General; and it has been usual, during the last fifty years, to mark his return to the Presidency from the accomplishment of any successful enterprise, by an address of congratulation, framed with such caution as to secure the concurrence of all parties, however discordant may be their views of the policy of the undertaking. We cannot at this moment lay our hands on printed authorities, but if our memory does not deceive us, we believe that in the case of Lord Cornwallis, Lord Wellesley, Lord Minto, Lord Hastings, Lord William Bentinck, and Lord Auckland, the course pursued by the community of Calcutta was, the presentation of a congratulatory address. It is possible that a ball and supper may have been simultaneously given to the Governor General's Lady, or Sisters, but of this our recollection is indistinct. An address however appears never to have been omitted except on the present occasion; and the omission will probably be as unpleasant, as the presentation of it would have been agreeable. A ball and supper may afford amusement to the gay, and throw some additional labour on the physician and the apothecary, but it is not that token of approbation which the Governor General's predecessors have been in the habit of receiving from the Civil community of Calcutta, and it must be comparatively unsatisfactory. It has no political importance; it cannot be quoted by Sir Robert Peel, in the House of Commons, when the Opposition taunt him on the subject of Lord Ellenborough's administration, for it may have originated quite as much in a fondness for gaiety, as in a regard for Lord Ellenborough's political character. The little value which might be attached to it, has been miserably diminished by the tardiness with which it has been given. It comes in the wake of half a dozen other balls given by the military, and wants the freshness of a spontaneous movement. In these circumstances, an Address would certainly have been peculiarly appropriate; more especially as the individual intended to be honoured is a Statesman, and not a Lady.

THE JELLALABAD GARRISON.—A correspondent of the Hurkaru having some time back incidentally alluded to a Council of war which was held at Jellalabad, while it was beleaguered, we enquired whether the subject of a retreat was brought under discussion or not, and expressed some desire to know how the votes stood for and against that movement. As the defence of that place is one of the most memorable transactions in a very memorable campaign, there is an historical interest attached to the vicissitude of feelings and opinions of its illustrious garrison. One of the most remarkable incidents connected with the battle of Plassey was the Council of war which Clive held before he engaged in it, and the resolution which the great majority of the Council adopted against the engagement. It has been observed with regard to such assemblies that their votes are invariably given against the prosecution of vigorous measures; and Clive remarks that if he had followed the advice of the Council, he should have been ruined. We must confess that we had some curiosity to know whether the Jellalabad Council of war afforded an exception to what has been considered the usual result of such councils. We were aware that if the majority of the council voted for a retreat, their reputation for courage could be little affected thereby, as their opinions would necessarily be attributed to prudence and not to pusillanimity. We know also that no such disclosure could injure the character of the General, because he must have set aside the resolution of the Council, when he resolved to maintain his post. To explain the motive of our enquiry, we beg the reader to bear in mind that public journals must be considered in the light of caterers for the future Historian, and that the value of their services will be estimated by the abundance and accuracy of the facts they are able to accumulate. In our humble sphere, we had therefore a duty to perform to posterity, of which we were not unmindful.

John Brown has sent a letter to the Delhi Gazette in reference to our enquiry, in which he states that there were four Councils of war held; and he furnishes us with details of all but the last, which referred only to the proper time for the attack on Akbar Khan's camp, so successfully made on the 7th of April. The first two Councils were of minor importance; but that which was held on the 12th February, appears to have elicited great contrariety of opinion. The names of the members are given by the correspondent, who states that the debate was stormy. We have not the Blue book at hand to refer to, but if we are not mistaken, this was the Council of War held on the arrival or approach of Akbar Khan with his forces; and we may easily suppose that the subject under consideration referred to the course which it became the garrison to adopt in these difficult circumstances; in other words, the question discussed probably was, the propriety of standing a siege, or attempting a retreat through the Khyber. It was a period of intense interest, for upon the determination then formed, depended the character and safety of the garrison. It would not have been surprising if, in the famished state of the troops, with a powerful enemy ready to lay siege to the place, and without any immediate prospect of relief from General Pollock, some members of that Council had advised a retreat upon Peshawur. In proportion to the importance of the crisis, is our anxiety to learn how the votes stood; for the disclosure made by the correspondent manifestly shews that the determination to hold the post at all hazards, which gave its character to the campaign of 1842, and led eventually to the recovery of our honour by the recapture of Cabul, is to be attributed to the wisdom and firmness of one, two or three of its members. John Brown tells us that the proceedings were duly recorded; we suppose, therefore, that they will be found in the Military records of Government, and be available for the future historian. He has however thought fit to rebuke our curiosity by saying,

> "And now I really will conclude, with a gentle hint, namely, that the paper which endeavours to draw out who (on occasions of this nature) voted for this measure, and who voted for that measure, consults the interest of the community no more than its own, and so I take leave of my "Friend."

This remark is more conclusive than satisfactory. It teaches us that the present generation cannot safely push its researches farther in this matter, and that the next age is likely to know more than we do about it; and, in fact, more than we do know, or can know, about the secret springs of action either in the disastrous or the victorious campaign. Whether we should do ourselves good or harm, by any farther attempt to gratify a curiosity which John Brown seems to think impertinent, is a question on which we may possibly differ from him; but when he tells us that it would do no good to others, we give him full credit for his sagacity and benevolence, and at once take leave of the subject.

THE SEASON.—It is but rarely that our public journals allude to that very English subject, the Weather, but the present season has been so remarkable, as to deserve a distinct notice. It is remarkable on many accounts. We have had perhaps the mildest hot season on record for twenty years. The days of extreme heat, in which all bodily and mental exertion is irksome, were extremely few. The burning, blistering month of May was so repeatedly refreshed by showers, at due intervals, so as to render the arrival of the rains, which are looked for on the 10th of June, scarcely perceptible. June came without its supply of rain, and the month of July, in which the country is generally saturated with water, passed off without any heavy showers. At the end of July, the tanks were nearly as dry as at the end of May. The rice crop began seriously to feel the want of rain, and the natives anticipated a famine. The rains did not set in fairly before the beginning of August, when we had a month's supply in a week. During the last three weeks, however, the rains have been again suspended, and showers have descended at long intervals, and in scanty measure. Our books, the binding of which exhibits so great a sympathy with the weather, and is usually covered with such mouldiness as to require constant attention during the rains, have been remarkably free from all appearance of mould. The river has not, up to this moment, risen to its usual height during the rains, and in another fortnight will begin to subside. The current of the stream, which during the months of July, August and September usually rolls almost with the rapidity of a cascade, has been extremely languid; and the influence of the flood tide which is generally suspended during these three months except at the springs, has been felt in an unusual degree. In short this has been the most extraordinary season we have had for twenty years, and its singularity is attributed—and possibly not without reason—to the influence of the Comet.

The Indigo season is perhaps the finest on record. A planter always anticipates a larger crop than he obtains; but in this year of the Comet, the planters, with few exceptions, have already obtained more than they anticipated, and they have nothing to quarrel with but the reduction of price which the exuberant bounty of the season, is likely to inflict. Tirhoot promises 40,000 maunds. Other districts, though not equally blessed, will yield an unusual harvest. We see the crop stated by brokers, at 139,000 maunds; but all brokers, those of Calcutta excepted, have an interest in moderating the public expectations. If the accounts we hear from every quarter without exception, be authentic, the crop is likely to exceed, rather than to fall short of, 150,000 mds. These accounts refer not to plant on the ground, still exposed to the vicissitude of the seasons, but to that which has been already cut and manufactured. We have not of course the same means of ascertaining with accuracy the extent of the crop, as those who are professionally engaged in watching its progress, and comparing the accounts of each individual factory with its former outturn; but we will venture to say that, not even in the most productive of past years, have the reports of the planters been so generally cheerful as in the present year. For once, the croakers are in a contemptible minority; and long will the year of the Comet continue to be remembered at the Indigo factories.

ILLEGAL [illegible] SUPPORT OF IDOLATRY AT VIZAGAPATAM.—Our correspondent As- Observer, has sent us another letter relative to the illegal exactions of a Town duty by the Native Officers at Vizagapatam, which his former representation has not, it seems, been successful in abolishing. It has been extenuated in a Madras paper under the idea that it was a voluntary contribution; and this excuse is deemed sufficient to sanction its continuance. It appears that a petition against the payment of this assessment has been presented to the Collector by a body of the Kusherry tribe, and that the Collector of the district has directed that it shall cease to be exacted from them. This is at least is one proof that the tax was not voluntary; or rather voluntary in no other sense than that in which the three stalwart highlanders who were proceeding in a cart to the Head Quarters of the corps, bound hand and foot, described themselves as the Countess of Sutherland's volunteers. Another proof of the involuntary nature of this tax is afforded by the fact that a respectable cloth merchant of the Town, having bargained for a supply of rice in a neighbouring village, the seller was obliged to convey it by night into the Town to evade the impost.

It seems very singular that a Collector of Land Revenue under the Madras Presidency, should find it so difficult to distinguish a voluntary from a forced contribution, or to determine the circumstances which impart a compulsory character to any gift. To us it appears evident that if an impost be remitted to one class, and not to others, it is compulsory. If men enter a town at night to evade payment of a demand, that demand is not a voluntary gift. If peons are stationed to collect it, and on its being refused by any individual, distrain his goods to the extent of the demand, it is not a voluntary, but a compulsory tax. If men are not allowed to enter a town without a certificate that the contribution has been paid, then it is a 'forced benevolence,' similar to that which the Long Parliament abolished; it is not a voluntary contribution. It is said that the establishment of peons is kept up to secure this fund from being devoted to other purposes. But if any such establishment be permitted to exist and to act at all, it will inevitably become the instrument of exaction. We are not acquainted with the precise organization of this idolatrous fund; but we suppose that the money is either paid to a Committee of Natives, or to its Secretary, or its Treasurer; or at some shrine in the town of Vizagapatam. What could be more natural than for the pious devotees to proceed to the house where the office is held, or to the temple, and there deposit their gifts of their own free will and mere motion? This would be termed in Bengal a voluntary contribution. What could be easier than for the Collector to prohibit this system of demanding gifts under any form or pretence, and to issue a proclamation by beat of drum informing the public that no man was under the smallest necessity of making any payment to the Association, if he did not wish it; and that any attempt to exact money from him would be severely punished? This plain, straight forward proceeding would at once extinguish the odious exaction. It is the course which any Collector, who had the fear of the Deputy Governor of Bengal before his eyes, would adopt, as soon as it was brought to his notice that any such practices existed within his jurisdiction. It is the course which the Collector of Vizagapatam must adopt, if he would escape [illegible] in this matter. [illegible] will [illegible] both himself and [illegible] at Madras [illegible] guilt of violating the positive injunctions of the Home Authorities, and expose them to the censure which such disobedience will draw down on them.

30th August, 1843.

Some misconception appearing to exist with respect to the Power which Officers of both Services have over the Documents and Papers which come into their possession officially, the Governor General in Council deems it expedient to notify, that such Documents and Papers are in no case to be made public, or communicated to individuals without the previous consent of the Government to which alone they belong.

The Officer in possession of such Documents and Papers can only legitimately use them for the furtherance of the Public Service in the discharge of his official duty; and it is to be understood that the same Rule which applies to Documents and Papers applies to information of which Officers may become possessed officially.

By order of the Right Honourable the Governor General of India in Council,

J. THOMASON, Secy. to the Govt. of India.

The notification has reference of course to the communication of intelligence regarding the proceedings of Government to the public press, which it is intended hereby to intercept. As regards official documents and papers, the rule laid down by the Governor General will commend itself to every man's judgment. These are the exclusive property of Government, and the promulgation of them, without permission, is a breach of official confidence. But the last sentence in the notification, regarding the confidential character of all information which public officers may come by officially, appears open to many objections; and the prohibition is likely to be disadvantageous to the interests both of individuals in the service, and of the state itself. The Notice is evidently based on the assumption that some of the public servants, misconceiving the nature of their power, have actually communicated information of which they had become officially cognizant. Yet we cannot recollect a single instance in which any information has been divulged by which the interests of the state could suffer in the smallest degree. The officers of Government have not needed any formal prohibition, to hold, as under the seal of confession, any intelligence the communication of which would have compromized the public welfare. The present notification is therefore superfluous, as far as cabinet secrets are concerned, for they have never, that we have ever heard of, been made public; but the general prohibition to impart any information in reference to those measures of Government which there can be no object in making a mystery of, will occasion much injury.

While the press continues to be free, the character of official men is exposed to attacks from the envious, the malicious and the disaffected; and they have no means of maintaining the brightness of their reputation but by giving their explanations the same currency which the censure has obtained. The press which has been the instrument of attack, furnishes the most effectual and ready means of defence. It is not necessary that the explanation given by a public officer should bear his actual signature, for the clearness of its statements and the confidence with which they are put forth, will always give them the stamp of official truth, even when they are anonymously published; but they must necessarily se-far to measures which the writer could have become acquainted with only from his official position. Under the operation of the rule now promulgated, he will be entirely debarred from any such mode of justifying his public conduct, and his character must continue to suffer from the unjust aspersions cast upon it. We cannot better illustrate the personal inequivalence of the rule than by referring to Col. Sleeman's manly vindication of his proceedings to which we alluded last week. In his temperate but conclusive letter to the Bombay Times, he has disclosed no state secrets; he has betrayed no official confidence; but by a simple statement of facts, which are rather of historical than of political importance, and which there can be no object in concealing, he has effectually exonerated himself from all blame; still of these facts he became possessed officially, and any such mode of vindication is closed in future against every public officer. However high he may stand in the opinion of his superiors, in the public eye he must often be content to be reckoned a fool—and something worse.

But the rule is calculated to inflict a still more severe injury on the interests of Government. The proceedings of all Governments are liable to be misconceived, and their motives to be misrepresented. Beyond the sphere of its own official circle, a Government, owing to the imperfection of fallen humanity, has more opponents than friends, and when the press is free, it is oftener made the echo of censure, than of praise. The censure is too frequently unmerited, but it is not the less implicitly believed, or the more eagerly repeated; and when it remains uncontradicted, it gradually settles down into the minds of men, and influences their opinion of the administration. Thus by the frequent repetition of mis-statements, a Government, with the purest intentions, comes to be considered a monster of oppression. Hence the importance of multiplying, rather than curtailing, the means of disabusing the public mind on questions of interest connected with the public administration. Hence even in the Star Chamber days of Queen Elizabeth, Burleigh never allowed a slanderous pamphlet against his mistress to remain unanswered, wisely remarking that although they were but straws, they showed which way the wind blew. The Home administration, Whig or Tory, is always exposed to the unscrupulous misrepresentations of the Opposition and its hirelings; but it possesses many opportunities of vindicating its measures, and is thus enabled, in spite of party mis-statements, to maintain its public reputation. There are the debates of the House of Commons, which afford many occasions for explanation. There are pamphlets published under official influence which furnish an antidote to the poison which opponents endeavour to distill into the public ear; and there are always two or more newspapers, supposed to be in the interest of the Ministry, which are engaged in setting the public right.

From all these means of vindicating itself the Government of India is cut off. Still it has not been left entirely the victim of slander. Sooner or later, some of its servants have contrived, in an unostentatious mode, to furnish one or another journal, with sufficient data for showing how greatly the public mind has been abused by misrepresentation. We have repeatedly observed articles in our daily contemporaries, which we traced up to a demi-official origin, and which have effectually turned the tide of public opinion. Erroneous impressions have thus been corrected, before they had time to take root in the public mind, and the cause of truth, and good Government has been promoted without the smallest compromise of official confidence. While the secret of warlike expeditions, or negotiations of peace, have been necessarily and wisely withheld from view, this useful communication of information has served to convince the public, both here and in Europe, that the Government was labouring for the public good, and had nothing to conceal. Those communications will now cease—but the public curiosity touching the measures of Government, the prime actor in the drama, will not cease; on the contrary, it is likely to be the more excited from the effort now made to baffle it; and the only effect of the present notification will be to give an unchecked currency to misrepresentation and falsehood; for even those who may become possessed of the truth in the free intercourse of social life, will be careful how they disclose it, lest they should commit their friends. The notification therefore will do much mischief to the interests of Government, and none to those of the press. It will neither diminish the circulation, nor the reputation of the journals; but it will have this effect,—by closing up as far as possible every avenue to the truth, it will diminish the culpability of mis-statements, and render it impossible to repeat, with any degree of decency, the charge of licentiousness which some have brought against the press. We will venture to predict that three years after this notification shall have been in operation, the character of the Government of India will stand very different in the opinion of Christendom than it now does,—unless the notification should experience the same fate which has attended every other attempt to cut off the access of the public to valuable information, and become a dead letter within a month after its parturition.

PRODUCTS OF JAVA.—The notice we published last week regarding the Export trade of Java has been favourably noticed by our contemporaries, and more particularly by the Englishman. He remarks "that there is little apprehension of the consequence of the competition with Bengal in the cultivation of Indigo. We believe the cost price in Java to be really much below the sum stated by him, namely, 250 Java Rupees per maund, but if it can be produced there, at about the same rate as it costs here, we do not think the rivalry will be disadvantageous. It may be injurious to those who have given extravagant prices for factories, and may tend to force out of Indigo cultivation places wholly unsuitable to the plant; but by stimulating exertion and forcing economy, it will in the end give the Bengal planter a certainty in his operations, which he never could have, when tempted by extraordinary fluctuations to imprudent undertakings and extravagant expenditure." Since our last article was written, we have received a farther notice on the subject, drawn up by a gentleman on the island, possessed not only of great experience in the cultivation of the article, but of very accurate information on all subjects connected with its commercial interests. From his representation we are inclined to augur that the Indigo of Java is likely soon to become a more formidable rival of the Bengal Presidency than we had at first supposed. The price of the maund as given by us at 250 Java Rupees, was only the Custom House valuation of it, as exhibited in the official tables. We now learn that three-fourths of the entire produce of Indigo is manufactured on Government plantations, and may be considered as the property of Government, who ship it to Holland, where it is sold on its account. We are told that private planters can deliver their Indigo at Samarang or any other seaport at from One Java Rupee and a half to two Rupees the pound, every expense included. At 2 Rupees the pound, the maund of Indigo would be equal to Java Rupees 148. The Java Rupee, or Guilder, is intrinsically of less value by 15 per cent than the Company's Rupee. 120 pice are equivalent to a Java Guilder, but gold and silver coins are become so scarce that none are procurable under 155 pice at the present time. The Java Bank paper, the currency of the day, acknowledged by Government, and received by it in all payments, which was formerly equivalent in value to Silver, has been so much depreciated in value, that a Java Bank note for 100 Guilders cannot command more than 77 silver Guilders. Hence the Java Rupee is reckoned forty per cent less in value than the Bengal Rupee. A maund of Java Indigo may therefore be delivered at the port of exportation, for a sum which appears to vary from 110 to 120 Bengal Rupees; and this brings the prime cost of the article to a considerable approximation to the price at which it is, or can be, raised in this country. Considering therefore that from two and a half to three, and from three and a half to four Rupees a pound have been obtained in Europe for this Indigo according to its quality, it is not surprising that the cultivation of it should have been pushed both by Government and by private individuals; and it is not altogether unlikely that in two or three years, or in 1846, the produce of the Island will reach Three millions of Pounds, or 40,000 maunds.

The season of 1841 was very unfavorable to the Planters from great drought, and that of 1842, from heavy rains; but the present year, from all accounts, promises to be very propitious, and should the price in Europe be equal to 3 or 4 Rupees the Pound, according to quality, the profits of the season will be great. It is proper however to mention that the high price which Indigo has latterly borne, has arisen in some measure from the high rate of Bills of Exchange on Europe. Some have of late been sold at six months sight, at a premium of more than 30 per cent. A Bill for 70 Rupees payable in Holland has sold for 100 Rupees in Java. When the exchange falls, the price of Indigo is likely to experience a decline.

Hitherto very little attention has been paid by the Planters to the sorting and packing of Indigo, three or four qualities of which were formerly mixed in one chest, through inadvertence or carelessness. This has rendered the delivery of Indigo very unpleasant, and considerably injured the sale of it. The Planters are now said to be alive to the necessity of giving more time and attention to this department; and, adds our authority, "we have not the least doubt that Java Indigo will very soon be worth as much in Europe and America as the best Bengal." Here is a rival indeed.

THE OVERLAND ROUTE.—Bombay is again at issue with Calcutta about steam communication with Europe. At this Presidency we have, at length, obtained our wishes, and enjoy the benefit of a direct intercourse, by steam, from our own doors with Suez. We have now the same privileges of which the port of Bombay has so long enjoyed the monopoly; and when our line has been completed by the establishment of three vessels, there will remain only this difference between us and Bombay—that the communication between it and Suez, will cost the state fifteen lakhs a year, while the same advantage is secured to us at the moderate outlay of only two lakhs of Rupees from the public Treasury. The Bombay Times regards our present advantages without a particle of envy. He would rejoice indeed to see the Peninsular and Original Company's vessels darkening the Bay of Bengal; only he would instantly withdraw the bonus of two lakhs which Government gives the Company, and without which they would probably find it difficult to keep up the enterprize. He considers it extremely improper that the ryots of the Gangetic valley should be taxed two lakhs of Rupees, to provide the luxury of large steamers for the Qui his, that is for the community of the Bengal Presidency; but somehow or other, he has nothing to say against taxing the Bengal ryots, fifteen lakhs, for the convenience of the Bombay ducks, to enable them to go by steam to Suez instead of doubling the Cape—for the expense of the Steam establishment is drawn from the revenues of the Bengal Presidency. But, says our friend, the passengers from Bombay find accommodation in the Red Sea packets merely because these vessels are kept up at any rate, for mail purposes. Granted; but are the two lakhs of Rupees given to the Peninsular Company to enable them to send their steamers direct to Calcutta, intended only to afford us the luxury of large vessels? Is it not intended that these vessels shall also bring the mails for Ceylon, Madras, Calcutta, and the settlements to the eastward? It is simply because those mails have not been sent by these steamers, that the Bombay Times is enabled to assert that the bonus is intended for the passengers, and not for the mails. Let our Mails be sent on direct, as we earnestly desire, by our own steamers, instead of being preposterously sent by way of Bombay, and the donative of two lakhs to the Peninsular Company's vessels will assume the same unexceptionable character, which the expenditure of fifteen lakhs for the Bombay Steamers is supposed to possess.

The Bombay Times says that it is the duty of Government to carry the mails in the best and cheapest way that can be effected. By the best way, he evidently means that way which will be best for the community; by the cheapest, that which will be cheapest to Government. If the mails for Ceylon, Madras, Calcutta and the Eastward were separated from those for Bombay and the stations which lie nearer to it than to either of the other places, and were sent by the Peninsular Company's steamers, those steamers would be entrusted with the conveyance of more than half the mails. Allowing however that only half the letters and papers are sent by them, still the conveyance of this moiety will be effected at a much cheaper rate than that of the other half. The Mails for the two eastern ports and Galle, cannot be conveyed for a cheaper rate by any other arrangement. It would likewise be as beneficial to the public, as to Government. Our letters would reach us at a charge of only two annas, instead of being saddled with a heavy postage of fourteen annas. Therefore, it is the duty of Government to encourage the Hindoostan and her sister vessels, by a bonus of two lakhs, as affording the best and cheapest way in which the mails can be carried.

But it is an "unwarrantable waste of our resources to maintain more steam routes than are indispensable." Quite true; then maintain that which is least expensive, and curtail that which falls heaviest on the public resources. Let the Peninsular Company's vessels bring all the Mails on from Suez, and reduce the establishment of the Bombay Steamers, which are the most expensive; and let a branch steamer from that port be in waiting at Aden to convey the mails for Bombay and for the stations with which it most readily communicates. Let the grand trunk road be laid down from one end of the route to the other, from Suez to Calcutta, by way of Aden, Galle and Madras; and let it be occupied by the great vessels of the Peninsular Company, and let there be one branch road from Aden to Bombay, and another from Galle to the eastward to be occupied by smaller vessels. This would in our apprehension be the most rational, and certainly the cheapest mode of operation; because the conveyance on the trunk road may be kept up, as at present, for two lakhs, and the branch communication with Bombay, for, we suppose, half the present expenditure, or seven lakhs and a half of Rupees a year.

That some change in steam arrangements is contemplated by Government, in consequence of the successful voyages of the Hindoostan, is evident. We have the presumption to think that the plan we have laid down will be the most suitable. But if it should not be adopted, perhaps the next best arrangement would be to send the large Steamers from Galle to Aden, and vice versá by way of Bombay, though to this plan there are many and serious objections. But the plan proposed by the Bombay Times will never answer. Our contemporary proposes, that the large steamers shall ply only between Suez and Aden; that all the mails and passengers shall be transhipped at this latter place, and sent on to Bombay; that the light mails shall be dispatched by express, and the heavy mails and passengers put on board a third vessel at Bombay and sent on to Galle, Madras, and Calcutta. But if the Hindoostan is but just able to accommodate the passengers from Calcutta, Madras and Ceylon, how can those passengers be crammed into a vessel with only half its accommodation? Any arrangement which should subject the great bulk of the passengers to the inconvenience of two transhipments in thirty days, must inevitably fail. If the plan laid down by the Bombay Times, which provides that the hundred passengers from the eastern ports shall embark three times in three separate vessels, while the twenty or twenty-five Bombay passengers shall be put to the inconvenience of only two embarkations, be adopted, the advantage of steam communication, between Calcutta and Suez, so far as passengers are concerned, will be entirely neutralized. There are few who would not prefer the circuitous route round the Cape to the inconvenient route by Bombay. The Steamer sent on from Bombay would soon have no other duty than to convey the mails; and in that case Government would find it quite as cheap, if not cheaper, to send on those mails from Bombay by land, free of cost, to all parties, than to keep up an establishment for their conveyance by sea.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 31.

— The Englishman gives an erratum, on the report of the meeting of the Civil community to do honour to Lord Ellenborough. The original report ran thus: "Mr. W. Bruckim then proposed and Mr. O'Dowda seconded the motion, that all classes of the community be invited to join in this mark of attention to his Lordship." The corrected version of the motion is, that all classes of Society be invited to join. There is a distinction in the City of Palaces between the meaning of the words Community and Society not to be found in Johnson, which a stranger to our local institutions might not at once comprehend. All members of Society are members of the community, but all members of the community are not members of Society. A line of demarcation is drawn between those who are said to be in Society and those who are not. Perhaps the best definition which can be given of the two classes, is that all who are on the Government House List are in Society, and all not found there, are beyond the pale.

— A meeting of the Committee of the Church Building Fund at Midnapore was held on the 28th of last month, when it was resolved to solicit the Bishop to consecrate the ground, and lay the first stone of the Church, previous to his departure for the Upper Provinces.

— The Hurkaru states, that owing to the severe examples made by the Chief Magistrate, and the energy he has infused into the officers employed in the river police, there has been of late a great decrease in the number of thefts committed on the water. Formerly, scarcely a day passed without some complaint; for some time however there have not been more than one or two in a fortnight. A year or two ago the quantity of property stolen on the river, chiefly in the transport of goods to and from the ships, was estimated at five lakhs of Rupees a year. We are happy to learn that there has been such a diminution of crime, and are very willing to attribute it to the increased vigilance of the police; but a share of the praise is due to the new arrangements for the conveyance of goods, and to the construction of Cargo boats, in which the goods are placed under lock and key. We perceive that there is a Cargo Boat Association, and that it holds half yearly meetings, but we do not remember to have seen any report of its organization, or its success. We wish some of our readers could furnish us with information as to the capital of the Association, the number of boats employed, the expense of their construction, and the charge made for lighterage as compared with that of the old ricketty, unsafe bhurs.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 1.

— There is a long correspondence in the papers of this morning between two houses of business in Calcutta, the one charging the other with having withdrawn the valuable connection of a large Glasgow firm by representing that some of its goods had been pawned to the Union Bank, which charge has been satisfactorily refuted. The other firm asserts that no such advice was ever sent by it to Glasgow, but admits that a gentleman, recently admitted as a partner, did send home some advices to a friend before he was a partner, not very favourable to the character of the injured House. The matter, as we learn, has been put into the hands of Solicitors, and will afford employment to the gentlemen of the bar; and we shall not therefore allude farther to it.

— We stated last week, that a Mr. James George, of the Parental Academy, had added 300 volumes to the Jail Library founded by the Sheriff in the year of the long tailed Comet. Mr. James George has written to the Englishman to denounce the notice as a hoax, and to state that having an income which may be represented by two figures only, it was out of his power to have made such a gift; in other words, had he acted so preposterously, he must soon have followed the books himself.

— The Bombay Times has received a letter direct from the Sandwich Islands, dated the 6th of April last, which will be found among our selections. It gives a very full account of the grievances for which Lord George Paulet was sent there to obtain redress. The writer, after saying that his Lordship was sent to seek an adjustment of affairs, says, the rest you know. Unfortunately we do not know the rest; for there is a hiatus in the correspondence, just at the most interesting period of the negotiation.

— There have been some sharp disputes among the Roman Catholics of Bombay. The Vicar Apostolic has, it seems, received from the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, during the last four years, a sum little short of a lakh of Rupees, of which he has given no satisfactory account. A full account of the matter will be found in another column.

— The Rev. Mr. Anderson and his Colleagues in the management of the General Assembly's Institution and Branch Schools at Madras have followed the example of their brethren in Calcutta, and joined the Free Protesting Church of Scotland. Their salaries were drawn from the Missionary funds of the General Assembly in Scotland, and they have ceased to receive them since the first of July, trusting to obtain support, though on a diminished scale, from the funds raised for Missionary objects by the Seceders. It appears, however, that they will continue to conduct the affairs of the Assembly's Institution for the present, and to apply the local funds raised for education at Madras. The wisest course which the "rump" of the Assembly, as the Ministers who remain have been termed, could do, would be to make over the Educational Institutions at the three Presidencies to the Free Protesting Church; for it was through the zeal, and perseverance of those who are its leaders that these admirable seminaries were established.

— The salary of the Private Secretary of the Governor of Madras, is to be raised, we learn, to Rs. 1500, in the hope of securing the services of some Civilian of sufficient standing and experience.

— The Joint Stock Bank of Western India has declared a dividend for the first ten months of its existence at the rate of six per cent. per annum.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 2.

— The Nawaub Gazee Ooddeen Mahomed, Nawaub of Dacca, is dead. By this casualty an allowance of about 50,000 Rupees a year reverts to Government.

— The Beer on board the Hindoostan steamer was sour, or dead. This alarming fact was discovered before the vessel had got fifty miles down the river, and a remonstrance was drawn up to Capt. Moresby with forty-nine signatures. We can fancy the consternation which must have pervaded a vessel, with more than a hundred qui his, on board when it was found that the Beer was bad, and that there was little prospect of obtaining better before they got to Suez. We rather wonder they did not insist on the Captain's putting back instantly to Calcutta. The fault does not appear to lie with the Commander, who is not the purveyor, and who did all in his power to remedy the evil by purchasing 200 dozens at Madras. Capt. Engledue must look sharply into this matter. All his splendid saloons, and all his rapidity of transit, nay, even the excellence of his Hams and Turkeys, will be a poor compensation for stale beer.

— The Englishman of this morning gives us a long and very flattering account of all the great things which Lord Ellenborough is about to do for Scinde. There is however an amusing simplicity in the following remarks of our contemporary; "If we are really to have no more wars, it is to be hoped that these plans of improvement will not be confined to Western India, but that Government will endeavour to lay out the surplus revenues in plans of permanent utility for the improvement of every part of the country under British rule." Why, we have been hoping the same thing for the last twenty years, but in vain. When Government has no money, it pleads poverty; when it is rich, it has no will. Twice within the last twenty years have we had a full treasury, and on one occasion it was emptied by a Burmese, and on the second by an Affghan war. Sad experience confirms the truth that Government has never been found less willing to improve India than when it has had the most ample means of doing so.

— The Hurkaru states, that Government is about to make a move in the appointment of Deputy Magistrates, and that they are to be appointed to twelve of the most turbulent districts, namely, to those in which there are the greatest number of Indigo Factories. There are to be two grades; the lowest will receive 300; the upper 500 Rs. a month. The Indigo districts deserve the earliest attention of Government. We hope the new appointments will be followed up by disarming the belligerent powers, the Planters and the Zemindars, and that all private war for the redress of grievances will be rapidly extinguished.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 4.

— A correspondent, adopting the signature of G. J. has come forward in the defence of Mr Masson against the ferocious attack made by the Rev. Mr. Loveday on his character. We are waiting, on the principle the Reverend gentleman advocates, to hear the other party, that is the Bombay Times, before we take up the subject.

— The Alligator, from China, brings the intelligence that the commercial treaty with the Chinese had been signed, and was forwarded to England by Col. Malcolm, in the Akbar, which vessel sailed from Singapore on the 10th of August.

— The papers notice the death of Lieut. Col. Grant, of the 39th N. I. at Nowgong, in Bundlekund, on the 21st ult. He appears to have been greatly beloved by his officers and men. As a tribute of respect to their deceased Colonel, the non-commissioned officers of the Regiment bore his remains to their last resting place.

— We have copied from the letter of a Correspondent of the Hurkaru, a list of the munificent donations made by the European community of Assam to the erection of a Church at Gowhatty. The foundation stone was laid on the 8th of November, 1841, and the Church, it is said, will be completed in the ensuing cold weather.

— The Friend of China of the 15th of June, which we happen not to have received, but which has reached the Star, says that the vast empire of China, "through its length and breadth resounds with preparations for the possible, and, it is hinted the probable, and not remote contingency of another conflict with the English." We have copied the whole article. We suppose however that the subsequent signing of the commercial treaty, of which we have just heard, may be considered as a sure indication of peace for sometime to come. That we shall have another brush with the Chinese before many years have passed, is however highly probable.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 5.

— No addition has been received to the information communicated yesterday that the ratification of the China treaty was on its way to England on board the Akbar, nor have we received a single paper from China by this opportunity.

— The Calcutta Christian Intelligencer of this month, contains the following liberal and enlightened sentiments; "it gives us sincere satisfaction to learn that the Bengalee Patsala in Calcutta"— an Institution established by the Natives to diffuse the blessing of knowledge through the vernacular tongue—"is in a declining state; the native pupils have consulted better for their own interests than the clique of Europeans who organized the school with the design of giving the boys a complete education through the medium of the vernaculars! So may every scheme perish which is based on narrow minded and partial views." No man who is answerable to God for the use of his time would be justified in wasting a moment of it in replying to such reflections as these. But as the abeyance of the cause of education appears to have terminated, and the Hurkaru seems to think that there is some chance that the subject may excite attention, we shall lose no time in publishing some valuable papers on the subject. We have hitherto refrained from giving them publicity or from alluding to the subject, under the idea that the Education Board, or Council, or by whatever name the Educational Directory be denominated was in a state of permanent vacation.

— The Star notices that an "idea" is abroad that the removal of the Sudder Board and Sudder Court to Agra is not unconnected with the possible migrations of the Governor General and his Council to that station. The present Lieut. Governor goes home this year, and Bengal being now a firmly constituted and consolidated dependency, under Mr. Bird, this transfer of the Governor General and his official suite might be a saving of some four or five lakhs of Rupees to the state. Our contemporary gives it as a rumour. We have no idea that the Council will ever move, however frequently the Governor General may. Calcutta is inconveniently situated for the seat of Government, now that our empire has stretched beyond Bengal, but so is London, and so are many other capitals in Europe and America.

— The Hurkaru conveys to us the gratifying intelligence that the first of the ice ships, the Angelo, reached Madras on the 22d instant, and may be daily expected in Calcutta. How would the Governor General lay society, both Civil and Military, under everlasting obligations, were he to send one of the steamers now lying idle in Calcutta, down to the lower floating light, to tow up this precious cargo.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6.

— An article appeared some two or three weeks ago in the columns of one of our contemporaries, stating that some of the new Police had behaved ill, in the state of Jhansi. This information we copied; but we have since learned that it is without foundation. There was not a man of the new police within a hundred miles of the scene at the time mentioned; though there might have been some police men belonging to the Jhansi Rajah. We believe our political Officers had nothing to do with the matter, as the robbers, seven in number, were a petty little gang of the remnants of Dhakunjoo's party, headed by his nephew, whom he had brought up to his own trade. This nephew escaped when the uncle was shot by Jowahir, and the police of the Jhansi state have been in search of him ever since.

— From the delight which the Madras Athenæum expresses at the arrival of the American Angel, with a cargo of Ice, we fear that none of it is destined for Calcutta. The Madras stock of Ice had been exhausted a week when this fresh supply arrived; the whole of which will in all probability be detained there. We think the Calcutta community has just reason to complain of the shameful treatment it has received in the matter of Ice, and that a meeting of the Committee which erected the Ice house, ought to be convened in order to make some arrangement for transferring the use of it to a worthier party.

— Sir Jasper Nicolls, having heard of the arrival of Sir Hugh Gough in Calcutta, and his assumption of the office of Commander-in-Chief, has in a very neat and appropriate notification, taken his farewell of the Army with which he has been connected for forty-one years.

— We regret to notice in the Agra Ukhbar, the sudden death, by an attack of Cholera, of Lieut. Col. Urquhart, of H. M. 30th Regiment.

— The Bombay Times received this morning, has some very appropriate remarks on the Court-martial of Major Seton, and the finding of the Court. On reading the documents, we formed the same opinion with our Western contemporary on the subject, being quite unable to reconcile the verdict of the Court with the evidence before it. Though Col. Hughes may not have acted in these irritating circumstances with perfect and absolute propriety, yet it is manifest that Major Seton's conduct was in the highest degree reprehensible. We are entire strangers to the parties and to their connections; and speak without partiality when we say that there appears, from these proceedings, to exist in more quarters than one, a strong prejudice against Col. Hughes.

We beg to acknowledge with thanks the following sums for the Friend of India :—

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

THE LORD BISHOP.

Our worthy Diocesan has been paying a visit to Chinsurah, which he left on Saturday last, after passing a week there to return to the Presidency. On the Sunday previous, his Lordship preached in the morning a sermon on behalf of the Church Missionary Society, and in the evening held a confirmation at which several young persons were confirmed. A great deal has been said about the Bishop's style in the pulpit, it is certainly striking and somewhat peculiar : but he fixes the attention of his hearers, and it is impossible not to feel that his enthusiasm is from the heart : but it is his matter that does him most honor as a minister of the Gospel. About that there can be no mistake, and no difference of opinion we should think. He preaches genuine Christianity as understood by the Protestant Church of England. In the sermon now referred to, he took occasion to deprecate those appeals to terror in which many preachers are so fond of indulging, and which were so characteristic of Wesley's pulpit declamations, that Southey in his life of that singular enthusiast, calls them "Brimstone Sermons." The Bishop appeals to the better feelings of the heart—to love and gratitude. The spirit of his discourse at Chinsurah, was that of the beloved Apostle John—a spirit of Christian love—though in one of his most striking attitudes he forcibly reminded us of an engraving we have seen of one of Raphael's cartoons, Paul preaching at Athens. His Lordship, indeed, has lost none of his zeal against the Tractarians—or rather against their mischievous errors : but he spoke of them in sorrow not in anger, and expressed a conviction that they would ere long pass away.

On Thursday, his Lordship visited the Hooghly College, accompanied by his Chaplain the Reverend Mr. Pratt, and by the Chaplain of the station, the Reverend Mr. Moule, with whom our respected Diocesan resided while at the station. The Magistrate and his Assistant also attended to meet the Bishop, who examined several of the classes, but more particularly the first class with which he expressed himself much satisfied, and at parting addressed a few words of advice and encouragement to the young men. Mr. Pratt also put a few questions in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy to this class.—Bengal Hurkaru, September 5, 1843.

THE LATE REV. A. DE RODT.

Mr. DeRodt was descended, on both sides, from noble parentage. The families from which he sprung, belonged to those patrician houses, under whose mild and wise administration (though it was a strict aristocracy) the republic of Berne in Switzerland early attained a degree of civilization and substantial prosperity far above most other states of the continent of Europe. During his stay in this country our late friend rarely, if ever, alluded to this circumstance, and it would probably have remained unknown, if no one else had been acquainted with it.

He was born on the 2nd February, 1812, I believe in the city of Berne. About a year afterwards, his father, on account of his well-known wisdom and experience, was appointed Governor of the district of Moutiers, in the bishopric of Basle, which had just then been newly appended to the republic of Berne, by order of the Congress of Vienna. In that place, situated in the wildest and most romantic part of mount Jura, our friend spent the years of his childhood. He lost his mother at a very early age, but her place was admirably supplied by a pious aunt, still alive, who watched over her sister's children with maternal tenderness and solicitude. He was subsequently placed in a private school at Gottstatt, a village near Bienne, where under the instructions of the clergyman of the parish he received the rudiments of a classical education. About the year 1827, he entered the grammar school at Berne, and upon leaving it, in 1830, the Academy or College, where he pursued the usual course of classical, mathematical and philosophical studies. Early in 1833, when that course was completed, he went to Geneva, where he studied divinity in the school established by the Geneva Evangelical Society, under the auspices of Messrs. Merle d'Aubigne, Gaussen, Galland, Steiger and Hävernick. He was induced to study divinity there rather than at Berne, because his mind began to revolt at the idea of entering the ministry of a national church, which totally neglected the exercise of discipline, and was little more than a tool in the hands of the secular Government.

In the spring of 1835, just about the time when his course of studies was drawing to a close, the Rev. Mr. Groves, whose name is well known in this country, visited Geneva, and endeavoured to obtain Missionaries for India, under the auspices of the Rev. Mr. Start and his friends. He succeeded in inducing Mr. DeRodt and Mr. F. Gros, to devote themselves to that work. Mr. DeRodt, however, remained at Geneva, for the purpose of passing the usual examinations, after which he lost no time in preparing for his departure from his kindred and friends and his native land. He was publicly set apart for the work of the ministry among the heathen, on July 23rd, 1835, in the midst of the Church meeting in the Bourg-de-four, Geneva, of which he had been a member for two years. Travelling down the Rhine, he went to England, where he stayed a few weeks at Bristol and thence proceed to Liverpool. There he embarked, in company with Messrs. Gros and Mac Callum, on the 17th of October, 1835. After a tedious and otherwise unpleasant passage, the ship reached Calcutta on the 11th April, 1836. The servants of God were received, the first day, under the hospitable roof of the late Rev. W. H. Pearce ; but early next morning the Rev. A. F. Lacroix, went to claim his countrymen. After a short stay in his house, Messrs. DeRodt and Gros proceeded to Soonamooky, in the zillah of Burdwan. The health of the latter failing after a few months, he left Bengal for the Mauritius, and Mr. DeRodt continued to labour alone at Soonamooky, till January, 1838, when he removed to Calcutta, and entered into connection with the London Missionary Society.

Of his labours in Calcutta I will not speak, as there are others who can do it much better than I could, and who will feel it a privilege to bear testimony to his piety, his talents and his usefulness.

The hopes entertained of his continuance among us have been disappointed. But what is our loss, is his unspeakable gain. He has been promoted from an earthly to a heavenly sphere of labour ; and shall we repine at it, when his Divine Master has been pleased to shorten the days of his pilgrimage and assign him a place of rest in the mansions of his Father's house ? No, rather let us rejoice with him and for him ; and let us pray that we may 'die the death of the righteous, and that our latter end may be like his.'—Calcutta Christian Advocate.

DEPUTY MAGISTRATE.

We understand, that the Government are about to make a move in regard to the appointment of Deputy Magistrates. Twelve districts have been selected for the location of officers of that class. Among these are Jessore, Tirhoot, Behar, Moorshedabad, Midnapore, Nuddea, Champarun, and other places, where Indigo Planters and other Europeans abound ; but we are surprised, that the 24-Pergunnahs have not been included in the number. The places have been selected apparently with reference to the number of Europeans in them—not, we suppose, because crime is more rife in these districts, but because the cry for the means of security for life and property is greater, on account of the number of persons who can make their voices heard. Viewed in this light, we cannot but consider the overlooking of the suburbs of Calcutta, where the number of Europeans is daily on the increase, as a rather singular omission.

The persons selected for appointment, in the first instance, are to consist of two classes, distinguished by salaries of 300 and 500. As economy is the order of the day, would it not be an advantageous plan at first to appoint all these on the lower salary, and afterwards to promote to the higher grade those who had actually distinguished themselves ? There certainly appears no reason why out of twelve who may be considered eligible, six should receive 300 and the remainder 500 rupees.

The arrangement is to be carried into effect as soon as the sanction of the Supreme Government is obtained.—Hurkaru, September 2.

MIGRATION OF THE SUPREME COUNCIL.

An idea is abroad that the removal of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut, and the Board of Revenue from Allahabad to Agra is not unconnected with the possible establishment of the Governor General and his Council at the former station. As the Lieutenant Governor intends to go to England this cold weather, and as every arrangement has been made for the entire separation of the Bengal from the Indian Government, and the delegation of full powers to Mr. Bird, the thing might be accomplished with the saving of a Lieutenant Governor's salary, and establishment as a very plausibly expedient measure. Letters from well informed quarters are full of the "accuracy of their intelligence" in this matter. We give it as a rumour. The Duke may see reason to send for the Tranquilliser of India as the only man capable of tranquillising Ireland, and forming counterpoise to O'Connell : His Grace can we know pledge himself to the excellence of his friend's measures in full certitude of correct anticipation as to their infallibility.—Calcutta Star, Sept. 5.

SCINDE.

We hear that great things are to be done for Scinde. The Governor General is not to be satisfied with a barren conquest, but is determined to make it the most productive province of India. With this view we understand, that plans are under consideration for re-opening the old canals and constructing new ones, so as to give the advantage of irrigation to every part of the country where the level will admit of it. The port of Karachee is to be improved, and a communication opened with the Indus, so as to enable river craft to come there at all times. An augmentation of the military force is to be made, that will overawe the turbulent and disaffected tribes and leave no hope of success from fresh disturbances. If these plans are vigorously carried out, and the uncultivated lands, hitherto devoted to the gratification of the sporting propensities of the Ameers, disposed of on liberal and encouraging terms, there can be no question that an immense improvement will take place in a country, the extent and natural fertility of which, would enable it to support a population many times greater than it now contains. Whatever may be thought of the justice of the acquisition, the inhabitants will have reason to congratulate themselves on their change of masters.

If we are really to have no more wars, it is to be hoped that these plans of improvement will not be confined to Western India, but that Government will endeavour to lay out the surplus revenues, in plans of permanent utility, for the improvement of every part of the country under British rule. If well considered, they will soon repay the sums expended and add to the resources which permitted them to be undertaken.—Englishman.

COUNCIL OF WAR AT JELLALABAD.

To the Editor of the Delhi Gazette.

My dear Sir,—I see by your last Gazette that the Friend of India as well as yourself are still anxious to keep moving the "Illustrious" who, undisturbed by doubts and surmises, appear to be in the quiet enjoyment of a well earned reputation; but since the question, about the Councils of war, and retreating or not retreating from Jellalabad, can be readily settled by a plain statement of facts, without detracting from the character or merit of any one, it may be as well to enlighten the public.

I am in possession of the Journal of an officer who wrote events as they occurred, but, he not being an independent "Lady" and having, moreover, a lively sense of his own failings, does not consider himself called upon to publish his Journal, or publicly pronounce judgement on any man, or body of men;—with this officer's permission, however, I shall now make such extracts from his Journal, as will, it is hoped, place beyond dispute what really were the occasions of assembling officers to give their opinions, or, to form a Council of War, in Jellalabad.

1st Assembly, or, Council.—

"As soon as General Sale had got into the "place (12th November 1841) he directed heads "of corps and Departments to go round the walls "and examine and report their state—this occu"pied about an hour or more, when the assem"bly met at the General's, and each, individual"ly, gave his opinion on the following points— "1st, whether we should attempt to hold the whole "of the town, and whether this was deemed "practicable?—2ndly, whether we should only "occupy the Bala Hissar, and such portion of "the town as might be cut off from the other "parts, and rendered defensible?—3rdly, whe"ther it would be best to leave the place altoge"ther, and form an intrenched camp?—It will "probably hereafter be matter of much chaff to "determine who voted for this measure; it was "however carried (I think by a majority of votes) "that we should endeavour to maintain possession "of the whole town, until Captain Broadfoot our "Engineer, could make defensible the Bala His"sar and an isolated portion of the town of suffi"cient extent to contain the force."

On the following day a successful sally took place, and relieved the garrison of annoyance for a fortnight, and then it became plain that the whole town must be held. The following extract may not be considered unnecessary:—

"1842. January the 9th.—We have this day "received the astounding intelligence that "our troops at the capital have made a trea"ty with the enemy, and have agreed to evacu"ate the country: it appears to be a part of the "stipulation that this force shall retire to Pesha"wur before the Kabul one moves from thence, "and General Sale accordingly received orders "to that effect this day; the order to General "Sale, to retire on Peshawur, is eleven days old, "and consequently must be dated about the 30th "ultimo; a proclamation of Ukhbar Khan's (the "apparent leader of the insurrection), of a date "posterior to the 30th ultimo, has been intercept"ed by Captain Macgregor, our political autho"rity. In this proclamation Ukhbar Khan calls "upon all good Mussulmans to be up and doing "against the retreat of this force to Peshawur. "The object of the enemy is, undoubtedly, to en"deavour to beat us in detail, and to deprive the "Kabul force of the only post on which they have "the remotest chance of making any retreat "whatever. I believe General Sale's answer to "the order to retire on Peshawur (which is "brought here by three horsemen of the enemy, "and signed by General Elphinstone, Pottinger, "and, I believe, Brigadier Shelton,) is, that he "does not understand the treaty, since Ukhbar "Khan's proclamation of posterior date, and the "length of time elapsed since the date of the "treaty leads him to suppose that affairs at Ka"bul have taken another turn; he therefore re"fuses to obey the order, and waits for further "information."

About retreating, before the destruction of the Kabul force was known in Jellalabad, the following extract no doubt gives out the feeling of the garrison:—

"Tuesday, January 11th.—We could now, no "doubt, make good our retreat to Jugdulluk, "merely seven easy marches, which we could "well perform in four, but we have chosen the "good part, and, if we fall, we, I trust at least, "fall nobly in endeavouring to cover and succour "our friends, and where they may now be, Hea"ven only knows."

On the 13th of January, as every one knows, Dr. Brydon came in, —— one of fifteen thousand, serving our cause in one way or another.

2d Assembly, or Council.

"January 27th.—Yesterday General Sale "called a council of war in this garrison; the "matter to be considered was an answer "to a despatch received from Shah Shooja, in "which he (the Shah) desires to know what are "our intentions since the English (at Cabul) had "consented to leaving the country, and our an"swer is, moreover, demanded quickly by the Shah. "Letters also from the British Government, the "Commander in Chief, and also from Captain "Mackeson at Peshawur, were read before the "Council, and considered. The latter (Captain "Mackeson) only had heard of the disaster at Ca"bul, but the Government appeared to anticipate "it, though, probably, not to the awful extent "which has taken place. The fact, also, that our "troops had met with a reverse in the Khyber, "when attempting to push on to our relief, was "also made known; this last blow was a terrible "damper to our hopes, but, nil desperandum! I "must be brief, as these are no times for scrib"bling.

"The answer proposed for Shah Shooja was as "follows, viz., "We are ready to fight for you "until death, and also ready to withdraw from "the country if you no longer require our services; "but, having before our eyes the disaster of the "Cabul Force, we require certain Hostages to be "made over to us before we quit this Garrison," "or words to that effect.

"A number of chiefs were then named as the "Hostages required, but, leaving this matter, the "question is (and what puzzles us all) what are "the intentions of the British Government? this is "the question in which is involved the honour and "welfare of our own country, &c. &c."

"I must not omit to mention, that from the "communications of Government which have "reached us, it appears, that Government wish "to back out of this country in the least discre"ditable manner possible, and therefore, this Gar"rison, I consider is now perfectly authorized to "act with reference to its own safety only.

"Letters and Newspapers, in abundance, have "reached this from Calcutta, since the fall of our "interest at Cabul was expected to take place; "still no instructions appear to have been sent to "this Force as a guide to regulate its acts. I "suppose, therefore, that Government concluded "that our fall would, as a matter, of course, im"mediately follow that of Cabul, or that we should "endeavour to cut our way to Peshawur."

3d Assembly, or Council.

"Saturday, February 12th. A letter having been "received from Shah Shooja, 3 or 4 days ago, in "reply to ours of the 27th ultimo, the Council of "war was again assembled this morning, to take "the Shah's letter into consideration and deter"mine an answer.

"By the Shah's letter, our proposals, as made in "our letter of the 27th, had been agreed to, but "the Shah writes to ask whether we are sincere, "and, if so, requires the signatures of all the "Council for the satisfaction of the chiefs at Ca"bul.

"By the Council it was resolved to write to the "Shah and remind him that our proposals of the "27th were based entirely upon what he himself "might wish us to do, and that it was essentially "necessary that he should express his wishes be"fore we could enter into any agreements.

"Our object, of course, is to procrastinate un"til we become informed of the resolutions of Go"vernment; but, our ambiguous reply will be im"mediately seen through by the cunning Cabul "chiefs, and we might just as well have said in "plain terms, we must wait instructions from the "Government of India.

"Sunday, 13th February. A letter was also "this day received from Conolly (Hostage at Ca"bul) who says they are well treated, and that "the Shah, although allowed to be called King, "is exceedingly weak: in fact a mere tool in the "hands of the chiefs, who greedily caught at our "proposals for leaving the country, and have sent "a messenger to endeavour to withdraw Mahom"ed Ukber (which was a part of the stipulations) "from these parts."

"Monday, 14th February. A messenger (Deen "Mahomed Khan), this day arrived from Cabul, "despatched by the Shah; he, of course, is come "to spy out the nakedness of the land. The Shah "says, or writes, by this messenger, that he "wishes us to remain firm at Jellalabad, and only "wants to know when our re-inforcements are to "come. His Majesty hopes to be able to detain "the chiefs at Cabul, and prevent their bringing "down a force against Jellalabad, and we "heartily wish him every success in these endea"vours."

On Monday, the 21st February, the garrison were made happy by the proclamation of Government, dated, Secret Department, Fort William, 31st January 1842.

Regarding "retreat or no retreat," I can confidently state that, before the 13th January, (when the destruction of the Cabul force became known) such an idea was not dreamt of, and moreover, after the 13th of January the subject of "Retreat" was never publicly mooted further than the extracts above made testify, and for the following simple reason, because a retreat, without hostages as security, was most generally considered utterly impossible.

The Council of war was composed of the following officers:—

The late Col. Dennie, C. B. Comg. H. M. 13th.
Colonel Monteath, C. B. Comg. 35th.
Capt. Abbott, Comg. Artillery.
Capt. Oldfield, Comg. Cavalry.
Capt. Backhouse, Comg. Shah's troops.
Capt. Broadfoot, Garrison Engineer.

Capt. Havelock, H. M. 13th, being the General's Staff, attended and recorded the proceedings; and Capt. Macgregor, the Political authority was of course, also present with the General.

I have now only to add that you may, and no doubt will, receive many productions, regarding these events, far better penned than this, but you will receive none more correct. Your's,

JOHN BROWN.

P. S.—There was a fourth assembly, or, council, which occurred on the 6th of April 1842, but it was not called for by the General, and as it related to a matter far removed from the subject of "retreat," I am not called upon farther to notice it. Capt. Macgregor, as the Political, is entitled to the highest commendation; his influence with the country, his name, and talent, supplied the garrison with grain, and thus saved it, but he had no voice in the Councils of war.

The 3d Assembly, or Council, which met on the 12th of February, was a stormy debate; men debating for their lives, and the lives of those under their command, may be excused for heat in argument; at all events, whether they may be excused or not, they will have their say, depend upon it. And now I really will conclude, with a gentle hint,—namely, that the paper which endeavours to draw out who (on occasions of this nature) voted for this measure, who voted for that measure, consults the interest of the community no more than its own, and so I take leave of my "Friend".

SUKKER.

We regret very much to learn by our letters from Sukkur, that sickness, to a considerable extent, has begun to attack the troops at that station. The letter of a correspondent which we published in last Wednesday's Gazette, attributed the increase of disease, in one of the regiments to the fatigue the men were exposed to, but, although this may have some influence on their health, we are inclined to think that, as all the corps seem to be suffering more or less, the anticipated effects of the recess of the river are beginning to shew themselves. The following is mentioned to us as the status on the 15th, the date of our latest letter:—"Artillery about thirty in the two companies; thirty in Chamberlain's Horse, ninety in the seven companies of the 9th, (three companies are at Shikarpore;) fifty in the five companies of the 10th, (five companies are in the fort of Bukkur); and two hundred in the ten companies of the 55th Native Infantry." Biles and fevers are the prevalent complaints. Captain Drought, of the Indian Navy, arrived in the Comet steamer from Hydrabad. Letters from that place mention that Sir Charles Napier exercises the troops in brigade once a week, and a report prevails there that all the orders of the Bombay Army in Scinde are henceforth to be sent for confirmation to the Government of Bengal, and that their several departments of Commissariat, Pay, Ordnance, &c. are to be likewise under the heads of the Bengal Army. Descending from great to little events, we are informed that the Sukkur Brigade have, at length, succeeded in securing the services of an efficient baker (they have hitherto had to put up with chuppatees), but that the butchers of the place, dissatisfied with the Bombay regulations, are about to return to the provinces.

Letters of later date received since the above was written, state that sickness was on the increase, especially in the 55th who had, on the 16th instant, 234 men in hospital, suffering chiefly from fevers, some of them severe. The number of sick in the Artillery had also increased to 40. We must confess our astonishment at the great disproportion between the sick of the 55th & those of the other Regiments, and hope the reports we have heard regarding the very heavy duties imposed upon that Regiment are somewhat overstated, and that the, in our opinion, unnecessary pardes & drills to which they have been subjected will have ceased should it have appeared to the Commanding Officer that they, in any degree, contributed to increase the sickness now prevalent in the corps. The steamer Comet is to remain at Sukkur under the orders of Colonel Paul, until relieved by another from Hydrabad. The road between Sukkur and Shikarpoor continues impassable as yet, but as soon as open Captain Reeves' detachment is to be relieved by the whole of Chamberlain's Horse, and three companies of the 55th. The report of Shere Mahomed proceeding towards Kandahar seems to be confirmed by the fact of his having been lately heard of at Dadur.

A report prevails at Hyderabad that Sir Charles Napier intends proceeding the first week in September, to Kurrachee to meet his family from Bombay. If this be correct there does not seem much probability of his vacating his present office so soon as was lately expected.

Letters from Kurrachee speak in high terms of the place, and confirm the intention, noted some time since in the Bombay Courier, of getting up a public Library; we now also hear of a Race course. The weather is represented as delightful. —Delhi Gazette.

SCINDE.

Letters of the 6th instant have been received from Hydrabad, giving 11 days as the time of land transit—the most rapid we recollect of. It is now, however, regularly performed in this time—and we were able in our last to furnish news of the 3d. The account supplied of the state of the country is much the most favourable we have as yet seen. Rain had fallen more abundantly than for years past. The weather was clearing up, and the people were actively employed cultivating the fields, in the most perfect tranquillity. The confidence of protection, which, even in the midst of our troubles in Affghanistan, seemed greatly to be experienced in the neighbourhood of our troops, now luckily manifests itself around Hydrabad. A favourable account is given of the health of the men generally, and matters for the present wear a much more auspicious aspect than might have been looked for. It is said that Col. Roberts has been appointed political agent in Cutch, immediately under the orders of Scinde, in place of Mr. Lumsden, who has been superceded. This we state on Bombay authority, and have not ascertained its accuracy.—Bombay Times.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC PRIESTS.

A considerable number of the most respectable Roman Catholics in Bombay are about to memorialize the Govt. on the dissensions which have of late prevailed amongst some of the dignified clergy of the Presidency. Our readers may recollect the case of Fre Miguel Antonio of St. Louis Gonzaga, an Italian by birth, who after having assumed the vicarship of N. S. de Esparanca and the chaplaincy of two regiments of British Roman Catholic soldiers, was found guilty of a contempt of court, for which he afterwards suffered imprisonment. An attempt was made to get the friar prevented from resuming his duties after his restoration from prison. The application was first made to Government, who declined to interfere, and afterwards to the Bishop Louis, Vicar Apostolic of Calamina, who evaded the request; it afterwards becoming apparent, that so far from exhibiting any desire for his removal, the Bishop had especial respect for the Friar, as ally and coadjutor in certain matters severely animadverted on by the parties to the present application. The Vicar Apostolic, it would appear, has received the following sums from the Society for the propagation of the Faith within the last four years:—

|---|---|
| In 1840 for the year 1838-39, in three bills from the Honourable Court of Directors on this Government. | Fs. 31,640 |
| For 1840 | „ 31,640 |
| „ 1841 | „ 19,680 |
| „ 1842 | „ 15,920 |
| | Fs. 98,920 |

These sums have been remitted from time to time to Bombay, for the support of Roman Catholic Mission, and are said not to have been accounted for to the satisfaction of the complainants; the institutions for which they were destined, languishing badly for want of aid. The arrival of Dr. Whelan occasioned, it is said, so much annoyance to the Italians, that a petition for his removal was forwarded to the Court of Rome with about 2,000 signatures attached to it; these were the names of the poorest and humblest class of Portuguese. Dr. Whelan is a man of much learning, intelligence and respectability, and the idea of the chance of his removal, appears to be regarded with much dismay amongst the most eminent of the Catholics at Bombay, who desire the withdrawal of Bishop Louis.—Bombay Times.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

"Honolulu, 6th April, 1843.—"In consequence of the disturbance in China, our trade became almost stagnated, and having nothing else to do the residents began quarrelling amongst themselves, English versus Americans. The Government was entirely under American controul, grievances arose, and the impossibility of settling them satisfactorily by trials by jury, on account of not being able to get an unbiassed one, led to appeals to the Admiral on the station. The Carreena was sent down to settle the differences, but did not succeed. As this Government got entangled more and more in their proceedings, they despatched an embassy to England, at the head of which is Sir George Simson; what he has done we have not yet heard. About this time an extensive failure of an English house took place here, the real head of which, however, was an American; Assignees were appointed, two English and one American; of course they quarrelled about the division of the property, and the American separated: the Americans then found out there were no Bankrupt laws in existence here; a Sheriff was appointed, and seizure made, in direct opposition to English interests; difficulties succeeded difficulties, insult to insult so much so that the English Consul was obliged to depart secretly for England, leaving Mr. G. Simson acting Consul; the Government refused to acknowledge him, and the English were then left unprotected. Now commenced a series of insults and oppressions on the wife of the Consul (he having escaped); her property was seized on false pretences, and every thing done to annoy her; for weeks she was obliged to keep an armed guard of Englishmen on her premises. The admiral having heard of this state of affairs sent Lord George Paulet, in the Carysfort, to demand the recognition of Mr. Simson and an adjustment of affairs; the rest you know. It is reported that an English frigate has hauled down the French Colours at the Marquesas. The latest Chinese news I have from the Bombay Times sent me from England.

"There has been a splendid eruption of the great Terminal Crater at Owyhee, throwing Columns of fire to an incredible height; the top of the Crater is 14,000 feet high; it was a grand and terrible sight, but did no damage."—Bombay Times, August 19.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY'S INSTITUTION AND BRANCH SCHOOLS AT MADRAS.

The Board of the General Assembly's St. Andrew's School consider it right and proper to make known to the friends and supporters of that institution and its Branch Schools the following resolution, passed by the Board on the 3d instant, and to publish it for general information.

As the terms of the resolution fully express their own meaning, the Board see no necessity for further explanation, than to observe that the resolution is founded upon the declaration of the Revd. Mr. Anderson and his colleagues, that in consequence of the disruption which has taken place in the Established Church of Scotland they have given in their adherence to that part of the Church which is denominated "The Free Protesting Church of Scotland."

As in the crisis that has occurred the Revd. the Missionaries felt it to be their duty to choose the portion of the divided Church of Scotland to which they would belong, so it was incumbent upon the Board to determine whether they would support as heretofore, with the funds at their disposal, the local Institutions for which they were raised; and this it will be seen by the resolution referred to is the course they have adopted, with the reservation of considering the claim of any Subscriber (dissenting from its principle,) to a return of the current year's subscription that may be preferred with a reasonable period after its announcement.

The Revd. the Missionaries have never derived any personal benefit from local funds, their income having hitherto been drawn from the general fund raised in Scotland for the support of the India Mission in connection with the Established Church. This income they have ceased (from 1st July last) to draw. They, with respect to future income, now depend upon sharing in the same stipends or allowances with their brethren in their native land, which the general fund now raising in connection within the Free Presbyterian Church may hereafter apportion, and the Missionaries are content to suffer with others a diminished income.

The Board having learnt from the Revd. Missionaries that it is the intention of the General Assembly of the Free Protesting Church to carry on the Missionary schemes with vigour, have much satisfaction in stating that the co-operation of these Revd. Gentlemen—through whose zeal, unwearied self devotion, and peculiar fitness for the task, the success of the Institution has, under the divine blessing, been so eminently promoted,—will thereby be secured to it. Under these circumstances, therefore, the Board invite with confidence a continuation an increase of that support which has already been so liberally granted to the Institution. The Funds will be solely, as formerly, appropriated to local objects. They trust no alteration in circumstances will make any alteration either as regards their amount or destination.

The Madras Community have had ample proof of the efficiency with which the Schools are conducted. Mr. Anderson and his colleagues, they may be assured, will continue to do their duty faithfully, and the Board rely with confidence that they will be supported.

RESOLUTION.

"The Board being composed of members of different religious denominations, and formed exclusively to raise and manage local funds in connection with the General Assembly's Institution and Branch Schools, with reference to the announcement made to it by the Missionaries now in charge, "That, as the disruption of the Established Church of Scotland took place on the 18th of May last, they had felt it to be their duty to give in their adherence to that part of the Church which has relinquished the State connection and is now denominated 'The Free Protesting Church of Scotland,' and were prepared as the Missionaries of that Church to carry on their work in every respect as before" for which the local funds have been received and properly given in trust by the friends of Missions and of Native Education based on the word of God in this Presidency—resolve

"That they will best advance the objects for which they were constituted as a Board,—consult their own sense of equity and duty,—fulfil the intentions of the Subscribers and supporters generally,—and most effectually promote the interests of Missions in this Presidency, by continuing to manage the funds and property as heretofore in connection with the present Missionaries, viz. the Revd. J. Anderson, R. Johnston and J. Braidwood. That public intimation be given of this intention in the Madras newspapers.

Also should any Subscriber after this intimation claim to have his subscription for the current year returned, the Board reserve to itself the right of considering such claim and of acting upon the decision of the majority."

A. F. Bruce,
Officiating Secretary Pro tempore.

WARLIKE MOVEMENT IN CHINA.

Meantime we would remark, although we hold the indication to be of very minor significance to what we may hereafter adduce, as evidence of the ultimate intentions of the Chinese Government—that the severest measures are now being taken by the Emperor against all the Functionaries, who may have come any way into collision with the barbarians, and been baffled or worsted. Naval, Military, or Civil officers, none are exempted from condign punishment, although some of them are of the highest rank and station in the empire.

Yik-shan and Yik-king are condemned to death, and if we may judge from the fate of Yu-poo-yun who has been recently decapitated, we should say no doubt can exist that the capital punishment will be inflicted.

The execution of Yu-poo-yun is a lamentable event, seeing that when he was Commander-in-Chief of Che-keang province, he defended to the best of his ability the positions he had taken up at Chin-hae and Ningpo: from an eye witness we have learned that he evinced great personal gallantry at our capture of the former town.

It is an affecting incident in the fate of this officer, but not a rare one in Chinese history—that his son petitioned the Emperor to die instead of his father. This vicarious atonement, or rather this offering to so appease the sanguinary vengeance of the law, has on some occasions been granted, but it was in this instance denied. The Emperor declares the crime to be too heavy to permit any mitigation of the sentence, and admonishes the son to retrieve the disgrace of his name and family, by striving, and with his kindred too, in repelling the "cunning barbarian slaves" should they again invade the father-land.—Friend of China.

ILLEGAL TAX FOR THE SUPPORT OF HINDOO IDOLATRY.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR SIR,—Since my last letter to you on this subject, one in reply to it, has appeared in the Madras Record, endeavouring to prove that the Tax to which I referred was nothing more or less than "a charity contribution" for the support of the Hindoo Religion. I shall not commence this letter by charging my opponent with "setting forth false and malicious statements to the public," without even the shadow of proof (as he has done in reference to my letter) but I shall lay before your readers some stubborn facts which will be sufficient to prove to every honest and candid mind that this tax which is styled by the writer of the letter, a charity contribution, is nothing more or less than an illegal impost, set on foot for the purpose of supporting Hindoo idolatry in this place.

I must inform you, in the first place, Mr. Editor, that since my former letter on the subject, a considerable stir has been excited amongst the natives of this town on the subject, and a petition has been sent up to the Circuit Judge praying that measures may be taken by those in authority to exempt them from the payment of this illegal impost. This Petition was sent up by the Kucherry caste people, and was signed by fifteen natives. They state in it, that they have been taxed by the native authorities in the following proportion for the various articles they have brought into the market. For one bullock load of Tamarinds two dubs; for one bullock load of Bullocks' Horns, five dubs (or 1 anna 8 pice); for one bullock load of Sugar, six dubs, (or 2 annas); for one ditto of Turmeric, three dubs, or one anna. For curry stuff something is taken in kind not in money. It is needful that the public should be informed that the petitioners who were called to pay this tax were persons of too low a cast in the opinion of the holy Brahmins to enter the shrines of the Hindoo gods and goddesses. But they were not too low to contribute towards the building of temples, which they were never allowed to enter.

2. Another proof of its not being given voluntarily is, that peons are placed outside the town to lay hold of any person who have not a certificate that they have paid the tax. If the bullock men do not give what is demanded of them, the peons immediately take away the sacks from the bullocks, or the clothes from the men, and keep them until the money is fortheoming. Hence, Mr. Editor, you may see the propriety of calling this a charitable contribution.

3. Another proof of this tax not being a "charity contribution," is that a respectable cloth merchant of this place obtained a quantity of Rice in the neighbouring villages and got his men to bring it in at night and thus avoid the tax. A respectable merchant, also resident in this town, a short time ago wanted some ryots in the neighbouring villages to supply him with grain at the usual rate; they replied that they could not bring it into the town at that price on account of the new tax which had been imposed upon them. So that you see this tax affects the purchaser as well as the seller of any article, and in this way Christians and Mahommedans are made to pay for that which they utterly abhor. Thus the poor pensioners of this station are called to suffer, in as much as the price of provisions is hereby increased. The writer of the letter referred to makes a grand mistake when he says that the tax is paid with the free consent of the real owners. Abundant proof can be obtained to the contrary by those who are able to converse with the natives in their own language, and who are the only suitable persons to judge of the rights of the case. If this tax was given by free consent, why did the Kucherry caste people complain against it?

The writer also states in his letter that a small establishment is of course kept up by the donors "to secure this fund from being devoted to other purposes." Now instead of this being the case, this establishment is kept up merely for the purpose of compelling the poor people to give to the Fund. Let this illegal establishment be abolished, and this benevolent contribution will fall to the ground.

The people who bring in rice, gunny bags, and other articles for sale, are now taxed higher than before, merely to defray the expense of some idolatrous ceremony that is going forward in the town. The effrontery of the native authorities seem to be beyond all bounds. They even offered the poor Kucherry caste people a handsome bribe to withdraw the petition which they had sent up to Government, but I am thankful to say that in this instance they did not succeed. Men who are guilty of such conduct, are surely unfit to hold such responsible situations. The amount collected during the past month by this tax has been upwards of 900 Rupees, thus making in the course of the year 11,000 Rupees, which must in some way or another cause a deficiency in the public Revenue.

There is a report in the town that a considerable number of native merchants, who are closely connected with the Brahmins in this affair, and who derive more or less profit from it, have signed a petition to the Collector praying that the tax may be continued, as it is a voluntary contribution on the part of the natives. Their object in doing this, was to counteract the petition which had been sent up by the Kucherry caste people. How absurd it would appear, Mr. Editor, if the inhabitants of Calcutta were to send up a petition to his Honour the Governor in Council to be permitted to pay a voluntary contribution to some charitable institution. I am happy to state in conclusion that the petition of the Kucherry people has been listened to, and that the Collector of the District has given strict orders that the taxes should not be exacted from them. So far good; but why not have put down this tax altogether? If it is unjust in reference to one class of people, it is unjust in reference to others; and the continuance of it is a gross act of injustice to the other classes of the community.

I do sincerely trust that the representation of this iniquitous proceeding will induce the Governor in Council of the Madras Presidency, to adopt measures for the speedy and total abolition of this illegal impost.

I remain, your's sincerely,

AN OBSERVER.

RELIGIOUS.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON.—We are happy to be enabled to announce the restoration of tranquillity to the diocese of London;—at least, so far as that tranquillity has been disturbed by certain proceedings which are chiefly attributed to Archdeacon Hale. The letter of the Bishop of London, which, on Thursday last, we intimated to be in preparation, has been issued, in the form of a Circular, to the clergy of his diocese; and with this peace giving document, the question seems to terminate. In order that the whole matter may be understood, we shall, as rapidly as possible, sketch its entire progress.

In his Charge in the last autumn, the Bishop, while he condemned the doctrines of the Tractarians in five or six leading particulars, seemed to concede something to their demands in ritual and ceremonial points. He recommended strict compliance with the rubric, suggested the partial use of the surplice in the pulpit, and in one or two smaller matters seemed to decide in their favour. The consequence was, that all who had any disposition towards Tractarianism at once took the opportunity of showing it, and a variety of changes took place in the modes of conducting Divine service which had heretofore prevailed. A large proportion, however, of the clergy refused to introduce any novelties, and continued in their accustomed course.

This was brought under the Bishop's notice; and at the end of last month, in his circuit for Confirmation, he took occasion, each day, to address the clergy on the subject, and to strengthen his previous suggestions; making them, in some points, mandates or injunctions.

This went on for three or four days, producing considerable alarm among the clergy, but no one ventured to contest the Bishop's right to lay such injunctions, or declared any intention of resistance. By the time, however, that the Bishop reached the parish of Islington, the question had been considerably discussed, and the clergy of that district were not taken so entirely by surprise as had been the case on the former days.

They met the Bishop, seventeen in number, with the most entire respect; but with an earnest and unanimous remonstrance. He listened to them with the greatest courtesy and kindness; and the discussion ended by his granting to them a kind of latitude and discretion which he had not previously extended to any other parish.

The desired uniformity, then, was already at an end. Nor was it possible that the concession could end here. Whitechapel asked, and obtained, the like freedom; and Clerkenwell, which had at first submitted, now claimed the same immunity as Islington. Meanwhile, among the former parishes, whereon the original injunction to rubrical exactness seemed to rest with all its weight, the greatest perplexity prevailed.

In this hourly increasing confusion some of the laity began to stir themselves, in order to relieve their clergy of the onus of standing out, on their own sole responsibility, against an Episcopal injunction. Preparations were on foot for a Meeting, which would have been of a most important character, (Members of both Houses being eager to take part in it.) for the purpose of memorializing the Bishop to entreat him to reconsider his mandate.

Hearing of these intended proceedings, and laudably anxious to prevent any public manifestation, some gentlemen ventured to acquaint the Bishop with what they saw to be the prevailing feeling among the laity in general. His Lordship, who received their representations with the greatest patience and courtesy, seemed surprised at the excitement caused by what appeared to him a very natural and harmless proceeding on his part; and promised to take the matter into his consideration, and to endeavour to issue such a notice as should tranquillize the public mind.

That notice was circulated by the post on Monday morning, in a Circular Letter to the clergy. It is chiefly taken up with an endeavour to remove the alarm created by Archdeacon Hale's Charge, in which a revival of the Weekly Offertory was spoken of as the ultimate object. The Bishop distinctly disavows such an intention; only expressing a hope that the laity may be brought to accede to the practice of making such collections as are advisable, from pew to pew, during the reading of the Offertory sentences:—

Then follows the most important passage in the letter,—the passage, in fact, which gives the letter all its value. It is this,—"I extended the expression of that hope to "some other points of ritual uniformity, which I spoke of as desiring their introduction, but AS LEAVING THE TIME OF INTRODUCING THEM TO YOUR DISCRETION."

These "other points" were—the use of the Prayer for the Church Militant and the Offertory sentences;—and, the giving out the hymns by the minister instead of the clerk. These were the "other points," and the only other points adverted to; and by this Circular the clergy of the whole diocese are placed,—as they ought to be,—on a level with the Islington clergy; and are allowed to exercise their own judgment as to the best time of making these alterations in the Church Service; which time will hardly arrive, we apprehend, till the present excitement caused by the inroads of Tractarianism shall have almost entirely ceased.—Record.

DEATH OF THE REV. DR. FLETCHER.—We have this moment received the melancholy intelligence of the death of the Rev. Dr Fletcher, after a long and painful illness, which had latterly precluded all hope of his being spared for further usefulness to the Church of Christ, which he had so long faithfully served by his varied labours, and adorned by his piety, singular amiableness, and irreproachable consistency. The event has not taken his friends by surprise, but the loss sustained by his family and flock, and by the denomination of which he was an ornament, will not be the less deeply and permanently felt. Few men have succeeded in rendering themselves so generally beloved by all with whom they were brought into connexion. Of his eminent talents and acquirements, his "Lectures upon Popery," as well as many valuable single discourses, remain an honourable memorial.—Pat.

THE FREE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—The Pastoral Address by the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland has just been published. It contains a statement of the reasons why they could no longer remain in connexion with the State, and points out the duties of those who adhere to them. The following concluding paragraph gives a view of the position in which the "Free" Church of Scotland considers itself to stand:—"Finally, dearly beloved in the Lord, suffer us to remind you that the Lord Jesus is the Head of every man,—of every true believer,—and that those only can faithfully and truly maintain his headship over the Church who are themselves united to him as their own living head. Let us urgently intreat you to commune with your own hearts and be still,—to ponder the ways of God,—to mark the leadings of his Providence,—and to pray earnestly and incessantly for present light and grace to enable you to see and understand present truth, to guide and support you in present duty, and to prepare and strengthen you for present trial. This is manifestly a time when God is making a great work, and probably a short work, in the earth. The powers of good and evil seem mustering for a final struggle. The deadly wound of the Antichristian beast seems to be healed, and, closely leagued with infidelity, he advances to the conflict. We speak not now of contests between parties in the Church, or between the Church and the Civil Courts, but of the last grand conflict between the powers of light and darkness. We believe that the chief effect of our contests has been of a preliminary nature,—that they have served to bring forward opposing principles of still greater importance than themselves, and to commence a struggle by which all Europe will yet be convulsed. We would not rashly interpret the will and purposes of God. But it would seem as if the Christian Church, whose chief testimony, in the early ages of the Gospel, was on behalf of the prophetic office of Christ, which the Jews refused to admit, and the Gentiles long resisted,—and in the ages thereafter, on behalf of his priestly office, which the Antichristian apostacy disowned and denied,—were now called to bear witness, more especially, for the third great office of Christ, that of sole King on Zion, and Prince of the kings of the earth. Hitherto, the Church of Scotland has been the only Church that has openly and avowedly, in the midst of suffering, stood forward to bear testimony in defence of this Royal office. Well nigh three centuries are past since she first became witness for it. She has often suffered in its defence; and she is called to suffer for it now again. Surely the hand of God is here. Surely it is our duty and our wisdom to follow where he leads,—to take our position where he directs,—and to stand still there, waiting to see the salvation of God. Let us bear our great testimony as he may be pleased to appoint; and, in the meanwhile, let us labour zealously in rebuilding the walls of our prostrate Zion, though in troublous times, till the top-stone be brought forth with shoutings,—'Grace, grace, unto it,' and everlasting glory to Him who is King of Zion, 'King of kings, and Lord of lords.'"

We have heard that, in consequence of Lord Aberdeen's Bill, the Rev. Dr. Brown, of Langton, the Rev. Mr. Moncreiff, of Kilbride, and some others of the middle-men, have either left, or are resolved immediately to leave, the Establishment. Every vestige of Evangelical religion will soon be beyond the pale of the "Residuary."—Witness.

APOSTOLICAL SUCCESSION THE MOST GENERALLY RECEIVED, AND ONE OF THE WORST OF THE TRACTARIAN DOGMAS.—Perhaps the particular point in their theory, which is received with the most extensive favour, is, that of the "apostolical succession" of the clergy who have been episcopally ordained. There is something especially gratifying to the innate feelings of the human heart in the idea of possessing a peculiar privilege, a privilege which few (comparatively with the millions) can share; a privilege, too, which removes the Dissenting preacher into a totally different sphere, and renders it impossible that there should in future be any sort of competition or rivalry between the two. Hence it is not at all extraordinary that many clergymen, heretofore designated Evangelical, and who would cling to the doctrine of justification by faith, have adopted the views promulgated by the Oxford school on this point, and have been very earnest in insisting on the necessity of a regular commission, derived by the line of apostolic succession, to take a man out of the ranks of the laity, and confer on him the ministerial character, at any time, in any place, and under any circumstances.

We believe,—in fact we are certain,—that this tenet, embraced with zeal, has, in innumerable cases, led the recipients into Tractarianism, and in some, has landed them at last in Popery.

There is nothing at all difficult to understand in this. The tenet, in the Tractarian system, occupies a very important place, and is the centre of many other doctrines indissolubly connected with it; but embraced and asserted alone, as some of the Evangelical clergy have attempted to assert it, it leaves the mind of the inquirer craving and unsatisfied.

To one who has a firm hold of the doctrine of justification by faith, the whole theory of apostolic succession is a matter possessing little interest. But in the Tractarian system it is essential, always operative, and the source of all grace and virtue.

That system broadly declares that salvation comes, not by preaching, not by faith, but by the sacraments. It then goes on to argue, that the sacraments must be valid to be of the least utility; that to be valid and effectual they must be administered by one duly empowered to administer them; and that none can be so empowered but by receiving his commission from those who can trace their succession up to the apostles of our Lord, and so to our Lord himself. Fully believed and honestly carried out, this system carries the inquirer straight into the bosom of the Romish Church, as the only one which can fully and satisfactorily exhibit such a succession.

What would we do, then, with this modern fancy? Modern, we style it, for we apprehend that until within the last ten years, its very name has scarce been heard for something more than a century past, at least in the English Church. We would deal with it almost as Scott and Newton and Simeon dealt with it; that is, as not worth a serious discussion. We would deal with it as the apostle Paul dealt with it; for it must have been of some kindred matter that he spoke, when he so carefully warned both his successors; Timothy, "not to give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying;" and Titus, to "avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law, for they are unprofitable and vain."

Not once does the Church of England place the authority of her ministers, or the validity of her sacraments, on any such footing. "Those," she declares, "ought we to judge lawfully called and sent,"—not who can prove their succession to the apostles,—but, "which be chosen and called to this work, by men who have public authority given unto them in the congregation, to call and send ministers into the Lord's vineyard." Thus, in the most succinct and admirable manner, are all doubts and scruples set at rest, and the "foolish questions and genealogies avoided." Those preachers, therefore, who would go beyond the Church, and insist on that which she has so clearly refused to prescribe, ought to be careful lest they make both themselves and their hearers too high Churchmen, to rest content with the Church of England. While those who are apt to feel indignant at these follies, would do well to take a lesson of calmness and sober caution from the beautiful spirit and discretion exhibited in this Article.—Record.

The Bishop of Lincoln commenced his triennial visitation on Wednesday last, giving the first delivery of his Charge in the Cathedral at Lincoln. The Stamford Mercury says, "The sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Dakeyne, Perpetual Curate of St. Benedict, and was one of the most magnificent and triumphant refutations of the Tractarian jesuitry that has been delivered. The Bishop's Charge was not less so; there was no shirking the question. In the calmest and clearest possible manner, his Lordship reviewed the whole ground of the dispute, taking his stand upon the principles of the Reformation, and pointing to the martyrs as examples. From the Fathers, the decrees of councils, the creeds, &c., all the disputed doctrinal points were very lucidly stated and argued, to the disproof of the old heresy in modern shape." "Bishop Kaye distinctly avowed his belief, that, now, danger to the Church was only to be apprehended from the divisions within it; they all knew, from Divine authority, that a house divided against itself cannot stand."—Ibid.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—The following communication appears in the Ayr Advertiser:—

(To James M'Ilwraith, Esq., of Auchenflower.)

Kildonan, May 24, 1843.

My dear Sir,—In reference to our conversation respecting the Non-intrusionists, you are aware that I have been opposed to their claims, because I believed, and still believe, that the concession of such claims would have inevitably led to religious despotism—the tendency of all State religions, unless under the control law,—and the greatest curse which can befal the inhabitants of any country; but now that these reverend gentlemen have seceded from the Establishment, and rely upon the support of their several congregations, they are, of course, in the same position as other Dissenters who have found the yoke of a State religion too galling to be borne, and who benefit mankind by teaching the Christian religion. They are, therefore, exceedingly welcome to the use of my chapel at Barhill; and if they shall consider their doctrines are approved of by a sufficient congregation, I will, with pleasure, give them land whereon to build a chapel of their own and a house for their minister.

There is probably no chapel in the kingdom conducted on similar principles. It is my property, and I give the use of it to the Established Church—to the Seceder from that Establishment—and to the Cameronians, who preach therein upon alternate Sundays. The practice works well, and many persons regularly attend all the ministers.

When it is remembered that this chapel is situated upon the same farm where the Scottish Covenanters were murdered for opinion, it is delightful to see their descendants bearing witness by their practice to the principle,—that the differential doctrines of each sect are of very trifling moment compared to the vital point of Christianity, which has placed charity among the first of virtues.

I remain, dear Sir,
Yours faithfully,
RIGBY WASON.

DR. CHALMERS has resigned the Professorship of Divinity in the University of Edinburgh, a step which follows up in the ordinary course of the recent events in the church. The announcement was made in a letter to the Town Council of Edinburgh, in whom the patronage of the chair is vested.—Ibid.

PUSEYITE COLLEGE IN IRELAND.—A new college has been established by Doctor Elrington and Todd, Messrs. Sewell, &c., Lord Adare, and other individuals in the diocese of Meath. The Warden and Fellows were addressed at the opening of the college last week, by the Rev. Mr. Sewell. His address appears in the Ecclesiastical Gazetteer of this month. The college is called St. Columba, after an Irish saint of much celebrity; and, at the close of his address, Mr. Sewell ventures the supposition, that it may be owing to blessings bequeathed by St. Columba that, after a lapse of 1,200 years, this college has been, under the Divine Providence, erected! This college is wholly dependant on voluntary contributions.—Belfast Chronicle.

NEW BETHNAL-GREEN CHURCHES.—Every body has heard of the appeals which were made a year or two ago in favour of the erection of churches in Bethnal-green, and the flattering representations drawn of the benefits which would be conferred on the inhabitants, if the good natured friends of Church-extension would only be kind enough to erect in that neighbourhood twelve churches, answering to the twelve apostles, and put under their special guardianship; at least dedicated to them. Well, the appeal has found elderly gentlewomen enough to respond to it; and these grand remedies for the miseries of Bethnal-green are in course of erection; some of them, duly decked out à la Pusey, have been for some time open, and the following statement will show the degree of estimation in which they are held, and the amount of benefit they are likely to confer:—On the morning of November 17, 1842 at St. Peter's Church, which will seat 1,200 persons, there were present 194 adults, 149 children, and 4 teachers. At St. James' the Less, which also provides 1,200 sittings, there were 97 adults, 162 children, and 6 teachers. Both these churches are well situated. The first is in the Hackney-road, and the other at the intended entrance to the Victoria-Park, and the population is not of that poor or debased character which is so difficult to work upon by new churches. In St. Philip's Church, on the morning of November 20, 1842, there were present 26 adults, 194 children, with 5 teachers; and in St. Andrew's there were 40 adults, 138 children, and 5 teachers. Each of these churches has about 1,200 sittings. The last church has been opened about twelve months, and the attendance was larger than usual. One Sabbath morning in September there were only seven adults present. These are facts. And from these facts it is obvious that the zeal of ecclesiastics is ill-directed when employed for the purpose of erecting the material fabric of the church, and that it should be employed for the more important and more necessary work of domiciliary visitation, with a view to create a disposition for church-going. —Morning Advertiser.

BAPTIST WEST RIDING ASSOCIATION, HELD AT SHIPLEY.—The meetings of this body closed last night, after two days of very full attendance on very interesting services. Messrs. Ackworth, Pottinger and Dowson, preached on the occasion, and prayer meetings were held each morning at half-past six o'clock, and well attended. Many of the letters from the churches, which were read on Tuesday afternoon, gave very encouraging accounts of considerable increase to their numbers. 734 were added by baptism during the year, and, deducting deaths, removals, &c., the clear increase in the association amounted to 500. Many churches noticed the numbers they had received into their communion from their Sunday-schools, thereby exhibiting the wicked and irreligious tendency of Sir J. Graham's bill. Petitions against the bill, and against all the covert and avowed Church-extension bills now before Parliament, also against the Corn-laws as antiscriptural and unchristian, were signed by the bishops and delegates of the churches. Mr. Ackworth's sermon on Tuesday morning, from the text from 1 Peter ii, 16. "As free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God." was the ablest we have ever heard from the pulpit, on a Christian's duty to maintain his own freedom of every kind, to seek that of others, and to do both in the spirit of Christianity. Several very decided resolutions were passed against ecclesiastical tyranny. We know not what our Episcopal friends will think of one resolution, which recommends for congregational ministers the use of the title "Bishop," in order to disabuse the minds of the people of the notion that the New Testament knows anything of such bishops as govern other clergymen, and vote against the people's liberties and food in the House of Lords—to remind them that ministers of congregations are the only bishops known to the Bible.—Bradford Observer.

PUSEYISM.—The Pusey controversy continues to agitate Oxford, where a number of the Tractarian party lately assembled, presented an address to the Vice-Chancellor, inviting him to specify the grounds of the Hebrew professor's condemnation, which the Vice-Chancellor refused to do. It is now known that the Board of Heresy was unanimous in condemning the sermon. The charges were substantially—1st. Holding that consecration of the Eucharistic elements produced the real corporeal presence of Christ; the 2d, Eucharistic remission of sins (the doctrine of the mass).

Dr. Pusey's sermon has been published. The following is an extract from the preface:—

"Nothing throughout the whole sermon was further from my thoughts than controversy. I had, on such occasions as my office afforded, commenced a course of sermons on the comforts provided by the gospel for the penitent amid the consciousness of sin, with the view to meet the charge of sternness involved by the exhibition of one side of Catholic truth; in this course, the sacred subject of the holy Eucharist, of necessity, came in its order; and it was my wish (however I may have been hindered by sudden indisposition from developing my meaning as I wished) to point out its comforting character to the penitent in two ways:—1st, indirectly, because it is the body and blood of his Lord, and is the channel of His blessed presence to the soul; 2dly, because in holy Scripture the mention of remission of sins is connected with it.

"In essaying to teach this, I could not but forget controversy; having, in the commencement, warned against irreverent disputings, I lived for the time in holy Scripture and its deepest expositors, the Fathers, and was careful to use rather their language than my own, lest, on so high a subject, I should seem to speak over-boldly. Conscious of my own entire adherence to the formularies of my church, and having already repeatedly expressed myself on this subject and in the very outset of this sermon conveyed at once that I believed the elements to 'remain in their natural substances,' and that I did not attempt to define the mode of the mystery, that they were also the body and blood of Christ, I had no fear of being misunderstood.

"Once more to repeat my meaning, in order to relieve any difficulties which might (if so be) be entertained by pious minds, trained in an opposed and defective system of teaching before whom the sermon may now be brought." My own views were cast (so to speak) in the mould of the minds of Bishop Andrews and Archbishop Bramhall, which I regarded as the type of the teaching of our church. From them originally, and with them, I learned to receive in their literal sense, our blessed Lord's solemn words, 'This is my body,' and from them, while I believe the consecrated elements to become, by virtue of His consecrating words, truly and really, yet spiritually and in an ineffable way, His body and blood, I learned also to withold my thoughts as to the mode of this great mystery, but, 'as a mystery' to 'adore it.' With the Fathers then, and our own great divines (explaining, as I believe, the true meaning of our church), I could not but speak of the consecrated elements as being what, since He has so called them, I believe them to become His body and blood; and I feared not, that, using their language, I should, when speaking of Divine and 'spiritual' things, be thought to mean otherwise than 'spiritually,' or having disclaimed all thoughts as to the mode of their being, that any should suppose I meant a mode which our church disallows."—London Mail.

BRISTOL.—BAPTIST COLLEGE.—On Wednesday, June 28th, the anniversary of the Bristol Baptist College was held in Bristol. An examination of the students in several branches of study had been conducted by papers during the preceding week, and on Monday evening, the 26th, and during the following day, an examination was conducted both viva-voce and by papers. The report of the committee, as to the general state of the house, and the testimonials of the examiners, was highly satisfactory. On Wednesday forenoon essays were read by two of the senior students, Mr. William Aitchison and Mr. John Brown, in Broadmead Chapel: the former on some of the leading errors of Puseyism; the latter, on the advantages of an acquaintance with mental philosophy, viewed in relation to the Christian ministry. Immediately after the reading of the essays, an address was delivered to the students by the Rev. Dr. Steane, of Camberwell. Both the essays and the address were heard with great attention and much interest. The public business of the society was afterwards transacted in the vestry, and at three o'clock a large number of ministers, and other gentlemen, dined together in the lecture-room of the college. A service was held in the evening at King-street Chapel, when an appropriate and faithful discourse was delivered by the Rev. Thomas Swan, of Birmingham, from 2 Cor. ii. 16, and iii. 5. Both in the morning and evening there was a considerable increase of the attendance, as compared with former anniversaries, and the number of ministers and other friends, from the country, was larger than on past occasions. The accounts of the year terminate with a balance due to the treasurer. The committee have, however, resolved on admitting as large a number of candidates as possible for the ensuing session. The whole number of students will, it is expected, amount to twenty-two or twenty-three. The committee and others were, therefore, in no little degree gratified by a generous proposal, made at the dinner table by a steady friend of the college, the Rev. Dr. Steane, of Camberwell, to contribute five pounds annually, on the condition that the additional number of such contributors could be made up to ten. Four other gentlemen readily came forward to unite in this kind effort, Joseph Tritton, Esq., London; John Shoard, Esq., Bristol; Richard Jones, Esq., Bristol; and William Crose, Esq., Bristol. It is earnestly hoped that this example will be followed by others among the liberal supporters of this college.—Pat.

THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—On the 28th, a public meeting of the Free Presbyterians of Scotland was held at Exeter Hall, for the purpose of receiving a deputation of ministers and elders, and in order to adopt measures for aiding that church in its efforts to diffuse the gospel in Scotland. The Marquis of Breadalbane was called to the chair. He said the event which had called them together was the most important which had occurred in the Presbyterian Church of Scotland since the Reformation. The voluntary secession of 500 of the most pious, the most intelligent, and most zealous ministers of that church, with nearly a million of persons composing their congregations, was eminently calculated to solemnize the thoughts, and to excite the sympathy of all thinking men. To support these men in their present pain and trouble, to call forth Christian sympathy, they were that day assembled.—The Rev. Mr. Gray, in a speech of great length, deplored the present condition of the Church of Scotland. The feeling of the people of Scotland was in favour of an established church; and voluntaryism, such, for instance, as Methodism, Wesleyanism, and other sects, had never been enabled to succeed. Scotchmen had ever claimed and desired a national church, which should embody the opinions and feelings of the people. Amongst such a people divisions of such a disastrous nature as those they had lately experienced should never have been introduced. The Rev. Dr. Cunningham said that, like his esteemed friend who had just preceded him, he was a few weeks since a minister of the Established Church of Scotland. In common with him, and nearly five hundred of his brethren, headed by the distinguished ornament of the church, the Rev. Dr. Chalmers, they felt constrained for conscience' sake to resign the status and emoluments which, as ministers of the church, they had formerly enjoyed. After referring to the discussions which had recently taken place between the law lords and Lord Aberdeen on the questions which have so painfully agitated the Church of Scotland Dr. Cunningham entered upon a lengthened statement of the position and plans of the non-intrusion party. It would, he said, be necessary to erect churches for 700 congregations, to found a college for the education of their future ministers, and to establish a theological library for their use.—Mr. Beecham, a Wesleyan minister, moved a resolution expressive of a hope that, by friendly co-operation with other bodies of Evangelical Christians, the Free Church of Scotland might regain the religious eminence which in other days she occupied.—The Hon. Fox Maule, M P., seconded the resolution, which was carried unanimously. Resolutions expressive of sympathy were agreed to.—London Mail.

The following is given by the Scotsman as an estimate of the emoluments surrendered by the clergymen who seceded from the church of Scotland:—"The stipend, in the lowest class of livings in our established church, is 158*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; and the Manse and glebe being valued on an average at 41*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, the poorest benefice is worth 200*l.* per annum. Were the teinds (tithes) are exhausted, and do not yield 158*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, the deficiency is supplied from the Exchequer. There were 196 out-parishes where the teinds were exhausted, but yielded 255*l.*, including manse and glebe; and 470 parishes, with free teinds yielding about 282*l.* The average of 872 livings, paid from teinds and Exchequer grants, was 257*l.*, including manse and glebe. The value of the livings in towns, which are paid from taxes, seat rents, or burgh funds, may average about 350*l.* per annum. These data being premised, the incomes given up may be estimated as follow:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 267 | parochial ministers at 270*l.* .. ... .. | £72,090 |
| 17 | parliamentary ditto, whose stipend, we believe is 120*l.* .. ... ... ... ... | 2,040 |
| 17 | assistants, say 60*l.* .. ... ... .... | 1,020 |
| 164 | quoad sacra ministers, say 125*l.* .. ... | 20,500 |
| 4 | professors, say 400*l.* .. ... ... ... | 1,600 |
| | | £97,250 |

The aggregate of the incomes surrendered may, therefore, be estimated, in round numbers, at 100,000*l.*, which is two-fifths of the whole revenue of the church. The average for each of the 469 individuals is 207*l.* Many of the seceding ministers are among the best paid in the establishment."—London Mail.

THE FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—The Free Church is exciting great interest in London. A deputation from Scotland is in town, and a series of meetings is in course of being held; and after these, a general meeting is fixed to take place in Exeter-hall on Wednesday the 28th. In the provinces friends have been raised up, having no connexion with our suffering Church, except as Christians will sympathise with their injured brethren, and seek to uphold principle when it is outraged. A large committee has been formed in Manchester to raise funds to aid our cause. Pulpits have been offered in Leeds and elsewhere. From Leamington we have two invitations. From Taunton another. Literally, our friends are found from Dover to Dunnet Head; between 230,000*l.* and 240,000*l.* have already been subscribed by the people of Scotland. All the friends of evangelical truth and sound principles in the world must now be convinced that we have not applied to them for aid without in the first place endeavouring to exhaust our own resources. But still we are far short of the sum required for building before winter five hundred Churches, whilst, if we had the means, a thousand places of worship are required to meet the claimant demands made upon us from all parts of Scotland. The most encouraging result of all is, the growing and most urgent demand for the preaching of the Gospel. We understand, that though the acting committee had a hundred ministers and preachers ready to enter the field, employment could instantly be found for them all, in addition to those who have already gone to their stations. The Secession Church was founded by four men—it now counts five hundred congregations, the growth of a century. The Free Church is founded by four hundred and sixty—by the blessing of God, what will its increase in a century amount to? Ere half that cycle be described, where or what will the Established Church in Scotland be?—Witness.

NEW IRON STEAM AND SAILING VESSELS FOR MISSIONARIES IN AFRICA.—Mr. John Laird, of North Birkkenhead, is now constructing a fine iron schooner, to be fitted up with Mr. Smith's patent screw propeller, as an auxiliary to her sails. The engine power will be comparatively small, but will be of great advantage, in calms and light airs, in navigating the coast and rivers of Africa, for which she is destined. The engines are being made by our townsmen, Messrs. Forster and Co. She is, we learn, intended for the use of the Baptist Missionary Society, and, we should think, will be found to be all that can be desired for the important and humane purpose in view.—Liverpool Standard.

NEWSPAPERS IN AUCKLAND.—The Auckland Times is described as being "printed in a mangle," and a strange piece of typography it is accordingly. The style of the mangle is quite sui generis. It may be observed, that the occasion of its being printed by such a machine is stated by the editor to have been the attempt of the local Government to stifle public opinion, by refusing the proprietor the use of the only printing materials in the settlement, those of the Government, as soon as it was perceived that the Times was determined to be very independent in its strictures on public doings and misdoings. The phrases suggested by the peculiar circumstance are very amusing—"We stop the mangle to announce the arrival of the St. George."—"The Governor will repent having driven us to the mangle," &c. The typography embraces, sometimes within a single paragraph, almost every specimen in the printer's book. Brevier, Nonpareil, large Roman, and italics, mingle together to give force and variety not only to successive words and sentences, but even to successive syllables of the same word; and the want of the small k, in particular, obliging the printer, in every place, to make use of the larger Roman K, adds strikingly to the appearance of the page.—Ibid.

THE CUSTOM HOUSE FRAUDS.—The number of cases already detected and prosecuted, with many others yet to be brought forward, or in train of prosecution, hosts of others, indeed, if report may be credited, would seem to attest a system of Custom House frauds too large in its proportions, and carried out upon much too extensive a scale to have been the fortuitous result of the isolated occasional, and uncombined delinquencies of some two or three corrupt officers. There are signs of the organization, method, and regularity of practice about it which go far to show that the system is not the work of one, but of many hands, that it was not perfected in a year, but has been at least the growth of a decade.—Record.

OXFORD.—At a late Meeting of the Ashmolean Society, Dr. Buckland read some interesting letters detailing the discovery of the bones of a gigantic bird, which must have recently inhabited New Zealand, should it not be proved to be still an inhabitant of that colony. The first announcement of its supposed existence was conveyed in a letter from Mr. William Williams, dated February 28, 1842, in which he says that hearing from the natives that an extraordinary monster inhabited a cave on the side of a hill near the river Weiroa, he was induced to offer a reward to any one who should produce either the bird, or one of its bones. In consequence, a large bone, but much worn, was soon produced; and shortly after, another of smaller size was found in the bed of a stream which runs into Poverty Bay. The natives were then induced to go in large numbers to turn up the mud in the bed of the same river, and soon brought a large number of bones, which proved to have belonged to a bird of gigantic dimensions. The length of the large bone of the leg is two feet and ten inches; they have been found a little below the surface, in the mud of several other rivers, and in that situation only. The bird to which they belonged is stated to have existed at no very distant period, and in considerable numbers, as bones of more than thirty individuals had been collected by the natives. Mr. Williams had also heard of a bird having been recently seen near Cloudy Bay in Cook's Straits, by an Englishman accompanied by a native, which was described to be not less than fourteen or sixteen feet in height, which he supposes to be about the size of the largest of those to which the bones belonged. Of these bones one case has already arrived, and a second is daily expected. A letter from Professor Owen, dated January 21, 1843, detailed the contents of the box which has arrived, and from these fragments it was clear that they had belonged to the species of bird which the Professor had already described in the Zoological Transactions, vol. iii. p. 32, pl. 3, from a fragment of a femur which he had received some time previous.—Ibid.

The proportion of persons in the United Kingdom who pass their time without applying to any gainful occupation is quite inconsiderable. Of 5,812,276 males, twenty years of age and upwards, living at the time of the census of 1831, there were said to be engaged in some calling or profession 5,466,182.—Ibid.

RECONCILIATION OF LORD BROUGHAM AND THE "ILLUSTRIOUS" BY COURTESY.—On Tuesday, Lord and Lady Brougham had a soirée at their mansion in Grafton-street, when the King of Hanover was pleased to honour the Noble and Learned Lord with his company.—Ibid.

On Monday morning, the Rev. Samuel Kidd, A. M., aged forty-two, Professor of Oriental and Chinese Literature in a University College, London, expired at his own house in a moment. On a post mortem examination, the surgeon was of opinion that he died from congestion of the lungs, produced from want of circulation of blood whilst in a fit of epilepsy. —Ibid.

Noah Webster, L. L. D., the well-known American author of the English dictionary, died at New Haven, in the State of New York, on the 30th of last month, in the eighty-fifth year of his age.—Ibid.

UNSWORN TESTIMONY.—An act has just been passed to enable the Legislatures of Colonies to pass laws to receive "unsworn testimony" in civil and criminal proceedings. It is declared by the preamble, that there are resident within the limits, or adjacent to the British Colonies, various tribes of a barbarous and uncivilized people, who being destitute of the knowledge of God, or of any religious belief, are incapable of giving evidence on oath in any Court of Justice in the Colonies; and it is provided to remove the doubts existing, whether any law made by the Colonial Legislature to receive the testimony of such persons would not be repugnant to the British Constitution, and therefore null and void; that from the passing of this Act all laws so made in the Colonies, or to be made, shall have full effect, notwithstanding any repugnancy to the laws of England.—Ibid.

The medical commission sent by the Russian Government to Egypt has announced that the experiments made to purify by heat objects impregnated with the contagion of the plague, have perfectly succeeded. They promised to show, by further trials, the efficacy of caloric as a specific means of destroying the pestilential miasma.—Galignani's Messenger.

The King of Prussia has sent an answer to the request of the States of the Rhenish Province to be allowed to publish reports of their sittings. His Majesty grants the request, and declares that the reports may be published without undergoing previous censorship, but the reporters are to take an oath that they give a faithful and conscientious account of the proceedings.—Ibid.

MRS. SIGOURNEY AND MRS. SOUTHEY.—Some time since, Mrs. Sigourney gave publicity to a letter received by her, from Mrs. Southey, the wife of the poet, recently deceased, in which the sad infirmities of her then dying husband were most touchingly alluded to. The publication of the letter occasioned very severe remarks in one or two of the London papers, in which Mrs. Sigourney is accused of a great breach of propriety, and also of having "interpolated the letter with phrases implying intimacy and ejaculations of pathos, not one of which she (Mrs. Southey) ever penned." Though the character of our excellent countrywoman is quite too well established to need the vindication, the editor of the Hartford Courant made a triumphant one. He has been favoured with the perusal of the correspondence, and states authoritatively that there is not the slightest foundation for the charge of interpolation. And as to the impropriety of the publication of the letter, Mrs. Southey's own estimate of it may be judged from the fact that she has since written to Mrs. Sigourney in the most cordial manner approving her work, and thanking her for [in her own language] "the publication of those few words of mine, to which you have done too much honour—both to them and to their writer."—New York Evangelist.

FRANCE.—Economy is the order of the day in the resolutions of the Chamber of Deputies. On Monday and Tuesday it discussed some augmentation in the expenses of the French establishment at Pondicherry, "which no longer pays its expenses." The Minister asked for 8,000*l* for the charitable part of the fêtes of July, which, in consequence of the melancholy fate of the late Duc d'Orleans, are to be solemnised this year merely by alms and funeral service. Grants to the Italian Opera and to other theatres have been rejected by the commission, with a hint that so fashionably attended a place of amusement ought, at least, to pay its expenses. Increased grants to the clergy have been also rejected. Four millions of francs demanded for works on the Strasburg and Paris railroad line have been rejected, on the ground that the company has offered to take the line when completed. The commission also objected to Government holding and working any railroad, even the small lines joining Lille and Vallenciennes to the Belgian frontier. But all these reductions and questions will come before the Chamber during the discussion of the budget.—Pat.

AUSTRIA.—The Augsburg Gazette of the 2nd instant states that the Austrian Government had concluded a loan with MM. de Rothschild of 50,000,000 florins, to be applied to the construction of railroads. —Ibid.

THE ROYAL FAMILY OF FRANCE.—It is understood (says the Constitutionel) that the Duke de Nemours will go to receive the Prince de Joinville and his bride on their arrival in France; but, as even Royalty is not exempt from the quarantine laws, the Duke will have time between the receipt of the telegraphic despatch announcing the coming in of the Belle Poule, and the termination of the salutary restraint, to go from Paris to the port.

The Duchess of Orleans, on Wednesday, paid a visit to the hospital in the Rue de-Sevre, for sick children of the poor, and for old persons suffering from incurable ailments. Her Royal Highness still inhabits the Pavilion Marsan, with her two children, and passes her time in study and charitable works. Her carriage is frequently seen before the door of the hospital above mentioned.—French Paper.

THE REAL RULER OF FRANCE.—"If it be true," says the Courier Français, "that the apathy of the Ministry be such that it might be imagined they had resigned, the most incredible activity prevails at Neuilly. From morning till night there are conferences, councils, and receptions. In fact, it is calculated that on an average not less than 250 couriers or orderly dragoons bearing despatches pass through the palace gates every day.—Record.

AMERICA.—The advancement making, and already made here, through the aid of steam, both in inland navigation and land locomotion, is wonderful. As a proof of this fact, it may be noticed that from the city of New York to the city of Buffalo in the same state, being a distance of 500 miles, the journey is now performed in thirty-four hours.

Some opinion may be formed of the commerce of the lakes by the following statement:—One day last week there arrived at Buffalo fifty-eight steam-boats and other vessels, all full freighted. The principal articles comprising their cargoes were 27,053 barrels of flour, 60,720 bushels of wheat, 2,268 barrels of ashes, 2,391 kegs of lard, 4,471 barrels of pork, 395 barrels of beef, 765 barrels and kegs of Butter, besides a variety of other agricultural products. The greater portion of this produce finds its way through the Erie Canal to Albany, and thence on the North River to the city of New York.

By a provision in the Constitution of Massachusetts, an absolute majority over all others is necessary before a candidate can be elected to congress; the effect of which is, frequently, that there is no choice. In four of the Congressional districts of that state several unsuccessful attempts have been made to elect representatives Another trial is about to take place, but it is doubtful whether they will succeed any better. In three of the districts, there is a decided Whig majority; but the abolitionists and a small portion of dissatisfied Whigs, by running their candidates, are sufficiently numerous to defeat an election. There is, therefore, a probability that the state will lose four representatives in the next Congress by this constitutional provision.—Record.

A monument is about to be erected at Wurzburg, to the memory of the celebrated Minnesinger of that city, Walter Van der Vogelweide. Its execution is intrusted to the sculptor Halbig. The monument will represent birds feeding from a vessel, having reference to Walter's strange will, that four holes might be made in his gravestone, that the birds might drink daily from them: hence his name, Van der Vogelweide, "he of the bird pasture."—Ibid.

HAYTI.—There has been a reduction of duties in all the ports on the islands, one-half of the following articles.—Beef, pork, flour, rice, cod fish, lard, butter, mackerel, and herrings. In the ports of Port-au-Prince, Gonaives, Cape Hayti, Port-au-Platt, Aux Cayes, and the city of St. Domingo, the following articles are free:—Boards, planks, scantlings, shingles, nails, tiles, flagging stone, paints, and all other articles used in building houses. Vessels are not permitted to go to only one port in the island to discharge their cargoes, but can go to other ports to take in their outward cargoes. This takes effect on the 10th May.—Ibid.

We learn from Kingston, Jamaica, that ex-President Boyer has been demanded by the Provisional Government of Hayti, but the demand will in all probability not be complied with. It is stated that the planters are making an effort to substitute the cultivation of cotton for the sugar cane.—Ibid.

AFRICA.—We some time ago noticed the call of a gentleman of colour to the bar of the Middle Temple. That gentleman, possessing an ample fortune, and having passed his various examinations, at Cambridge, with great credit, entered upon his career as a barrister, in Jamaica, where he has manifested the very first-rate talent, and promises, ere long, to be the leading member of the bar. He is already a member of the Legislature.—Pat.

REAL DESTINATION OF THE IRISH NAVAL SQUADRON.—A remarkable letter appears in the Dublin Evening Post, from its London correspondent, stating that the formidable naval armament organising at the Cove of Cork, has been ordered, not for any Irish object whatever, but with a view to possible and probable events in Spain, where a feeble Government finds itself unable to cope with daily augmenting difficulties, and factious plots, which are organising in all directions. Besides, it is well known that the King of the French still sets his heart upon the darling project of wedding the young Queen Isabel to a Prince of Bourbon, an arrangement which Great Britain has the deepest interest in preventing. Under these circumstances, it has been deemed advisable to prepare a naval armament at Cove, a convenient windward port to the Peninsula, to be in readiness at an hour's notice, to sail for the coast of Spain, should the emergency require it.—Ibid.

AMERICA.—The Great Western arrived at Liverpool yesterday morning. She sailed from New York on the 25th ult., and has made the passage in thirteen days and twelve hours. She has brought 127 passengers, among whom is Mr. Jaudon, the celebrated American financier.—Pat. June 12.

TEXAS AND MEXICO.—Accounts from Yucatan contain descriptions of actions between the Texan and the Mexican naval forces on that coast. The Texan artillery caused serious damage to the Mexican vessels. On shore the Mexican forces had sustained serious disasters. The army of 2,000 men sent against Merida, the capital of Yucatan, had surrendered themselves prisoners of war; and the troops before Campeachy were on the point of capitulating to the Yucatans. These successes had insured the independence of the Republic.—Pat.

CRIMINAL LUNACY.—The following questions have been submitted to the judges by the House of Lords, and their lordships have been summoned to attend on Monday the 19th instant, when a reply will be given:—1. What is the law respecting alleged crimes committed by persons afflicted with insane delusion in respect of one or more particular subjects or persons, as, for instance, where, at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, the accused knew he was acting contrary to the law, but did the act complained of with a view, under the influence of insane delusion, of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or injury, or of producing some supposed public benefit?—2 What are the proper questions to be submitted to the jury, when a person alleged to be afflicted with insane delusion respecting one or more particular subjects or persons, is charged with the commission of a crime—murder for example—and insanity is set up as a defence?—3. In what terms ought the question to be left to the jury, as to the prisoner's state of mind at the time when the act was committed?—4 If a person under an insane delusion as to existing facts commits an offence in consequence thereof, is he thereby excused?—Can a medical man, conversant with the disease of insanity, who never saw the prisoner previously to the trial, but who was present during the whole trial, and the examination of all the witnesses, be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, or his opinion whether the prisoner was conscious at the time of doing the act that he was acting contrary to law; or whether he was labouring under any and what delusion at the time?—Ibid.

New Law against Dacoits.—The British Government, on taking possession of the administration of Bengal in 1772, found the country infested with dacoits, or gang robbers. These Dacoits were represented by the President in Council, as "not being like the robbers in England, individuals driven to such desperate courses by sudden want; they are robbers by profession and even by birth; they are formed into regular communities, and their families subsist by the spoils which they bring home to them: they are all therefore alike criminal wretches who have placed themselves in a state of declared war with Government and are therefore wholly excluded from the benefit of its laws." Hence it was deemed necessary to attempt the "suppression and extirpation of Dacoity by regulations dictated by a spirit of rigor and violence, very different from the caution and lenity of other proceedings, and which in some respects involved the innocent with the guilty." It was resolved that the criminal should be executed; that the village of which he was an inhabitant, should be fined, and that his family should be sold into slavery, "for the general benefit and convenience of the people."

This rigorous and violent punishment was subsequently commuted to death, transportation and imprisonment, according to the degree of the offence, and a reward of 10 Rupees was ordered to be paid to the Darogah for the apprehension of every Dacoit. But the crime does not appear to have been suppressed, much less extirpated; for we are told in the Preamble to Reg. IX. of 1808, that the "continued prevalence of the crime of Dacoity in some districts, and the importance of suppressing a crime so injurious to the peace and happiness of the community, rendered it necessary that further provisions should be adopted to facilitate the apprehension of Sirdar Dacoits." The reward for apprehending offenders was raised to 500 Rs., and it was enacted that any person accused of the crime should be proclaimed, and required to make his appearance in Court within two months; that if the proclaimed individual was apprehended or surrendered himself after the period stated in the proclamation, the judge, on being satisfied of his identity, and of the fact of his contumacy, should adjudge him to be imprisoned and transported for life. This stringent law has not apparently succeeded in eradicating the crime. In the draft of a law published last week the public are informed that it has been "considered necessary to adopt more stringent measures for the conviction of professional dacoits, who belong to certain tribes, systematically employed in carrying on their lawless pursuits in different parts of the country." It would appear therefore that in the seventy-first year of our administration, the crime of Dacoity, or gang robbery, is still rife, and that our institutions have signally failed to extirpate a crime, which we might naturally suppose would have been among the first which a settled and vigorous Government would succeed in suppressing. Our failure in this respect, which has been so complete, does not appear to have arisen from the want of suitable rewards for the apprehension of dacoits, or of severity in the punishment of them. It is now hoped to eradicate the crime by sentencing to transportation for life any person proved to have belonged to a gang of dacoits; and by ordaining that any person accused of the offence of Dacoity, or of having belonged to a gang of dacoits, or of having unlawfully or knowingly received or bought property stolen or plundered by Dacoits, may be committed for trial by any Magistrate, and tried by any Session Judge.

We venture to think that even these more stringent measures, will not be found effectual. If the execution of the offender has been insufficient to deter from the commission of the crime, we cannot see how a less severe punishment will produce a more salutary effect on the minds of these hardened offenders. The crime has continued to flourish, not because it was not denounced by the laws, or because the restricted jurisdiction of the courts afforded the guilty chances of escape, but for want of an efficient administrative Police, to track the steps of the dacoits, and pursue them from haunt to haunt till they found the country too hot for them and their profession. Neither has the existence of these professional robbers, now announced in the new law, been brought to light by the exertions of Magistrates or Darogas. From the depositions which have been submitted to Government and presented to public notice, it appears that dacoities the most atrocious, have been perpetrated for a long series of years, with perfect impunity, by large gangs of hereditary and professional dacoits, under the very nose of the Courts. It was when the establishment which had been so effectually employed in the suppression of Thuggee, was let loose on them, that the fact of their existence in the very heart of the country became clearly established. It is now proposed to extend the Acts which have been passed for the suppression of Thuggee to persons concerned in the perpetration of Dacoity. This is highly proper; but we want also the Machinery which has been used for the extirpation of that crime employed against the crime of Dacoity. If the Dacoits still continue to evade the vigilance of our Police,—and while the Police remains on its present inefficient footing, they will continue to do so,—it will be vain to affix the punishment of transportation to the crime, or to make it cognizable by any Magistrate and any Session Judge. It is highly judicious to make all proper arrangements for committing, trying, and punishing the criminals after they are caught, but they will only laugh at this apparatus of justice while we neglect to adopt the most effectual measures for catching them.

The Hurkaru in Trouble.—Our contemporary has got into more trouble than ever he experienced from defending that good Samaritan, Akhbar Khan. Last Saturday week he published a brief notice regarding the new appointment of Deputy Magistrates, and mentioned the first ten or twelve districts to which they were to be posted, as well as the salaries they were likely to obtain. No one we believe thought much of the intelligence at the time, or ever dreamt that the Hurkaru was likely to be brought into difficulties for being the first to announce this bit of news to the world. No one doubted that the new Deputy Magistrates would be appointed to the districts where they were likely to be most needed, and few were ignorant that they were most wanted where there was most contention between the peaceful Indigo planters and the war loving Zemindars. As to their salaries, there was almost as little novelty in telling us that they were to receive from 800 to 500 Rs. as in announcing that it had been ascertained on the very best authority, that their salaries were to stand somewhere between One Hundred and One Thousand a month. It was apparent that to give them less than 300 Rs. a month, when they were entrusted with Magisterial power, would in fact be to connive at their making up the deficiency by turning power into money; and no one ever supposed that, being uncovenanted, they would receive more than 500 Rs. a month.

The intelligence has however it seems thrown the Secretariat into a violent perspiration. It was evidently obtained from some bureau in the vicinity of Government House; and the fact that any public office should be so leaky as to allow political intelligence of such importance to ooze out, seems to have given as much alarm as the oozing out of the silver from China, gave the Son of Heaven. To those who know how little interest is attached to the matter, it will appear surprizing that the Official circle should have lost the balance of its mind from such a cause. If the secret thus revealed had referred to the object of this new Army of Exercise, with a train of forty-eight guns; or to the steps which Lord Ellenborough intended to pursue towards the Khasgee wallah, and the Gwalior state, or had it even enlightened us as to what his Lordship intended to do with, or without, the Military Board, there might have been some justification of this stir in the Office; but to 'kick up such a shindy,' as the pilots term it, about so paltry a matter as, the names of the districts which were to be first blessed with the presence of a Deputy Magistrate, and the amount of their monthly pay bill, is very ludicrous.

It seems however to have created a far greater commotion than that which arose from the discovery that Tharawaddy had bribed the Foreign office, and obtained copies of all the correspondence between Government and the Resident at Ava. We are told that the most searching enquiry has been instituted in the Home office, to discover the delinquent; and that the search having proved ineffectual, it is determined to make a clean sweep of all the clerks, rather than to allow the transgressor to remain in it. Of this new practice we say nothing; it will not last long. When the heats of the moment have subsided, the old maxim of English law and common justice, that it is better that ten guilty should escape, than that one innocent person should suffer, will again come into vogue; and the new rule of reading this maxim backward, and considering it better that ten innocent should suffer than that one guilty should escape, will not survive three years. Indeed we do not know but that we are doing very great injustice to the honorable men who preside over that office, in admitting the suspicion, that they could for a moment have entertained so preposterous an idea.

But if the delinquent be found, we do not see how he can be punished with strict justice. The information was published in the Hurkaru of Saturday morning. The Notification forbidding all persons in office to communicate to others—that is, to the Press—any information they had officially obtained, was not promulgated till twelve hours after. That Notification first made it an official offence to give such information as the Hurkaru has received. At the time our contemporary obtained it, the communication was, so to speak, innocent,—if not innocent, it was at the farthest a misconception, a kind of sin of ignorance, which could not justly be visited with the same punishment as a sin of wilfulness. We put it to the serious consideration of the Home Office whether this would not virtually be to punish men by an ex-post facto law. If our voice could be heard in that vicinity we would advise the Secretary to let bygones be bygones; to summon the whole office, from the Registrar to the youngest Sectioner, and cause the Notification to be read to them aloud, and then to inform them that if ever they were caught in future infringing it; if they dared to communicate even to their darling wives, any thing of which they could only have become cognizant officially, were it even the cut of the Under Secretary's coat, they would be summarily expelled the office, without benefit of their clergy.

The Hurkaru, it appears, has been asked to exculpate particular individuals, and thus save their situations. But he very wisely suspects that if this process is repeated, the real culprit will eventually be detected, and he hesitates to adopt it. This is certainly a very philosophical mode of discovering the truth, and is evidently borrowed from the Hindoo Shastrus. It is the mode which one of the six Schools of Philosophy recommends for ascertaining who or what is God. The enquirer is required to go from one created object to another saying Tun-no, Tun-no, "this is not He," "This is not He," and thus, succeeds in ascertaining what is not God. But as the uncovenanted assistants in the Home Office, consist of a definite number, the result of such a process would speedily be to discover who was the revealer of this state secret. Our contemporary has acted discreetly in rejecting this plan of worming the fact out of him.

THE CALCUTTA CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER:—We publish a letter from Anglo Vernacularis relative to the quotation we made last week from the last number of the Calcutta Christian Intelligencer. The writer seems to think that a subsequent sentence which we did not quote, gives an entirely different turn to the sentence which we copied. We cannot see that it affords any excuse for the sentiment which we felt it our duty to reprobate. It appears indeed to do little more than exhibit the very inconsistent views of the writer. The whole passage reads thus: "It gives us sincere satisfaction to learn that the Bengalee Patsalah in Calcutta is in a declining state; the native students have consulted better for their own interests, than the clique of Europeans who organized the School with the design of giving the boys a complete education through the medium of the vernaculars. So may every scheme perish which is based on narrow minded and partial views. ... We are warm friends to the diffusion of an elementary education through the vernaculars, but no liberal education can be afforded without the study of English. The Watch word of all the true friends of education ought to be Anglo-Vernacularism."

The failure of any attempt to diffuse knowledge through the medium of the vernacular tongue must always be a subject of regret, and cannot upon any reasonable or Christian ground be considered a matter of exultation. What the writer means by "Anglo-vernacularism," we are unable to comprehend. Does he mean that every English seminary must also teach the vernaculars; or that every indigenous School must have its English teacher; or does he mean that there are to be two distinct classes of schools; the one, vernacular, for the poor; the other, English, for the rich? It is very certain that we cannot give more than one in ten thousand of the Natives of the country the benefit of an English master. At the end of fifteen years, the students of English do not exceed seven thousand, among seventy millions of people. There are no means even of doubling this number; we have reached the limit of our resources. The great bulk of the people, 9999 out of every 10,000, must therefore receive instruction in their own vernacular tongue and in that tongue alone, or remain the victims of ignorance, vice and superstition. That vernacular education should consequently be rendered as complete as possible. To rejoice therefore over the failure of any endeavour to lay the foundation of the completest education which the great body of the people are capable of receiving, through their own tongue, is to express a sentiment which nothing can justify. To say moreover that a plan based upon this principle is narrow minded and partial, appears to us to betray no ordinary degree of narrow mindedness; while to express a hope that every attempt to give a complete education to the people through their own language may fail—but we will not attempt to characterize it.

The education we are able to give the people in their own tongue may not be so liberal, or so complete as that which we aim to give to the students of our English Schools; but completeness is a relative term, and admits of many degrees. The instruction which the great majority of the students in the English Seminaries in Calcutta, are likely to receive, is itself any thing but complete; it is much more incomplete when compared with the education of our Universities, than the instruction which may be communicated through the vernaculars is, when compared with it. In neither instance is there any cause for contempt, nor would it be justifiable to wish that either of these inferior efforts to communicate knowledge should perish, because there were other institutions in which superior knowledge was communicated. The true philanthropist will take a comprehensive survey of the circumstances of the country, and adapt his measures to the position of the people, and to the extent of his means, giving to those who have leisure and opportunity for the acquisition of English, the completest education which can be given through that language; and to those who can receive instruction only through their own tongue, the most complete education of which it can be made the instrument.

We should be happy were we able to see richer fruits than are now apparent of this liberal and complete English education which has been given to the natives during the last fifteen years, at an expence of not less than 30 lakhs of Rs. or 300,000£. The great advantage of instruction in English is said to be, that it furnishes the student with the desire as well as the means of indefinite improvement, and enables him, after he has left the College, to complete his education by subsequent study. The efforts of the last fifteen years, have doubtless placed fifteen hundred Natives in this elevated and advantageous position; if they have not done so, they must have signally failed. If they have not imparted to fifteen hundred Natives a desire to keep themselves abreast of the age; and enabled them to understand and to appreciate a newspaper, they have done little or nothing. A newspaper is the first intellectual want of civilized man. Every body reads it with more or less avidity, except statesmen and Cabinet Ministers. Yet we find that the entire number of copies of the Hurkaru, the Herald, the Calcutta Star, the Eastern Star, the Englishman, and the Friend of India, subscribed for by the natives, does not exceed One Hundred and thirty. Thus the whole sum devoted to the purchase of English newspapers, by the enlightened Natives of Bengal, in imparting our language to whom we have spent thirty lakhs of Rupees, does not exceed 6000 Rs. a year, or 500 Rs. a month. We cannot account for this singular phenomenon on the ground of their poverty; for the youths who have crowded to our seminaries belong to the wealthy and patrician classes of society; and we will venture to affirm that twenty, yea, thirty times the sum they devote to Newspapers is annually expended by them in marriage ceremonies, in funeral rites, and in idle and superstitious ceremonies.

THE DEPUTY GOVERNOR OF BENGAL.—The Englishman on Friday last adverted to Lord Ellenborough's recent order forbidding the officers of Government to make public documents or information which had come officially into their possession, without the previous consent of Government—which in its present mood will never be given. He stated that numerous conjectures were afloat as to the origin of the prohibition, and drew the conclusion that some particular circumstance had been made public which was intended to remain in the sanctity of official secrecy. Then follows the following remarkable passage:

"We have indeed heard of plans of finance being deranged by the transactions of individuals, and as information on such subjects is a marketable commodity, it is more likely to be sought for than what relates to other public business. But there are methods of divining the intentions of those in authority which do not involve a breach of confidence on the part of those to whom official papers are entrusted. The Thugs when they go on an expedition will not march till they hear the call of a certain bird. The Bengalee brokers, though perhaps not equally superstitious, are equally watchful of the signs of the times, and the indications of a rise or fall in the public securities. What the exact omens are which in their opinion point the way to fortune is unknown to us, but we are told that they neither watch the flight of eagles like the Romans, nor that of partridges like the Thugs, nor is it either the flight or the cackling of the fowls to which they attend, but there is a certain Bird whose movements they closely follow when engaged in feathering his own nest, and by attending to what he picks up, and what he rejects, they draw conclusions which, as they assert, are invariably found correct. The superstition is probably an idle one, but it is impossible to reason persons out of it who have made money by attending to it."

The plain meaning of this paragraph is, that the Honourable Mr. Bird, the Deputy Governor of Bengal, and when the last financial measures were adopted, the President of the Council of India, took advantage of the knowledge which his situation gave him, to "feather his nest," by speculating in the public securities of the Government of which he was in Calcutta the Head; and that the Native brokers, by carefully watching "what he rejected and what he picked up," and by "closely following his movements, were enabled to make money." In what light the Englishman may view such conduct we know not, but we think there can be no diversity of opinion as to its baseness. An individual who is capable of thus turning his official knowledge to his own private advantage, must be ipso facto, incapacitated for any official trust, and totally unfit to direct the movements of the state. The higher the agent, the higher and purer must be the objects he sets before him, and the motives by which he is guided. To suppose that the Head of Government is capable of making his public measures, which ought to be dictated solely by a view to the public interests, subservient to his own private profit, is to suppose a total disorganization of the administration. We will not condescend to assert that the charge is utterly without foundation; it has only to be mentioned to be scouted; but we cannot suppress our astonishment that any public journal should venture, without the clearest evidence, to bring so heinous a charge against a gentleman of the most honourable feelings, much less against one who sustains so high a position in the Government of the country. If the Englishman believes he has any solid grounds for such an imputation, let him bring them forward openly; and let the charge be fairly and honestly sifted; if not, let him at once withdraw it, and make the only amends in his power, by acknowledging, with contrition, that he has been misled, by some base and unprincipled traducer. Surely a long life of integrity in the public service, an unstained reputation of forty years, ought to have exempted Mr. Bird from the possibility of so degrading and unfounded an insinuation.

THE LATE LIEUT. LOVEDAY.—The Rev. Mr. Loveday, a Chaplain on this establishment, has recently published a letter in the Delhi Gazette to the Editor of the Bombay Times in defence of his deceased brother, the late Lieut. Loveday, the Political Officer in charge of Khelat when it was surrendered to the insurgent Beloochees. The Bombay Editor, in the History of the Affghan campaign which he is publishing in his own journal, had written in disparaging terms of Lieut. Loveday, chiefly on the authority of Mr. Masson, the author of Travels in the countries to the West of the Indus, who was a companion of the deceased officer at the time of the siege, and in his subsequent captivity. The object of the communication we now notice is to vindicate his character as a man and as an officer from the aspersions of Mr. Masson. We have carefully read through Mr. Masson's work, and noted down the passages in which he alludes to Lieut. Loveday's conduct, in order to compare the refutation with the charge. The time required for the perusal of the volume must be our excuse for this protracted notice of the subject.

Mr. Charles Masson, was formerly in the Company's Artillery, but was selected for his talents for staff employ, in which he appears to have acquitted himself with such satisfaction, that a promise of his discharge was held out to him. The fulfilment of it however was so long delayed that he used the liberty of taking his own dismissal, without leave asked or given. We gather from his works that he is a man of considerable ability, and of cultivated mind; and a keen observer of men and things; that he is moreover a man of eccentric habits of mind and body, which his long residence among rude and barbarous tribes has not served to correct; that he has a difficult and somewhat impracticable temper, and is not without a very considerable share of vanity. He considers his services to have been underrated by Government, when the expedition was sent across the Indus into a country with which he was familiar; and he seems to have deeply felt the refusal of one of those confidential posts, which in our administration is never conferred except upon a covenanted servant. He has therefore a strong bias against all the officers, without exception, who were employed in political duty in Affghanistan, and he has treated their character and their memory with little consideration. He has also positive grievances to complain of, which contributed to embitter his feelings in reference to Belochistan. He was made a prisoner at Quetta by Capt. Bean, the Political Agent, on suspicion of being a Russian spy; a measure which it is impossible to defend. It is true that Mr. Masson was travelling, unaccredited through Belochistan; that he was on terms of intimacy with the chiefs of the land both hostile and friendly, and that he appeared at Khelat a short time before the outbreak. But he had previously been employed in the British service; he was well known to the Officers of our Government; he had nobly assisted Lieut. Loveday in the defence of Khelat; he had shared the rigors of his captivity; he was the bearer of letters from Lieut. Loveday and from the Chiefs, who were then in the ascendant, and had engaged faithfully to return to them. He was most anxious to do so, though at the peril of his life. In these circumstances, his arrest as a spy, upon vague suspicion, will admit of no justification, and his subsequent exculpation from every charge, after a minute and searching enquiry, leaves us no option but to attribute his detention to a wanton exercise of power.

The spirit and tone of the Rev. Mr. Loveday's vindication of his deceased brother are in the highest degree objectionable. He scarcely ever alludes to Mr. Masson, but as a criminal. We seldom remember to have seen a paper in which one human being was treated by another with such bitter scorn. The Rev. Gentleman seems altogether to have overlooked how incompatible it was with his own sacred profession, to indulge in terms of abuse, under any provocation. He has entirely forgotten how fatal the intemperance of the advocate, is to the cause he espouses. If we did not know from other sources that Mr. Masson's charges against Lieut. Loveday were unfounded or exaggerated, we should be strongly led to believe their truth from the vindictive spirit of the present letter; for a cause which stands in need of such weapons of defence, must be indeed desperate. In his letter, Mr. Loveday uses every endeavour to force on the reader's attention the fact that Mr. Masson's desertion from the army stamps his character with infamy, and renders all his testimony, in reference to the Political Officers employed beyond the Indus, utterly unworthy of credit. We fully admit that the well being and even the existence of an army depends upon the prevention of desertion; which is on that account justly considered the first of military crimes. But there may be circumstances in individual cases which would go far to soften down its moral turpitude. We are not going to palliate the crime of desertion, but we protest against its being considered, as a proof that the deserter is incapable of ever after speaking the truth. Though Mr. Masson did use unwarrantable means for relieving himself from a position which, to a man of his cultivated mind must have been intolerable, he may, after all, be a man of generous and honourable feelings, and of the strictest veracity. There are many other dispositions of mind besides that in which desertion originates, which would render a man's testimony extremely suspicious. A feeling of blind rancour, and inveterate hostility is likely to cast greater doubt on the character of assertions than the mere fact of their being made a deserter. So far therefore as the Rev. Mr. Loveday has rested the defence of his brother on the moral degradation to which he considers Mr. Masson's military guilt to have reduced him, he has done it much harm.

The charges brought by Mr. Masson against Lieut. Loveday may be classed under three heads; his oppressive conduct towards the people; his inactivity during the siege of Khelat; and the measures pursued by him towards the disinherited prince, Nusser Khan. And here it should be remarked at the outset, that Mr. Masson's opinion of Lieut. Loveday has evidently been influenced by the evil impression made on his mind by the very unnatural position in which he stood at Khelat. They were the only two Englishmen at that place at the time. Mr. Masson arrived there in the afternoon, but did not wait on the Political Agent till the next day. He was informed that Lieut. Loveday had remarked this omission and said he was a "low fellow." The remembrance of this remark was never obliterated. The next day, he called on Lieut. Loveday and was asked to dinner. He had no watch, or he was unpunctual. When he arrived, he found that Lieut. Loveday had dined, but that some thing had been left for him. He was sent home on a Camel, and asked to breakfast the next morning. He refused to go, and the parties continued to reside in the same town without seeing each other, till the siege commenced. Meanwhile the most unfavourable reports were given to Mr. Masson of the observations made on him by Lieut. Loveday, which the former unfortunately received with implicit credit. The estrangement was thus rendered bitter, and Mr. Masson's mind became so deeply tinctured with prejudice against the young officer, as to throw a degree of suspicion on all his representations regarding him.

He states that immediately on his arrival he found that actions so singular were imputed to him, and of a nature so different from what are usually looked for from British officers, that he was disinclined to credit them. Immediately after, he calls them enormities. He states that during the siege Lieut. Loveday dared not move from his house from the feelings with which he knew he was regarded; and that he did not take personal charge of the siege because of his unpopularity. But the only instance adduced of misconduct is his having let loose his dogs on the people, who hold that animal in abhorrence. We are told that he had two ferocious animals of the bull dog species; that a laborer who had been forced to work at his house and had incurred his displeasure, was worried to death by the dog which was let loose on him; and that "the dread of vengeance limited the expression of public feeling to low and sullen murmurs, but rumour spread the catastrophe with rapidity over the country, and their indignation was loudly avowed and vengeance determined." We are further informed on this subject that the Daroga, Gool Mahomed, who is supposed to have ordered him to be murdered, said that his blood boiled at the sight of him, as he had "fed his dogs on human flesh." To disprove the general charge of tyrannical conduct, the Rev. Mr. Loveday adduces his brother's own letters, which certainly exhibit a very amiable disposition, and a regard for the Natives perfectly incompatible with the character which Mr. Masson has drawn of him. Mr. Loveday also gives satisfactory evidence that he had but one dog, and that it was a pet bull terrier. This evidence is much more satisfactory than that of Mr. Masson, and we are strongly inclined to believe that the charge of unpopularity, arising from personal misconduct, has been effectually refuted. That charge is rendered still more improbable by the conduct of the people, whom these enormities are said to have exasperated to madness. After the capture of the town, when Lieut. Loveday was without protection and entirely at their mercy, he was actually allowed to remain for some time with little molestation, in his own house, which he could not have defended. Had he rendered himself so obnoxious to the town and country, the infuriated rebels would have torn him to pieces in the first moment of victory.

Of his conduct during the siege, we have two versions, his own and that of Mr. Masson, and they differ diametrically from each other. Mr. Masson says that he did not personally take charge of the siege, though urged to do so, on account of his unpopularity; that he took no interest in the defence of the town; that from the commencement of the revolt he was overpowered by a langour which, except at momentary intervals, apparently incapacitated him for any efforts of mind or body, and to such an extent that his Hindoo servant Sampat in vain endeavoured to rouse him; in fact, that the siege of Khelat was marked by precisely the same inactivity and submission to the current of circumstances which subsequently proved so fatal to the army at Cabul. He states moreover that after a treaty had been made with the insurgents, Shah Newaz, endeavoured to break it off and to maintain his post, and in this was opposed by Lieut. Loveday, who maintained constant intercourse with the rebels, making arrangements with them for the deposition of Shah Newaz, at the same time that he manifested the utmost friendship for him, and indulged in personal familiarities; and that the Shah asked if all Europeans were equally unmanly. Mr. Masson also affirms that the Shah did not desert Lieut. Loveday, but that Lieut. Loveday deserted him.

A letter of that officer quoted by his brother in which he details the progress and result of the siege, gives however a very different view of the case. Lieut. Loveday says:

Sir,—You seem to have obtained accurate intelligence regarding the attack on Quettah, but failing in their attempts, the rebels returned to Mustong, from whence they marched to Khelat and arrived here on the morning of the 24th ultimo. Shah Newaz Khan had previously been encamped with the intention of marching against Mustong, but when he heard of the advance, he broke up his camp and took post in the town; instead of one thousand five hundred, not five hundred men could be mustered, and more than three-fourths were traitors! I had but thirty men, and took charge of the Northern wall, and Mustong gate, that by which our troops entered on the 13th November, while the other gates were placed in charge of his own Sirdars and their followers. As soon as the rebels arrived (stated to be three thousand), they commenced the attack by a fire of musketry and matchlocks from cover of the houses and gardens, opposite the Eastern wall. It was continued all day, and to a late hour at night, when they withdrew with a loss of eighteen killed and wounded, whilst ours amounted to seven within the walls.

"The day of the 25th passed over quietly, only a few straggling shots. I went round the walls, issued ammunition, and gave rewards and promises in abundance. As soon as it grew dark, the enemy commenced the attack with vivacity, their efforts being again directed against the Eastern gates and the tower to the South. When a report was brought to me that they had escaladed the Western wall in charge of the Pundranee, Nesharee, and Juttuk Brahoes, I sent off a Havildar's party to their assistance, who cleared the wall at the first volley, and drove them back with loss, for I saw a mass of dead at the foot of the ladder. Some thirty of the enemy had, however, got into the town, but finding their support cut off, were soon made prisoners. From their confession it appeared, and subsequently proved beyond doubt, that the men in charge of the wall, where they had effected their entrance, had invited them to plant their ladders there, and helped them to get in. This glaring treachery discouraged Shah Newaz, who came to me in the evening of the 26th and told me he had no hope of holding the place, for that the defection had spread through all, with the exception of some thirty or forty men with his brother-in-law. I proposed disarming and turning out the traitors, but it was of no avail, and he proposed making terms whilst yet in his power. The negociations lasted two days, the result of which was that he should retire with his property to Baghtaana, whilst it was expressly stipulated that I should have free permission to remain here, or return to Shawl with due protection for escort and baggage, and Shah Newaz, urged me to accompany him, but it looked too much like a flight, besides he had signed a formal abdication forswearing all claim to the Musnud, or connection with us.

Shah Newaz Khan retired on the 31st, whilst the son of Mehrab Khan was placed on the Musnud, under the name and title of Nusseer Khan. He has expressed an earnest desire for peace, all he wants is bread. I have recommended him to send a Vukeel to Shawl, and shall remain here until the result is known—if peace is granted, well and good—if war, I must of course return, and, though I anticipate no danger to myself or men, yet I dare say they will plunder my property.

Shah Newaz Khan has behaved meanly: all he cared for was himself, and to accumulate wealth, which he has carried off, and to have accompanied him after his abdication and renunciation of us, would have been [illegible] unbecoming, and though there is danger here, yet as it seemed to me my duty, I at once adopted it.

It is impossible to reconcile these conflicting statements. It is a question of veracity between two authorities which can be decided only by other evidence obtained after the reoccupation of the place by our own officers. Mr. Masson's vanity which is very egregiously displayed in his book, may have led him to estimate his own services in the siege too highly; and his prejudices may have led him to underrate those of Lieut. Loveday. On the other hand, Lieut. Loveday does appear to have despaired of holding out, with his handful of sepoys, and a few treacherous allies, against a whole country in arms; and there is every reason to believe that, under no circumstances could he have maintained his post against such fearful odds. There is however sufficient evidence from Lieut. Loveday's own correspondence to shew that, however estimable he may have been in private life, and however skilled in the Native languages, and anxious for the improvement of the people, he was not exactly the man for the crisis which had arisen.

As it respects his conduct towards the son of Mehrab Khan, then in arms, and his adherents, there can be no doubt that he pursued the most stringent measures to put down the insurrection, and to restore tranquillity. Mr. Masson says on this subject that after Nusser Khan, whom he pursued in person, had escaped him, the tribes who afforded him shelter, were subject to general plunder, and that scenes were enacted so infamous that these present spoke of them with horror. This information is derived from Native report, from those who were opposed to the British authorities, and who probably fancied that the most ready way of pleasing Mr. Masson was to decry Lieut. Loveday. We are also told that he said he would have blown Gool Mahomed from a gun if he had caught him, and that he took credit for having cleared the Mollah pass by executing the chief in this mode. Of these latter statements we can say nothing; but there is evidence that he pursued the severest measures towards the fugitive Khan and his followers, and reduced them to the greatest straits. To the officers appointed to negotiate with them, they complained that Lieut. Loveday had set a price on the head of Nusser Khan. He doubtless thought it his duty to adopt the sharpest measures to extinguish the rebellion; and the hatred he incurred among the insurgents may be only an additional evidence of his zeal, however misplaced, as a public servant. But his fatal error consisted in the appointment of a Native as the farmer of the Moostung district, who goaded the people to rebellion by his oppressions, and brought the deepest odium on the British name. The people of that district at length rose in arms, and Lieut. Loveday's favourite moonshee was the first victim of their rage. This gleam of success augmented their hopes and their confidence, and within a few days the country, which might apparently have been kept in subjection by a thousand troops and a few guns, passed away from our rule.

We have thus endeavoured to exhibit as impartial a view of the case as possible. The absence of all independent evidence to corroborate the assertions of Mr. Masson and the Rev. Mr. Loveday is a calamity. Mr. Masson's statements regarding Lieut. Loveday, are not weakened in the smallest degree by the fact that he deserted from the ranks of the army; but they are seriously affected by the strong prejudice which he had imbibed against that officer, and must therefore be received with considerable allowance. On the other hand the defence is lamentably weakened by the unhappy spirit of detraction which pervades it, and which is almost enough to ruin the best of causes. Still, we are disposed to think from a careful perusal of all that has been written on both sides of the question, that the charge of personal violence towards the natives is disproved by satisfactory testimony; that the imputation of indecision and inactivity during the siege, rests upon firmer ground, and that Lieut. Loveday was placed in circumstances to which his mind was not equal; and that the severe measures which he pursued against the youthful son of Mehrab Khan, though adopted from a sense of public duty, were injudicious in themselves, and inauspicious in their result.

CHINA.—Intelligence has been received from China to the beginning of August. The treaty duly ratified by the Chinese authorities has been dispatched to England. The Regulations for the future management of the trade in China, as well as the Tariff of duties to be paid to the Chinese Government have been definitely arranged and made public. They have the singular merit of giving general satisfaction. This is more remarkable, as they have been drawn up by Sir Henry Pottinger, without any aid from the mercantile community, who appear throughout the negotiations to have stood aloof from his Excellency, and left him to the resources of his own mind and experience. The Tariff is justly described as a noble specimen of Commercial legislation. It is based upon soundest mercantile principles. The duties are fixed upon a moderate scale, and are calculated to afford every encouragement to the trade. While they benefit the foreign merchant, they will be found eventually not less favourable to the interests of the Chinese Exchequer, which is likely to draw a much larger revenue from the augmented traffic which they will promote, than was obtained under the old system of high and arbitrary duties. The port charges which formerly fell so heavily upon smaller vessels, have also been fixed at a reasonable rate; and all those extraneous charges to which the trade was subject, when the Chinese treated us as outside barbarians, will entirely cease. The readiness with which the Chinese Government has agreed to so radical a change in its commercial system, and to the reduction of duties, which it cannot but regard as detrimental to its interests, is not the least marvellous feature in this transaction.

The arrangement now made has effected an entire revolution in the system of dealings with a people who cling with more than Conservative tenacity to whatever has the sanction of established custom. The trade which was limited to one port is now extended to five. The whole of the eastern Coast, embracing the provinces most distinguished for population, enterprize and wealth, is thrown open to intercourse with foreigners. Instead of being limited in their dealings to a close corporation of Hong merchants, foreigners have now free access to all merchants. These changes in the external relations of China cannot fail to produce great changes in the interior of the country among the people themselves; to create new wants and new interests in the empire; and to associate the preservation of those interests with the continuation of this trade. The improvement now effected will diffuse new life among the industrious classes in China, impart fresh animation to the spirit of enterprize, and thus render the disruption of intercourse at any future time, difficult, if not dangerous to the Government. Neither is it possible to estimate the political effect which may result from the establishment of a new and extensive intercourse between the civilized world, and this vast empire, teeming with energy and ingenuity.

The Regulations established for the management of the trade at the various ports, are simple, intelligible and just; and appear to be well calculated, by the spirit of equity which pervades them, to prevent any collision between the Chinese and foreigners, and to render their mutual intercourse, harmonious. Much will depend upon the temper of the Consuls, who will be placed in a delicate and invidious position between the haughty but subdued Chinese, and the haughtier and triumphant English; and it will require much tact to reconcile the minds of the Chinese authorities to the principle of equality on which our intercourse is now based. The Consuls are likely to have no sinecure. The labours thrown on them by the Regulations are more than it is possible for a single individual to manage; and the Consular establishments will soon require to be strengthened.

The Regulations and the Tariff make no allusion to the Opium trade, which was the immediate cause of the last war. But it appears that Sir Henry Pottinger is resolved to discourage this contraband traffic to the utmost of his power. He has forbidden Opium to be stored at Hong Kong. This has given umbrage to the Opium merchants, who have consequently expressed their unwillingness to settle on the Island. He has also determined that the Consuls shall afford no countenance whatever to any British vessels employed in smuggling, or evading the payment of the just dues of the Chinese Government, and he has directed them to take immediate steps for intimating the fact to the Chinese authorities. If the traffic in opium be included in the term smuggling—of which there can be little doubt—the British officers now for the first time established in Chinese ports are not only forbidden to give any support to it, but are enjoined to use every effort to eradicate it. Thus the British authorities in China are devoting all their energies to the suppression of a trade which the British Parliament has authorized, and which the British authorities in India are employed in nourishing. This anomaly cannot long be suffered to continue. The necessity of discouraging the contraband trade in China must speedily lead to the relinquishment of the Opium monopoly by the Government of India, and the substitution of an export duty in its stead.

It is suspected that the harmony of our intercourse with the Chinese will not be of long continuance, and that we must prepare for a second and more sanguinary conflict at no distant period. The Chinese, it is said, though humbled to the dust, have still unshaken confidence in their own strength, and attribute their late discomfiture to circumstances which they are able to remove. Some month or two ago it was stated that the whole empire resounded with warlike preparations, and we now learn that the Bogue Forts have been rebuilt and made stronger than ever; and that every effort is made to turn the experience of the last war to account by introducing improvements into the manufacture of arms. The Emperor has yielded to circumstances with an apparent grace, but with internal anguish; and this is no matter of surprise. It must have been with feelings of more than ordinary bitterness that the haughty monarch of one third of the human race, who had been accustomed to treat foreign nations with the most sovereign contempt, submitted to ransom his empire by a heavy tribute, and affixed his signature to a treaty dictated by the outside barbarians under the walls of the ancient capital after a series of unchecked triumphs. The proud soul of the Tartar sovereign must have boiled with indignation as he traced his name with his vermilion pencil on that humiliating document. That he should make preparations to try the issue of a second war with us, is not to be wondered at. Nothing however is more likely to postpone this conflict to an indefinite period, than the establishment of a large and beneficial commerce, which shall diffuse wealth and content among his subjects, and render them unwilling to lose these advantages. Nothing so likely to hasten it as the continued prosecution of a contraband traffic in the drug which the Cabinet of Pekin considers so fatal to the welfare of the people. If we have a second war, it will probably originate in the outrages committed along the coast by the opium smugglers.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 7.

— An advertisement, which appears in the last Calcutta Gazette, states the quantity of Salt in store at the various public depots at 61 lakhs of maunds. Supposing Government to receive a profit of two Rupees and a half upon each maund, here is a little purse of a million and a half sterling from a single article.

— The Madras papers give us reason to hope that about 180 tons of the Ice of the Angelo, is destined for Calcutta. It is long however in arriving.

— There is news from China to the end of July. Hong Kong has been erected into a Colony of the Crown, by Letters Patent, and the Capital is to be denominated Victoria. The whole of the debts of the Hong merchants have been liquidated, not however without subjecting the richer of them to large sacrifices. The General Regulations for the conduct of the trade and the Tariff have been published, the former we have placed among our selections; and it was expected that the four northern Ports, which are to be the resort of British merchants under the treaty, would be open in the beginning of September after an Imperial Edict had been received from Pekin. In the Proclamation issued on the publication of the commercial treaty, Sir Henry Pottinger gives the following very judicious assurance to those trading to China of his determination rather to exceed the powers vested in him, than to allow the spirit of the arrangement to be violated. "At the same time, it is the duty of the Governor in the responsible and unprecedented situation in which he has been placed by the course of events, to distinctly intimate, that he is determined, by every means at his disposal, to see the provisions of the Commercial Treaty fulfilled by all who choose to engage, in future, in Commerce with China, and that, in any case, where he may receive well-grounded representations from Her Majesty's Consuls, or from the Chinese Authorities, that such provisions of the Commercial Treaty have been evaded (or have been attempted to be so), he will adopt the most stringent and decided measures against the offending parties; and, where his present powers may not fully authorize and sanction such measures as may seem to him fitting, he will respectfully trust, that the Legislature of Great Britain will hold him indemnified for adopting them, in an emergency directly compromising the National Honour, Dignity, and Good Faith in the estimation of the government of China, and in the eyes of all other Nations."

— The last letters from Berhampore state that Ensign Kent, a fine young officer, has just died of a nine days' Berhampore fever. This is the fifth officer who has fallen a victim within a few months to the insalubrity of that station. Government has very wisely determined that no young officer shall be allowed, except under the guarantee of relatives, to do duty at Barrackpore, and this for the health of his purse. For the health of his body, no youth ought to be sent to do duty at Berhampore.

— Sir Jasper Nicolls has, we find, taken his passage on the January Steamer from Bombay.

— The last arrival from China has brought us the first numbers of a new journal called the Eastern Globe, which has just been started there. This makes the fourth English paper published in China.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 8.

— The interesting ceremony of presenting new Colors to Her Majesty's 10th Regiment now in the Fort, took place in the Fort yesterday afternoon. The very appropriate and impressive address made by His Excellency Sir Hugh Gough on the occasion, will be found in another column. In the evening, the Regiment entertained Sir Hugh and Lady Gough and a large party at a ball and supper.

— The Delhi Gazette gives a very dismal account of the health of the troops at Sukkur. The number in hospital was 918, besides those in the lines who are excused from duty on account of debility. One Surgeon, two Assistant Surgeons, and thirteen officers are suffering from fever and dysentery. The Artillery are able to man two guns only, and the three Regiments could not muster more than 500 men fit to bear arms. H. M. 13th Light Infantry is to proceed in a month or two to this station, where the Regiment is likely to suffer more from the effects of the climate than it suffered from the hostility of the Affghans.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9.

— The Relief of the Army in the approaching cold weather has not been officially published, but it has transpired; and we learn with surprize that three Regiments now at half batta stations are to be removed to other half batta stations, and thus be subjected for two or three years more to diminished allowances. It is to be hoped that this act of injustice, will be remedied before the programme of the Relief is promulgated. While this most unjust, most arbitrary, most preposterous Order continues to disgrace our Military Code, it should be made as little oppressive as possible. Lord Ellenborough at the dinner just given to him in Calcutta, stated that before coming out, he informed the Directors that he intended to take especial care of the interests of the army. It is to be hoped therefore, that he will not fail to send home his own protest against the continuance of this heavy grievance.

— Some years ago the Court of Requests in its wisdom decided that a man was answerable for all the debts contracted for his wife, while a spinster. It therefore became necessary for every man wishing to become a benedict to enquire whether the young lady's School bills had been paid. The principle has just been banished from the Court. A gentleman has been sued for a debt contracted by his wife during her spinsterhood, and the plaintiff has been nonsuited.

— The Queen Steamer has arrived at Bombay with General Simpson on board, but without the Hon. Mr. Maddock. All conjectures regarding the object of his visit are therefore at an end. He did not leave Calcutta to restore the Ameers of Scinde.

— The Victoria Steamer left Bombay on the morning of the 27th of August for Suez. The Calcutta regular Dawk of the 13th and the Express of the 14th arrived before her departure.

The number of letters and newspapers sent by this opportunity is as follows:—Papers, 9734; Letters, 35,653. Total Covers, 45,387.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 11.

— The Calcutta Gazette of Saturday evening publishes an order for the assemblage of an army on the banks of the Jumna near Agra, under the personal command of the Commander-in-Chief, to be called the Army of Exercise. It is to consist of 4 troops of Horse Artillery and 11 Companies of Foot Artillery, 3 Companies of Sappers, 3 Regiments of Dragoons, 3 Regiments of Regular and 1 of Irregular Cavalry, and the Body Guard, 3 Regiments of European and 9 of Native Infantry; in all 17,000 men. The assemblage of so large a force at a large expense for the mere purpose of exercise is so unusual, and the state of the public finances renders the establishment of so expensive a precedent so improbable, that the object is likely to partake more of a political than a military character. It is probably intended rather to produce an impression on the disaffected, than to afford our own Officers a lesson in the art of manœuvering large bodies of men.

— The Delhi Gazette states, that Mr. Clerk, the present Lieut. Governor of the North West Provinces, positively goes home at the beginning of next year, possibly in company with Sir Jasper Nicolls, and that the Governor General resumes charge of the North West Provinces.

— The Bombay World is dead. The babe seems to have been swamped to death in the fourth month of its brief existence. A week or two ago, it complained of being "deluged with matter," which it could not make up its mind how to dispose of. From the effects of this deluge it appears never to have recovered, and the next notice we have of it, is in the bills of mortality. It was chiefly remarkable for its warm eulogies of Lord Ellenborough.

— The only intelligence from Lahore is that General Avitabile has leave of absence for twenty days to visit Ferozepore and Loodiana; and that General Court has been permitted to resign the Sikh service, and intended to embark with his family on the Sutlege for Bombay. The reconciliation between the powerful minister and the feeble occupant of the Lahore throne, is said to be complete.

— The latest letters from Sukker are of the 24th instant. The number of the sick and the dying was increasing daily. Of the 55th, not fewer than 530 were in hospital. The whole number unfit for duty exceeded a thousand.

— The Madras Athenæum states, that Dr. Lane does not vacate his situation at the Eye Infirmary in consequence of the increase which has been made to his salary as Private Secretary to the Governor. The salary of this latter office has been raised to 1500 Rs. inclusive of all emoluments.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12.

— The Star publishes letters from the Benares and the Tirhoot districts, which give rather an unfavourable account of the probable out-turn of the present Indigo season. But partial failures in particular localities, will not alter the general character of the season, which is one of extraordinary abundance.

— Not a newspaper from any quarter has reached us this morning, a most unusual occurrence, to be accounted for only by a very excessive fall of rain. It is to be feared that the roads will be so much cut up thereby as to interfere with our hopes of receiving the Express by the 18th. In our own neighbourhood we have had a rich abundance of rain since the full moon, and the prospects of the husbandman have been brightened.

— Farther particulars are given in the papers of the robbery committed at the office of Messrs. Turner, Stopford and Co. A police officer and two peons were going their round about four in the morning, and on passing the door of that office perceived a suspicious looking man there. He went up to the gate and saw a bag lying there, and took it up, which the robber endeavoured to snatch from, but he was himself secured by the peons in attendance, and a large number of bank notes were found about his person. The bag was full of money. Another bag of money was also found in the stable; the whole sum being about 4500 Rs. It seems that the robber, who was a burkundaz, had got a false key made, and with it had opened the iron safe in which the money was lodged. The case has been made over to the Magistrate, and will doubtless be handed up to the Supreme Court.

— A case of Forgery has also been brought before the Chief Magistrate. Mr. J. C. C. Sutherland had accepted a draft for two thousand Rupees, and when it was presented for payment was found to have been altered to Seven thousand.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 13.

— The Bombay papers expect the August Mail between the 6th and the 8th of this month. We ought therefore to receive it on the 17th, at the farthest on the 18th. The roads have however evidently been much injured by the late rains, as the Bombay Mail which arrived yesterday, has been thirteen days on the road.

— The Madras Spectator last received, states that the sum of 1500 Rs. a month to which the Court of Directors have just raised the salary of the Private Secretary of the Governor of Madras, is to include the whole amount which that officer may draw from the Treasury, whatever other situation he may hold. Dr. Lane, will therefore continue his services at the Eye Infirmary, without receiving any additional allowance for it.

— His Excellency Sir Hugh Gough, the Commander-in-Chief, embarked on the Steamer at Calcutta yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock, and proceeded to the Upper Provinces. He is accompanied by the members of his own family and Staff, and by Major General Smith, the Adjutant General of the Queen's troops, and his Lady, and Major Craigie, the Deputy Adjutant General of the army.

— A correspondent of the Star in the number of this day, has strongly advised the Governor General to dismiss Col. Sleeman from his post of Commissioner of the Sagor and Nerbudda Territories, and Bundlekund, and to appoint Major Leech to the office. The summary removal of all the officers employed in those territories, which is attributed, we believe, without the smallest foundation to Col. Sleeman, has brought a nest of hornets about his ears.

— We are happy to learn from the Agra Ukhbar, that Cholera has entirely disappeared from the station. Only a very few cases have appeared in the city, and none in the cantonment.

— From the same authority we learn that the car which brought the Somnath Gates to Agra, is now employed as the Station Hearse. Well does the Editor remark, "To what base purposes may we return, Horatio."

— The wife of Col. Baptiste, one of the officers expelled from Gwalior, has arrived at Agra, and reports that the troops of Col. Jacob's brigade had taken the Usurper prisoner. We knew that he dared not move out of his house for fear of the refractory soldiers; if he has been captured, all government will soon be at an end, and the country will fall a prey to military license; unless the Army of Exercise should take a little exercise across the Jumna.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

SIR HUGH GOUGH'S ADDRESS ON PRESENTING THE COLOURS TO H. M. 10TH REGT.

Sir Hough Gough then said, "Major Strickland, Officers, and men of the 10th; it was when I was last here in the character not of your Commander in Chief but of a private individual, that my excellent and gallant friend, your Colonel, asked me to perform the duty of presenting to you your colours. It is a duty I would have always been proud to perform, but it is more grateful to me, when I come among you to fulfil it as your Commander in Chief.

You see before you those colours, now blessed and consecrated as the rallying point to which your soldiers' hearts must cling, the one, emblem of the glory of your native country, the other, representing the honour of the regiment. There is not a man of the 10th Regiment who I am certain would not defend those consecrated banners at the price of his best blood. Under them may it be the fate of your officers to lead you on to victory, and in a common feeling as fighting under them you are bound together man to officer. The tie that connects the soldier to his chief is one of the most near and intimate, while officers should look upon those they command as their children, and feel that it is their interest no less than their duty to cultivate the connection between themselves and those whom they may be called on to lead into action fighting for their country.

Recent practice has introduced into the British Army a habit whereby circumstances have not permitted the 10th Regiment to profit; I mean that of inscribing on the colours of each corps the name of every glorious action in which it has been distinguished. Circumstances have interfered of late years to present to the 10th Regiment by casual accidents from partaking in the active triumphs of their fellow soldiers. But it is not for this that I will pause in taking from the history of the Regiment, bright examples of that brilliant conduct which every British soldier should emulate. You bear no names upon your honoured colours, men of the 10th, but look back to the old days of Marlborough, and to Bunkers Hill, and then contemplate the gallant actions of your predecessors in the ranks of that Regiment which you have the honour to belong.

I can only say that if as your Commander in Chief, it should be my fortune to see the chance of war call your active energies into play, there is no Regiment that I would more gladly find arrayed under my orders, and believe me that should such a chance occur, I will use my best endeavours to see the 10th Regiment entrusted with a position in the force employed to which they are certain to do honour."—Star, September 8.

THE PRUBHAKUR ON THE MISSIONARIES.

Among the foremost and most accomplished of these Pádri gentlemen is Dr. Duff; and if even such a personage as the late Governor General of India, Lord Auckland, was confounded and taken captive in the net of his writings and his speechifyings, it is little matter of astonishment that Hindu children, mere infants in years and understanding, should first forget their filial duties and fail in obedience to the authority of their parents, and next, by plunging into the pond of apostacy and a false religion, should catch the deadly fever of sin, and miserably perish.

Formerly it was only these white-skinned teachers themselves who, exercising the vocation of religious instructors, offered on every hand the four objects of life to degraded human quadrupeds or biped brutes: but now Christian Sahebs, natives of the soil, too, are busied in making disciples and teaching the mysteries of their foreign faith. Only two days ago an instance occurred of one of these lesser gentlemen decoying to his home a lad of the Káyasth caste, in order to make an offering of him to his deity. I have been told the child is not more than 14 years of age, is wholly ignorant, untaught in any branch of learning, and can only babble out a few words like a parrot just learning to imitate the human voice; yet under the hearing of his reverend instructor, wonderful to relate, he is the subject of I know not what wonderful internal change forsooth, producing all at once so utter a distaste for mundane concerns and the duties of life, that he abandons the parental roof to embrace a heterodox faith and addict himself to the practices it enjoins! Mr. Editor, it is surely, a wonderful mantra, a sacred lesson of most magic power, that has been whispered in the ear of this boy-disciple by his new spiritual guide and conscience-keeper, that under its influence he should coolly and with a countenance of dissatisfaction thus address his natural protectors, the members of his family, who come to invite his return—"Why have you come to molest me? I have found the path of salvation, and will not again return home." Ah! how afflicting is all this! a child, a mere sucking infant, still dandled on his mother's lap, and who has not even cut all his teeth, has yet been furnished with a poisonous fang to dart at his blood-relations and his father's race!

It were of no use to complain to the ruling power in this matter. If a thief is found stealing away secretly a little of the mere household stuff of a neighbour, he is immediately punished as his offence deserves; but gentlemen of the ruling caste who dry up the religion of the Hindu subjects, by proclaiming the deeds and teachings of Jesus, may entice away children, nay by cunning or open force, tear away from the bosoms of fathers and mothers the germs of their future hope, the sons who form all their wealth, and be scathless; for the ruling power protects and favors and honours them; grief and lamentation then are unavailing. Meanwhile what care the Padris? the snake goddess dances under the influence of the charmer's fumigations: they have secured the boy and their joy knows no bounds. Does the tiger shrink from cow-murder? While they have glutted themselves in the ruin of the poor youth's future and eternal welfare, they have augmented the number of their sectarists; and the native gentlemen, in particular, who have been the agents in this nefarious business, are only the more encouraged to go about seeking for fresh converts to the sect.

It is clear then that since those who apostatise from the ranks of Hinduism are received among the professors of the religion of our rulers, we must regard it as a mere attempt to delude us should they any longer talk of a pledge of non-interference with the religion of the country. If the Government were sincere in its profession of equal and impartial protection to all their subjects, of every various faith, this pestilence of child-stealing could not have spread as it is doing. Reason rejects the position that there is any virtue in proselyting men of another religion to one's own. Have they then another and secret object in view? God alone can tell: still one may venture to suppose, that as when the subjects of a government come to be largely of the same faith with their rulers, there is of course a strengthening of the cords of good will that bind the governed and the governing together, and many thorns of mutual annoyance and of difficulty in carrying on the course of administration gradually disappear, till, when all are of one religion only, no internal enemy remains to be subdued; and the subjects being all well affected to themselves, no ground of alarm for the public tranquillity remains; so it is not improbable, I think, that our government may have thus reasoned and therefore are in secret concert with the priestly converters.

I will only add that the child is clearly a minor, and is not therefore legally his own master—and I hear that consequently his father is preparing to carry the matter into the Supreme Court."—Calcutta Christian Advocate, September 9, 1843.

PROSPECTUS OF A PUBLICATION TO APPEAR TWICE A MONTH, UNDER THE TITLE OF "THE FREE CHURCHMAN."—The want of any suitable channel for the due conveyance to Indian readers, of much of the most important information relative to the course and nature of the solemn events which have lately terminated in the disruption of the Established Church of Scotland—has suggested the issue of a local Periodical, which, at a low price and in a compact form, may in some little measure supply this felt deficiency. The vital principles which the struggle involved—even the events themselves,—have not been, and are not likely to be, presented to view by the Secular Press, as nevertheless in our opinion, they well deserve to be made known to the Christian Public, and as not a few in this country desire to have them presented and explained. Our design, however, (in the first instance, at least), is merely to republish here, at length or in abridged form, such of the most valuable Public Documents—Writings or speeches—connected with the late crisis, its causes and consequences, as may appear best calculated to exhibit the general religious bearing of those great principles for which the "Free Church of Scotland" is now testifying; and also to give such selections and extracts from other cotemporary publications or from by gone records, as may further illustrate the same subject in its details. As intelligence reaches us, we shall also furnish a brief summary of the proceedings of the Free Church at home; and should our Magazine live, we may be able ere long, to give original correspondence from various sources.

It is hoped, that by the blessing of God, a little aid may in this manner be afforded, and at a needful time, to the cause of His Truth, and towards the practical exposition, particularly in this land of Missionary enterprize, of the true Catholic character and evangelical tendency of the principles maintained—much misunderstood, as they are, and sometimes vilified. If such be not their tendency and character—they are naught indeed; and their assertion has been a criminal blunder, at a costly price, and on a vast scale. But we regard the event far otherwise.

A small space will be reserved in our pages for occasional correspondence, and original articles. The former, (though we cannot pledge ourselves to publication) when addressed in the language of candor and Christian charity, shall always meet with respectful attention. But controversy, political or polemical, we are entirely opposed to, and shall endeavour to do nothing to provoke. It is necessary also to intimate, that the editors acting as they do independently of others, are alone, responsible for the conducting of the work.

The Magazine is intended to appear on, or about the 1st and 15th of each month; and the first number, which will accordingly be published about the 15th instant, will, with other matter, contain a reprint of the Pastoral Address of the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland.

The price of each Number will be four annas, or six copies for a Rupee.

Orders for the Magazine may be addressed to the publisher Mr. W. Rushton, or through Messrs. Thacker and Co., Messrs. Ostell and Lepage, and Messrs. Hay, Meik and Co.

SUKKUR.

We are grieved to be obliged to communicate to our readers the fact, that death has began its ravages at Sukkur. Our last letter, dated the 22d ultimo, states that the Serjeant Major (an excellent man) and 5 gunners of the artillery, had died within the last 30 hours, and that several others were in a dying state. The disproportionate sickness in the 55th native infantry (the number of men in hospital has increased to 530!) is attributed to the circumstance of nearly the whole Regiment having been detached during 1842 in small parties, on command to Peshawur, with stores, ammunition, &c. by which the constitutions of the men suffered much. The following is a list of the officers on the sick list:—Artillery, Lieut. Waddy; Dr. Forbes; 9th Native Infantry, Capt. Beckett, Capt. Martin; 10th Native Infantry, Capt. Welchman, Capt. Samler, Lieut. Bignell, Lieut. Cole, Ens. Kiderton and Ens. Willows; 55th Native Infantry, Capt. Scott, Capt. Jellicoe, Capt. Freeth and Lieut. McBarnett. The 9th had 290 in hospital on the 22d, and the 10th 110. Lieut. Smallpage, of the 55th, has been appointed to do duty with Chamberlain's Horse. A report prevailed that H. M. 3d Dragoons would accompany the 13th Light Infantry into Scinde, an arrangement which is strongly deprecated by our correspondents who maintain that any European Corps must suffer dreadfully from the climate.—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 11.

GENERAL REGULATIONS.

UNDER WHICH THE BRITISH TRADE IS TO BE CONDUCTED AT THE FIVE PORTS OF CANTON, AMOY, FUCHOW, NINGPO, AND SHANGHAI.

I. Pilots.—Whenever a British Merchantman shall arrive off any of the five Ports opened to Trade, viz. Canton, Fuchow, Amoy, Ningpo, or Shanghai, a pilot shall be allowed to take her immediately into port; and in like manner when such British ship shall have settled all legal duties and charges, and, is about to return home, pilots shall be immediately granted to take her out to sea, without any stoppage or delay. Regarding the remuneration to be given these pilots, that will be equitably settled by the British Consul appointed to each particular port, who will determine it with due reference to the distance gone over, the risk run, &c.

II. CUSTOM-HOUSE GUARDS.—The Chinese Superintendent of Customs at each port will adopt the means that he may judge most proper to prevent the revenue suffering by fraud or smuggling. Whenever the pilot shall have brought any British merchantman into port, the Superintendent of Customs will depute one or two trusty custom house officers, whose duty it will be to watch against frauds on the revenue. These will either live in a boat of their own or stay on board the English ship, as may best suit their convenience. Their food and expenses will be supplied them from day to day from the custom-house, and they may not exact any fees whatever from either the Commander or Consignee. Should they violate this regulation, they shall be punished proportionately to the amount so exacted.

III. MASTERS OF SHIPS REPORTING THEMSELVES ON ARRIVAL.—Whenever a British vessel shall have cast anchor at any one of the above mentioned ports, the Captain will, within four and twenty hours after arrival, proceed to the British Consulate and deposit his ship's papers, bills of lading, manifest, &c., in the hands of the Consul; failing to do which he will subject himself to a penalty of 200 dollars. For presenting a false Manifest the penalty will be 500 dollars. For breaking bulk and commencing to discharge before due permission shall be obtained, the penalty will be 500 dollars, and confiscation of the goods so discharged. The Consul having taken possession of the ship's papers, will immediately send a written communication to the Superintendent of Customs, specifying the Register tonnage of the ship, and particulars of the Cargo she has on board, all of which being done in due form, permission will then be given to discharge, and the duties levied as provided for in the Tariff.

IV. COMMERCIAL DEALINGS BETWEEN ENGLISH AND CHINESE MERCHANTS.—It having been stipulated that English merchants may trade with whatever native merchants they please; should any Chinese merchant fraudulently abscond or incur debts which he is unable to discharge, the Chinese authorities, upon complaint being made thereof, will of course do their utmost to bring the offender to justice; it must however be distinctly understood that, if the defaulter really cannot be found, or be dead or bankrupt, and there be not wherewithal to pay, the English merchants may not, appeal to the former custom of the Hong merchants paying for one another, and can no longer expect to have their losses made good to them.

V. TONNAGE DUES.—Every English Merchantman, on entering any one of the above mentioned five Ports, shall pay Tonnage Dues at the rate of five Mace per Register Ton, in full of all charges. The fees formerly levied on entry and departure, of every description, are henceforth abolished.

VI. IMPORT AND EXPORT DUTIES.—Goods, whether imported into, or exported from, any one of the above mentioned five Ports, are henceforward to be taxed according to the Tariff as now fixed and agreed upon, and no further sums are to be levied beyond those which are specified in the Tariff. All duties incurred by an English merchant vessel, whether on goods imported or exported, or in the shape of Tonnage Dues, must first be paid up in full which done, the Superintendent of Customs will grant Port Clearance, and this being shewn to the British Consul, he will thereupon return the ships papers and permit the vessel to depart.

VII. EXAMINATION OF THE GOODS AT THE CUSTOM-HOUSE.—Every English merchant having cargo to load or discharge, must give due intimation thereof, and hand particulars of the same to the Consul, who will immediately despatch a recognized linguist of his own establishment to communicate the particulars to the Superintendent of Customs, that the goods may be duly examined and neither party subjected to loss. The English merchant must also have a properly qualified person on the spot, to attend to his interests when his goods are being examined for duty; otherwise, should there be complaints, these cannot be attended to. Regarding such goods as are subject by the Tariff to an ad valorem duty if the English merchant cannot agree with the Chinese officer in fixing a value, then each party shall call two or three merchants to look at the goods, and the highest price at which any of these merchants would be willing to purchase shall be assumed as the value of the goods. To fix the Tare on any article, such as Tea; if the English merchant cannot agree with the Custom-house officer, then each party shall choose so many Chests, out of every 100, which being first weighed in gross, shall afterwards be tared, and the average tare upon these chests shall be assumed as the tare upon the whole, and upon this principle shall the tare be fixed upon all other goods in packages. If there should still be any disputed points which cannot be settled, the English merchant may appeal to the Consul, who will communicate the particulars of the case to the Superintendent of Customs, that it may be equitably arranged. But the appeal must be made on the same day, or it will not be regarded. While such points are still open, the Superintendent of Customs will delay to insert the same in his books, thus affording an opportunity that the merits of the case may be duly tried and sifted.

VIII. MANNER OF PAYING THE DUTIES.—It is herein before provided that every English vessel that enters any one of the five Ports, shall pay all duties and tonnage dues before she be permitted to depart. The Superintendent of Customs will select certain shroffs, or banking establishments, of known stability, to whom he will give licenses authorizing them to receive duties from the English merchants on behalf of Government, and the receipts of these shroffs for any money paid them shall be considered as a government voucher. In the paying of these duties, different kinds of foreign money may be made use of, but as foreign money is not of equal purity with Sycee silver, the English Consuls appointed to the different ports will, according to time, place, and circumstances, arrange with the Superintendent of Customs at each port, what coins may be taken in payment, and what per centage may be necessary to make them equal to standard or pure silver.

IX. WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.—Sets of Balance Yards for the weighing of goods, of Money Weights, and of Measures, prepared in exact conformity to those hitherto in use at the Custom-house of Canton, and duly stamped and sealed in proof thereof, will be kept in possession of the Superintendent of Customs, and also at the British Consulate, at each of the five ports, and these shall be the standard by which all duties shall be charged, and all sums paid to government. In case of any dispute arising between British merchants and the Chinese officers of Customs regarding the weights or measures of goods, reference shall be made to these standards and disputes decided accordingly.

X. LIGHTERS OR CARGO BOATS.—Whenever an English merchant shall have to load or discharge cargo, he may hire whatever kind of lighter, or cargo boat, he pleases, and the sum to be paid for such boat can be settled between the parties themselves without the interference of government. The number of these boats shall not be limited, nor shall a monopoly of them be granted to any parties. If any smuggling take place in them, the offenders will of course be punished according to law. Should any of these boat people, while engaged in conveying goods for English merchants, fraudulently abscond with the property, the Chinese authorities will do their best to apprehend them, but at the same time the English merchants must take every due precaution for the safety of their goods.

XI. TRANSHIPMENT OF GOODS.—No English merchant ships may tranship goods without special permission; should any urgent case happen where transhipment is necessary, the circumstances must first be submitted to the Consul, who will give a certificate to that effect, and the Superintendent of Customs will then send a special officer to be present at the transhipment. If any one presumes to tranship without such permission being asked for and obtained, the whole of the goods so illicitly transhipped will be confiscated.

XII. SUBORDINATE CONSULAR OFFICERS.—At any place selected for the anchorage of the English merchant ships, there may be appointed a subordinate Consular officer of approved good conduct to exercise due control over the seamen and others. He must exert himself to prevent quarrels between the English seamen and natives this being of the utmost importance. Should any thing of the kind unfortunately take place, he will in like manner do his best to arrange it amicably. When sailors go on shore to walk, officers shall be required to accompany them; and should disturbances take place, such officers will be held responsible. The Chinese officers may not impede natives, from coming alongside the ships to sell clothes or other necessaries to the sailors living on board.

XIII. DISPUTES BETWEEN BRITISH SUBJECTS AND CHINESE.—Whenever a British subject has reason to complain of a Chinese he must first proceed to the Consulate and state his grievance. The Consul will thereupon inquire into the merits of the case, and do his utmost to arrange it amicably. In like manner, if a Chinese have reason to complain of a British subject, he shall no less listen to his complaint and endeavor to settle it in a friendly manner. If an English merchant have occasion to address the Chinese authorities, he shall send such address through the Consul who will see that the language is becoming and if otherwise will direct it to be changed or will refuse to convey the address. If unfortunately any disputes take place of such a nature that the Consul cannot arrange them amicably, then he shall request the assistance of a Chinese officer that they may together examine into the merits of the case, and decide it equitably. Regarding the punishment of English Criminals, the English Government will enact the laws necessary to attain that end, and the Consul will be empowered to put them in force: and regarding the punishment of Chinese criminals, these will be tried and punished by their own laws, in the way provided for by the correspondence which took place at Nanking after the concluding of the place.

XIV. BRITISH GOVERNMENT CRUIZERS ANCHORING WITHIN THE PORTS.—An English government cruizer will anchor within each of the five ports, that the Consul may have the means of better restraining sailors and others and preventing disturbances. But these government cruizers are not to be put upon the same footing as merchant vessels, for as they bring no merchandize and do not come to trade, they will of course pay neither dues nor charges. The resident Consul will keep the Superintendent of Customs duly informed of the arrival and departure of such government cruizers, that he may take his measures accordingly.

XV. ON THE SECURITY TO BE GIVEN FOR BRITISH MERCHANT VESSELS.—It has hitherto been the custom when an English vessel entered the port of Canton, that a Chinese Hong-merchant stood security for her, and all duties and charges were paid through such security merchant. But these security merchants being now done away with, it is understood that the British Consul will henceforth be security for all British merchant ships entering any of the aforesaid Chinese ports.—Canton Press.

ORIGINAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MARRIAGE OF HINDOO WIDOWS.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—Having observed, some time ago, in the Madras News Papers, a long and learned Article extracted from your meritorious Journal, expurgatory of the system which prevents the marriage of Hindoo Widows;—a system so manifestly pernicious, that I am captivated with the conduct of the good man who made an attempt to break down the barrier of public opinion, which hedges about this most contemptible and deleterious of human projects. The Article in question resulted from the praiseworthy conduct of a learned and wealthy Sastree of Calcutta, who proffered to bestow the sum of 10 thousand Rupees upon any man of his own caste who would marry his widowed daughter. It was also affirmed that a young Brahmin—a student at the College (which indicates the effect of a reputable education) had made proposals to marry the widow, but I am not aware if the marriage is celebrated. I sincerely and ardently hope it has been effected, or at least in progress of being so, as it will be the leading step towards the expulsion from Hindoo polity, of one of the most unfeeling and unjust statutes that was ever embodied in a code of laws. This dissention from confirmed principle, having emanated from among the most learned and influential class of Hindoos at Calcutta, I feel thoroughly convinced that if it were supported by opinions and pecuniary assistance, such an obviously important measure, as it aims to establish, would readily command the attention and respect of every honest and liberally thinking person. I feel certain that every well intentioned Brahmin would not and could not withhold his consent to a measure so just, so evidently fraught with all that is beneficent and merciful, all that is generous and liberal—a measure so thoroughly calculated to repose the mind of the now misgiving female, cheer her pilgrimage through this world, and divest her of those alarming and discouraging conceptions of becoming a widow, which unhappy state would entail upon her a life of prolonged misery and extreme wretchedness. Oh! Dear Sir, I would say through the medium of your valuable journal to every honoured Sastree and to every respected Brahmin, and indeed to every honest and liberally thinking Hindoo, let his sect be what it may, come forward with heart and pocket, and do your endeavours to expunge so illiberal and direful a Regulation from our Civil Constitution. Ye who have daughters, sisters or any relation or indeed friend under your protection—would ye not feel a pang at the irretrievable distress of the widow? Do ye not tacitly wish that such an unfeeling law was entirely defaced from the leaves of the Saster? I know ye do. then like men of sense and refinement step forward with firmness and decision, and ameliorate the condition of our deeply injured females, and allow not your nobler natures to sink into apathy and indifference, because ye are exempt from their pitiful condition; but be bold, and set your face like a flint against the taunts and accusations of the unfeeling and ungenerous (for be assured if this ungracious system be thrust out of our Shasters, it must be you, Brahmins, that must do it) and you will confer on thousands yet unborn a just retribution which they have a right to demand at your hands. You will deprive the common calamity of its poignancy and render the deprivations of Providence at least bearable, and avert in a great degree the irreparable condition of the widow, which is now above all others the most dreadful of calamities.

This highly important and deserving question having been once mooted, I sincerely hope and pray that it will not be permitted to fall into oblivion; but that the good and worthy people of Calcutta—the great Metropolis of this Empire—will exert themselves in this praiseworthy compact; and I would further hope that the British Government would tender its benign and fostering influence towards the establishment of so just and laudable a measure. We should then hear of no more Suttees or other tragical deeds submitted to by our females to avoid an existence of slavery and wretchedness. The projector and leader of this charitable work will have the happy reflection of having done at least one action that will hand down his name to future ages, and hold his memory endeared by generations yet unborn. And upon you, Respected Sir, I would fain impose the task of Agitator and supporter of this truly just and charitable work; and you will then honourably obtain for yourself what your heart yearns to become—viz. the real, sincere and faithful friend of Indians and India.

By inserting this letter in your highly esteemed paper you will confer a great favour on a great many interested Individuals; and which will induce me to trouble you again on the highly important subject. In the mean time

I beg to remain,

Your obedient and obliged servant,

A FRIEND TO REFORMATION.

Hydrabad Territory, 21st August, 1843.

We give this warm hearted appeal from a Native in the Deccan, in his own language, without the alteration of a sentence. It shows how deeply the forlorn condition of widows is felt by the Natives in the South, and how anxious they are for the abolition of that absurd and unnatural custom which forbids widows to enter a second time in the married state.—Editor.

THE CALCUTTA CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—As many of your readers do not see the Calcutta Christian Intelligencer, and as from the brief extract you made out of it in your last number, they would be led to conclude that the article in that publication on the "Bengalee Patshala, Calcutta," opposed Vernacular Education; allow me to supply what you have omitted; it is as follows:

"We are warm friends to the diffusion of an elementary education through the vernaculars, but no liberal education can be afforded without the study of English. The watch-word of all the true friends of education ought to be Anglo-Vernacularism."

Your readers can at once perceive that the writer of the article is not an enemy to the study of the Vernaculars. Of course, if short extracts are made, any one's meaning may be misunderstood; as the Romanists defend saint worship by quoting Rev. xxii. 8. "I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel who shewed me these things," and by omitting the passage "see thou do it not." I feel assured there is no person at all connected with education who would oppose the study of the Vernaculars, but "every thing in its place." I advocate the study of English as necessary for a sound and liberal education in this country on the same principle as I would have recommended the study of the classics in Italy in the days of Dante and Boccaccio, and in Scotland in the days of Melville and Knox.

Yours,

ANGLO-VERNACULARIS.

BABOO HURREE MOHUN SEN.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

DEAR SIR,—The following lines will, I trust, enable you fully to carry out your desire of adding your assent to the commendations bestowed by the Editor of the 'Englishman' on the native gentleman, who has lately interested himself in the drawing class of the Mechanic's Institution by the bestowal of prizes on the students.

I the more anxiously desire the opportunity, which I trust you will afford me,—of explaining how this "unostentatious act became so public" because not only have I, almost alone, the power of doing so satisfactorily, but I have reason to fear that the publicity given to it, instead of gratifying the worthy Baboo, has displeased him.

The information was derived entirely from myself, during a friendly and private conversation with the Editor of the Englishman, with whom I was fully of opinion that it merited notice, and might, by the force of example, be of service to the humbler working portion of the Institution, which was, and is, far from being independent of such adventitious aid. I could see no reason why the light of the Baboo's kindness should be hidden under a bushel, and had there been any motive for desiring secrecy, there would have been but little chance of securing it, amidst a score of lads whose expectations and pride were concerned in blazoning it abroad.

The bestowal of these gifts was no less accidentally brought about than—so far as the Baboo is concerned—its publicity. A chance visit to the Institution on one of the evenings devoted to drawing, under the mistaken belief of there being, that evening, a meeting of the Committee (of which Baboo Hurreemohun Sen is a member) brought the scholars and their doings to his notice. To the "impulses of a kind heart and a clear head," alone, can I, in common with the Editor, attribute all which followed. The interest excited, a few words of advice, commendation, and encouragement were followed up by the promise of some little reward to him who should execute his task the most creditably by the next school night. The consideration, however, that the scholars were in various stages of proficiency, (urged with juvenile and jealous care by a smart young spokesman) induced the Baboo to double his promise, and finally, when the improved attendance, and the spirit of emulation which had been awakened, had sufficiently evidenced the good effects of the reward system, its repetition was promised in continuity.

With respect to the "amount of donations," all, I am sure, will unite in estimating them by the spirit and the season in which they were tendered. I do not say this, however, to blink the question, and as many of your readers might be led to suppose the phrase amount to signify money, I may state that the gifts in question were in the more judicious, more permanent, and more useful form of instruments and drawing books.

Yours faithfully,

C. GRANT.

EUROPE.

RELIGIOUS.

STATISTICS OF RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION IN THE MANUFACTURING DISTRICTS.—It is quite evident, now, that the Educational scheme of the Factories Bill was a deep-laid plot, the groundwork of which was prepared by the Children's Employment Commission, whose one sided and exaggerated statements furnished the staple for Lord Ashley's horrific speech. The impression produced by that speech was most extraordinary. Without stopping to inquire whether the facts were correctly ascertained and fairly stated; without taking any account of the counter-representation which had been supplied by most respectable and competent witnesses, the House appeared to be smitten with a panic terror at the sudden discovery of a state of things which, as Lord Ashley said, threatened to bring on some mighty convul.ion. It was under this false impression that Lord John Russel declared, that it would not only be foolish, but wicked also, to oppose a measure which, in spite of His Lordship's rash and arrogant declaration, has been met with the indignant protest of upwards of two millions of Petitioners—a demonstration of public opinion unprecedented in the annals of the House. It now remains for those who have defeated Sir James Graham, but not convinced him, to justify the course they have taken, by showing that the alarm which had well nigh frightened the House from its propriety, was as groundless, and the evidence upon which they were rushing into the commission of a grievous injury to the cause of Religious Education and Religious Freedom, as fallacious, as the Bill was in its provisions insidious, intolerant, unconstitutional, and unjust. We hear Honourable, Right Hon., and Right Rev. persons expressing even now their regret at the failure of the Government measure, and ascribing it to any thing but the right cause. We find Lord Ashley lamenting pathetically over the vast numbers of neglected children now consigned, so far as appearances go, to an eternity of ignorance! Let the noble Lord go to Dorsetshire, and inquire into the state of Education among the neglected and depressed peasantry of that county; and he may there find as much degradation and vice, if not as much suffering, as among the "dangerous classes" of the manufacturing districts.

In our last Number, we adverted to the importance and necessity of testing the Statistics of Education, and of ascertaining and showing what has been done for the religious education and instruction of the people. We have now the high gratification of bringing under the notice of our readers, one of the most valuable documents bearing upon this subject, that were ever submitted to public attention; not a Parliamentary document, but one from which more may be learned, than from all the Returns relating to religious instruction, which have ever been made to Parliament, and put forth in blue books or any other shape. It comes before us in the form of a Letter, addressed to the Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, by Edward Baines, Jun., "on the Social, Educational, and Religious State of the Manufacturing Districts, with Remarks on the Speech of Lord Ashley," occupying upwards of six columns of the Leeds Mercury. We should gladly have transcribed the whole Letter, but its length renders this impracticable. We have inserted in another column the Tabular Summary of the Returns; and shall now proceed to give an abstract of the important results of the inquiries set on foot by Mr. Baines, earnestly recommending the immediate republication and extensive distribution of the entire document in a separate form. The Returns obtained are from parishes and townships in the manufacturing districts of Yorkshire, Lancashire and Cheshire, containing altogether a population of 2,019,260 souls. And they embrace three distinct heads of inquiry: 1. Church and Chapel accommodation; 2. Sunday-schools; 3. Day-schools.

1. Church and Chapel accommodation.—Mr. BAINES assumes, that 50 per cent. of the population ought to be provided for in places of worship; an estimate which we think above the mark, accommodation for two-fifths being sufficient for all who can be expected to attend at one time. In the Metropolis, however, the proportion of sittings to the population, in places of worship of all descriptions, is only 36 per cent.; and in Westminster, 30 per cent. In the manufacturing districts, described by Lord ASHLEY as "a great and terrible wilderness," it is shown by the Returns to be nearly 45 per cent. The Returns from the three Counties together stand thus:—

| | Population. | | Church and Chapel-room. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Yorkshire .. | 770,265 | ... | 381,808 |
| Lancashire .. | 1,207,495 | ... | 504,983 |
| Cheshire ... | 41,500 | ... | 17,225 |
| Totals ... | 2,019,260 | .. | 904,016 |

Being a proportion of sittings to population, of 44⅞ per cent.

In Yorkshire, the proportion is within a fraction of 50 per cent.;—the full amount of Church and Chapel-room which even the Bishop of London deems needful for a population, all of whom are disposed to attend; and taking into consideration, that there are great numbers of English and Irish Roman Catholics in Lancashire, (estimated at 60,000 in Liverpool alone,) that a large proportion of them are of the poorest class, and that their Chapels receive congregations four, and even six times on the Lord's-day—of course requiring a much smaller proportion of sittings for a given number of persons—the Church and Chapel-room for the Protestant congregations in Lancashire will appear to be not much below that in Yorkshire; and the average of the whole manufacturing districts will approach to 50 per cent.

So much for the alleged spiritual destitution in these districts!

Taking into consideration the rapid increase or accumulation of population in these districts, it is truly astonishing, that the Church and Chapel accommodation should bear anything approaching to an adequate proportion to the religious wants of the people. This could not possibly be the case, unless the supply of religious instruction had more than kept pace with the increase of population. Accordingly, by comparing the existing Church and Chapel-room with that which existed two-and-forty years ago, Mr. Baines has demonstrated, that, while the population of the West Riding has increased 104 per cent. since 1800, the Church and Chapel-room has been augmented 213 per cent.; and that in Lancashire, with an increase of 148 per cent. on the population, there has been an increase of 252 per cent. in the Church and Chapel-room. The following is a summary of all the places included in the Returns:—

| | Population. | | | Chur. & Chapel Sittgs. | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | In 1801 | In 1841 | Incr. per cent. | In 1800 | In 1843 | Incr. per cent. |
| In Yorkshire | 377,861 | 770,265 | 104 | 121,999 | 381,808 | 213 |
| Lancashire | 456,090 | 1,207,495 | 148 | 143,349 | 504,983 | 252 |
| Cheshire | 20,146 | 41,500 | 106 | 8,610 | 17,225 | 109 |
| Totals | 854,517 | 2,019,260 | 136 | 273,918 | 904,016 | [illegible] |

Increase in population 136 per cent.

Apparent increase in Church and Chapel-room 234⅝ per cent.

The next question is, How has this Church and Chapel-room been provided? Of course, remarks Mr. Baines, the Government and the Legislature have, in their wisdom and munificence, done it all; or Churchmen, who possess, as Sir Robert Inglis affirms, thirty-nine fortieths of the wealth of the country, must have interposed on behalf of the neglected masses! The Report of the Children's Employment Commission, upon which Lord Ashley grounded his prodigious statements, boldly asserts, indeed, that "in none of the towns which have suddenly sprung up under the successful pursuit of some new branch of industry," had "any provision been made for supplying the spiritual wants of the people," "nor, in general, is there any provision whatever for the extension of Educational and Religious Institutions corresponding with the extension of its population." This passage, Mr. Baines says, he dares not characterize; and he leaves the reader to do so after comparing it with the facts. It appears, then, that, since 1800, there have been built 51 Episcopal Churches out of Parliamentary grants, assisted by subscriptions; 141 other Episcopal Churches, by means of local subscriptions or corporation funds; and 921 places of Dissenting worship. The increase "in Church sittings" has been 125 per cent.; the increase in the sittings in other places of worship, 863 per cent. But the Voluntary exertions of the Churchmen and Dissenters, taken together, have provided 567,605 sittings, being nine times as many as in the churches built by Parliamentary grants. "Said I not truly," exclaims Mr. Baines, "that there has been a mightier and more bountiful hand here than that of Government? Yes, Sir, even the hand of Christian principle, drawing freely and unbidden from its own resources—not another's—and pouring out its thankful tribute at the foot of Him who first bestowed it. Since the year 1815, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners have built 281 churches out of the public money, throughout all England and Wales; but since the year 1800, Voluntary zeal has built 1,662 churches and chapels in these Manufacturing Districts alone! And yet you doubt the power of the Voluntary principle!

"It would be curious to form a computation how much money has been expended on these Voluntary churches and chapels. The cost of the Parliamentary churches, as near as I can calculate, has been 10*l.* per sittings. The cost of the Independent chapels built in Leeds since 1790, has been 2*l.* 6*s.* per sitting; and the cost of eight Wesleyan chapels built in the Leeds circuits, has been 3*l.* 7*s.* per sitting." Now, if we allow something for the expensiveness of works paid for out of the public purse, and suppose that the sittings provided by Voluntary zeal in the Church may have cost 8*l.* per sitting, we have the sum of 1,025,736*l.* expended by the Church in these districts in the present century; and if we take, as an average sum for the chapels of all Dissenters, 3*l.* 10*s.* per sitting, and multiply by that sum the 439,388 sittings provided by Dissenters, we have 1,537,808*l.*, expended by them. The total sum is 2,533,544*l.*, voluntarily expended on places of worship alone! Pretty well for this "great and terrible wilderness!"

II. Sunday-schools. We have not room to enter fully into this branch of the inquiry. Again, Mr. Baines convicts of audacious misrepresentation the Children's Employment Commissioners, in respect both to the proportion of Sunday scholars to the population, and the efficiency of the instruction. He shows that while, in Westminster, there is but 1 Sunday scholar to 34 of the population, and, in London, 1 to 20, in the Manufacturing Districts there is 1 to every 5½. Out of 363,544 Sunday scholars, 201,833 read in the Scriptures. "Who can calculate," remarks Mr. Baines, "the social, moral, and religious benefits of establishing a kind of spiritual superintendence on the part of sixty thousand Teachers, generally taken from the middle class, over three hundred and sixty thousand scholars, generally from the working class? What advantage to the Teachers themselves, by exercising their virtues! What advantage to the scholars, in regard to their manners, their feelings, their tastes, their religious knowledge, their regular observance of the Lord's-day, their habit of attending public worship, the enlightening of their consciences, their associations and conduct throughout their future life! Sunday-schools establish a bond of the greatest importance between the two classes of society."

Now it is at this system that Sir James Graham's Bill aimed a death-blow. It is of this system that Dr. Kaye Shuttleworth and other Education quacks speak with supreme contempt; and for this they would substitute the compulsory drilling of children in the Church Catechism by a paid master! We must not omit to state the proportion of Sunday scholars taught in the Church schools and those taught by Dissenters: the former are 103,895; the latter, 254,739.

III. Day Schools. The summary of the Returns is as follows:—

| | Scholars. |
|---|---|
| In Dame and Infant Schools, ... | 32,379 |
| In Private Schools, ... ... ... | 75,180 |
| In Factory Schools, ... ... ... | 6,366 |
| In Public (National, British, &c.) Schools, ... .. ... ... ... | 79,598 |
| Total, .. ... .. .. | 193,523 |

So, then, contrary to all that could have been surmised, it appears, that one in every ten of the population in these districts, are taught in Day-schools, of whom only a very small proportion are in Dame schools and Factory schools. We have no room for comment, but shall return to the subject.

In the mean time, we beg to tender to our able, zealous, and public-spirited fellow-labourer, our warmest thanks for the important service he has rendered to the cause of truth and Religious Liberty, by procuring, analysing, and publishing the invaluable information comprised in these statistics. Will Sir James Graham now venture to repeat, that the statement made by the noble Member for Dorsetshire, as to the unhappy ignorance in which a large proportion of the population of the manufacturing districts are involved, remains unshaken?—Pat.

THE ROYAL SCOTS GREYS.—For some months in the autumn of last year several troops of the Royal Scots Greys were stationed at Clifton, and, during their stay there, and by their own request, attended Divine worship at Hope Chapel, (Independent) of which the Rev W. Gregory is minister. A portion of the chapel was set apart for their especial accommodation, and a copy of "Dr. Watts's Hymns" was presented to each soldier, and both minister and people felt a lively interest in their spiritual welfare. Mr. Gregory has received from them a very handsome Scotch snuff mull, made of a beautifully carved specimen of the buffalo-horn, lined and mounted with silver; the massive silver lid is encircled with a richly embossed wreath of the thistle, and surmounted, in the centre, with a large and superior cairn gorum, a stone highly valued and much admired for its colour, transparency, and brilliancy. The silver plate in front bears the following inscription:—"Presented to the Rev. William Gregory, Hope Chapel, Clifton, by a few of the Non-Commissioned Officers and Privates of the Royal Scots Greys, as a token of respect for his kind attention to them when quartered there. 1843."—Bristol Mercury.

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—Lord Aberdeen is rather unfortunate in his attempts at legislation for the Scotch Church. Neither party is satisfied with his bill, and a strong opposition is evidently getting up both by the adherents to the Church of Scotland and by the Seceders. The Caledonian Mercury says, that it is rumoured that several of those who, while they professed the principles of the Non-intrusionists, declined to go out, in the hope that the Government measure would be acceptable to them, have resolved immediately to leave the Establishment. Among others mentioned are the Rev. Dr. Brown, of Langton, and the Rev. Mr. Moncrieff, of Kilbride, the son of Lord Moncrieff. On the other hand, the Very Rev. Principal Lee, to whom the General Assembly intrusted the responsible office of drawing up the pastoral address to the people of Scotland, has announced his strenuous opposition to the measure. He opposes the bills, because, instead of being simply declaratory, as it professes to be, it contains innovations which he considers dangerous; especially in as far as it allows the people to object to a presentee before he is taken on his trials, that being contrary to the Act of 1567, which confers upon the church courts the power, and even imposes upon them the duty, of taking upon trial in the first instance, before anything has been done in the way of submitting the matter either to the congregation or the parishioners. It is thought that many will concur with Dr. Lee in these opinions.—Pat.

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—In the view of the crippled and degraded situation in which the "Established Church of Scotland" is now placed by the secession of nearly one-half of her best, most evangelical, and most learned ministers, and their congregations, it is in contemplation, in the town of Huntingdon, and other places in England, to petition Parliament "to repeal, alter, abolish, and render utterly null, frustrate, and of no effect," the acts of Parliament by which that Church is connected with the State. From the sentiments which have recently been expressed, even in very high quarters, on this subject, we shall not, therefore, be surprised to hear, ere long, of the introduction of a bill in Parliament to effect this now desirable object.—Wesleyan Chronicle.

FREE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—We understand that Mr. Smith, of Nottingham, a member of the Church of England, and brother to Mr. Abel Smith, the London banker, has become a subscriber of 300*l.* per annum to the funds of the Free Church. —Scotsman.

THE PROTESTANT CHURCH AT JERUSALEM.—To the Editor of the Record.—SIR,—In the quotation which you have given in your last number relative to the Protestant Church at Jerusalem, from Sten's Tour, a two months' subsequent residence in the Holy City, from which I have just returned on a special mission from the London Society, enables me to notice one or two alterations which have transpired since that gentleman was there. During my sojourn, the room in which Divine service is held, and which comfortably seats fifty persons, was generally filled; so much so, that an enlargement was contemplated by taking down the wall between that and the adjoining room. The walls of the new church are now raised five feet throughout above the ground line, and much additional work is prepared. It is intended to hold three hundred, not five hundred persons. Besides the services mentioned in your quotation, there is a full and regular one in English every Sunday forenoon at half-past ten. I am happy also to be able to give the information, that the bishop, whose trials, from various causes, have been great during the past year, and have been borne in a truly Christian spirit, now occupies a more comfortable residence in an open situation on Mount Zion, opposite the citadel, or Castle of David, near the Jaffa Gate, and not five minutes' walk from the Chapel. Finally, Dr. Macgowan, the highly respectable and talented physician, does not, and never did, reside in the bishop's family; he has a residence of his own, which the Prussian Consul-General of Syria, the Prussian Consul of Jerusalem, myself, and others, have found a hospitable roof.

I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

MATTHEW HABERSHON.

MISCELLANEOUS.

VISIT OF PRINCE ALBERT TO IRELAND.—The Cork Examiner states that a letter has been received from the Hon. J. Anson, private secretary to Prince Albert, which holds out a hope that his Royal Highness will attend the meeting of the British Association, to be held in Cork in August next.—Pat.

THE KING OF HANOVER.—While talking of the ex-Viceroy of Hanover, a word or two about the King of that ex-appanage of English royalty. Ostensibly Ernest has come over here to be present at the marriage of his niece; but this is only the pretext, and, indeed, it was not the one originally contemplated to account for his present visit, as it was intended, but for accident, that he should have arrived here apparently in order to attend the christening of the infant Princess Alice. The real cause of the visit, however, is, that he may arrange with his creditors, some of whom were latterly becoming very urgent in their demands for liquidation—one party to whom he owed a sum of 7,000*l.* or 8,000*l.*, being about to commence proceedings if he was any longer kept out of his money.—Hants Independent.

DISSENSIONS IN THE CABINET.—Sir Robert Peel—backed by Lord Ripon and Mr. Gladstone—held out against extreme coercive measures, but conceding so far as that he would be guided by circumstances. The Premier has, at length, carried his point, and no legislative measure is to be proposed. A suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act had been suggested by the Wellington and Lyndhurst section of the Cabinet; but it will not be attempted. But the Ministry may call upon both branches of the Legislature, probably through a Royal Message, once more to declare their fixed determination to maintain the Union with Ireland. At the meeting of the Cabinet on Tuesday, if my information be correct, Sir Robert Peel expressed his anxiety to make all practicable concession to Ireland as the best means of counteracting the repeal excitement; to abandon the additional duty of a shilling on whisky, put on last session, was resorted to as the first measure of conciliation. Lord Ripon proposed that something in the shape of Assessed Taxes should be established to make up the deficiency; but Sir Robert Peel would not sanction any such measure, on the ground of the extreme inexpediency of introducing a new tax in Ireland under present circumstances.—Dublin Post.

INFLUENCE OF FALLACIOUS DESIGNATIONS.—Amongst the instruments of delusion employed for reconciling the people to the dominion of the one and the few, is the device of employing for the designation of persons, and classes of persons—instead of the ordinary and appropriate denominations, the names of so many abstract fictitious entities, contrived for the purpose. Take the following examples:—Instead of Kings, or the King,—the Crown and Throne. Instead of Churchman,—the Church, and sometimes the Altar. Instead of Lawyers,—the Law. Instead of Judges, or a Judge,—the Court. Instead of Rich men, or the Rich,—Property. Of this advice, the object and effect is, that any unpleasant idea that in the mind of the hearer or reader might happen to stand associated with the idea of person or the class, is disengaged from it: and in the stead of the more less obnoxious individual or individuals, the object presented is a creature of the fancy, by the idea of which, as in poetry, the imagination is tickled—a phantom which, by means of the power with which the individual or class is clothed, is constituted an object of respect and veneration. In the first four cases just mentioned, the nature of the device is comparatively obvious. In the last case, it seems scarcely to have observed. But perceived, or not perceived, such, by the speakers in question, has been the motive and efficient cause of the prodigious importance attached by so many to the term property: as if the value of it were intrinsic, and nothing else had any value: as if man were made for property, not property for man. Many, indeed, have gravely asserted, that the maintenance of property was the only end of government.—Benthamiana.

Monument to Hampden.—Two centuries ago have elapsed since John Hampden fell upon Chalgrove-field, and at length a memorial marks the spot. It consists of a large block of Portland stone, sixteen feet high, surmounted by a Ceppo cap, and resting on a massive plinth. Upon the sides of the monument facing Warpsgrove, will be placed the medallion portrait of the patriot, carved in marble by Scoular; on the opposite side are engraved his arms. The third side exhibits a list of the subscribers to the monument, and the fourth side bears the following inscription, written by Lord Nugent:—"Here, in this field of Chalgrove, John Hampden, after an able and strenuous, but unsuccessful resistance in Parliament, and before the judges of the land, to the measures of an arbitrary court, first took arms, assembling the levies of the associated counties of Buckingham and Oxford in 1642. And here, within a few paces of this spot, he received the wound of which he died, fighting in defence of the free monarchy and ancient liberties of England, June 18th, 1643. In the two hundredth year from that day, this stone was raised in reverence to his memory."—Pat.

Alderman T. Wood and the Talacre Mine.—On Saturday a Court of Aldermen was held after the election of the sheriffs for the ensuing year, when Alderman Brown brought up the report of the committee to which the documentary matter appertaining to the connexion of Alderman T. Wood with the Talacre Mining Company was referred. The report stated that the committee found from the documentary matter that Alderman T. Wood was, as a principal, connected with the Talacre company, which appeared to have been got up as a speculation presenting no probabilities of profit, and calculated to benefit no person except those by whom it had been concocted; that coal which was the produce of another mine had been exhibited as the produce of the Talacre mine, and that the designation and station of Alderman Thomas Wood, as an Alderman of London, had been used in the printed papers relating to the concern as recommendatory of experiments in its available resources. The committee abstained from expressing any opinion upon the conduct of Alderman Wood.—Alderman Brown then moved "that the report should be entered in the journals of the Court, so that any member might, if he thought proper, give notice that it should be taken into consideration."—Alderman T. Wood condemned the report altogether, and complained that it had been drawn up by a member of the Court, instead of by the proper officer of the corporation.—Alderman Brown vindicated his report.—The motion was then agreed to.—Ibid.

Apprehensions of the Government.—The Government have actually discontinued the practice of sending strong military escorts, with ammunition, through the country thus giving a practical proof that they do not really entertain any apprehensions of an insurrectionary outbreak. A single policeman is now considered to be a sufficient escort for several car-loads of powder through the county of Tipperary, which swarms with thousands of Repealers. The following evidence of the "alarming state of the country" appears in the Tipperary Free Press:—"Thirteen casks of powder, one cask of flints, and a large quantity of percussion caps, arrived in town on Tuesday evening from Cork. In consequence of the disturbed state of the country, there was a grandguard of one policeman escorting this large quantity of ammunition." These facts are calculated to strengthen the prevalent belief, that the formidable armaments in Ireland are really intended as a preparation for any sudden emergency in Spain.—Ibid.

Man of Colour.—A correspondent of the Times states, as a "hint for brother Jonathan," that a young man of colour, almost of pure negro race, is keeping his terms in the Middle Temple for the bar, and that he is treated by his companions, including some of the most talented and noblest of young Englishmen, with as much respect as any. In a few years the boast will probably be remembered as strange, because parallel instances will then be common; but we are glad to see a race that has already many of its members occupying posts of distinction in the West Indies pushing for Metropolitan honours; it will serve it in every way and everywhere.—Ibid.

Messrs. Ackermann and Co.—At a meeting of creditors, held at the London Coffee-house, Monday, June 26, Thomas Brown, Esq. (Longman and Co.), in the chair, a statement of their affairs having been read by Mr. Quilter (of Quilter and Ball, accountants), showing liabilities amounting to 30,664*l.* 9s. 6d., and assets amounting to 28,314*l.* 18s. 5d., a proposition was made in behalf of Messrs. Ackermann and Co., to pay a composition of fifteen shillings in the pound, in six instalments of 2s. 6d. each, at intervals of six months' date from the 1st of August next. The first instalment to be paid on the 1st of September next. There were upwards of one hundred creditors present, and they unanimously agreed to accept Messrs. Ackermann's proposition, and signed the resolution to that effect before leaving the meeting.—Ibid.

Benefit of Clergy.—Criminals, able to read, claimed the benefit of clergy, and then a passage was given them to read from the Scriptures. The passage actually read on such occasions is a subject of some doubt; or perhaps the custom differed in various places. The first verse of the 51st Psalm, "miserere mei," &c., was often selected, and from that consequence acquired the name of "the neck verse."—Pat.

Choral Meeting at Exeter-Hall.—The second choral meeting of the upper singing schools assembling at Exeter-hall, under the sanction of the Committee of Council on Education, and instructed by Mr. Hullah and his assistance, on the method of Wilhem, was held on Wednesday night. The chorus consisted of the first upper school, the workmen's upper school, the upper school for equal voices, and the South London and Barbican upper schools. The first part was composed of sacred music, which closed with a beautiful hymn for the Prince of Wales, the music by Haydn, the words by Chorley. The second part consisted of a secular music. Lord Wharncliffe, at the conclusion, addressed the vast assembly of pupils, and said, their example had been so extensively followed, that there were no fewer than 200,000 pupils under this system throughout the country. The Government had done little or nothing; all the pleasing results of their studies in this delightful art were owing to their own exertions. He was happy to hear they proposed soon to have a hall of their own; and to attain that desirable end he should be ready to afford his aid, as others, doubtlessly, would equally be. (Cheers.) The attendance during the evening was most crowded, and among the company present were Prince Albert (who arrived about nine, and stayed for an hour), the Bishop of Norwich, Lady Wharncliffe, Mr. Wyse, M. P., &c.—Ibid.

Winter Goal Delivery.—The Lord Chancellor has determined to establish a winter goal delivery, to obviate the inconvenience and frequently injustice which has long been complained of in keeping prisoners confined during the long interval between the Summer and Spring Assizes. It is generally understood that the duty of going the circuits at the proposed new assizes will be assigned to the Judges of the Common Pleas, who, from the paucity of business in their courts, have more time at their disposal than the other learned judges.—Ibid.

Emigration of Prophet Wroe.—This High Priest of Johanna Southcotonians, whose doings at Ashton-under Lyne caused him such an unenviable notoriety a few years ago, has recently left his residence, near Wakefield, where he lived in considerable style, and emigrated to New South Wales. His wife and family still reside near Wakefield, and the fact of his having left this country was sworn to by his wife before the magistrates, Wakefield, on a question of disputed wages, on Monday last.—Leeds Mercury.

London and Dover Railway.—Further Opening to Folkestone.—Yesterday an additional distance of fifteen miles of this railway, being a total of eighty-two miles from the metropolis, and of only seven from Dover, was opened to the public.—Pat. 29th June.

School for the Indigent Blind.—Thursday a special general court of the governors of this charity, instituted in 1799, for the religious and secular education of the indigent blind, and for their instruction in different species of handicraft, was held at the London Coffee-house, Ludgate-hill; Ralph Price, Esq., in the chair; when a resolution, empowering the committee to raise a sum of 3,000*l.* by the sale of a portion of the funded property of the corporation, for the purpose of providing extra accommodation at the establishment in St. George's fields, consequent upon the increased number of pulpils, received the sanction of the meeting. The number of the pupils has increased since 1800, from less than 16 to 70 males and 72 females. Mr. S. Bosanquet was chosen treasurer to the institution, in the place of his father, recently deceased.—Ibid.

Syrian Medical Aid Association.—The second anniversary meeting of the members of this association was held on Tuesday morning at the Music-hall Store-street, Bedford-square, Lord Ashley, M.P., in the chair, supported by Baron de Bode, the Hon. F. W. Cowper, M.P., Sir Henry Halford, M.D., Sir J. Clarke, M.D., Sir George Rose, M.P., Sir J. D. Paul, the Venerable Archdeacon Robinson, and several Syrian gentlemen in the costume of their country. The report stated that Dr. Kerns had granted him a free passage, and he had by his exertions relieved upwards of 1,440 persons. It was proposed to establish a hospital at Beyrout, for which purpose from 300*l* to 400*l.* per annum would be required; and it was hoped that a hospital, which was much needed at Damascus, would also be established in that city. The receipts of the year had amounted to 725*l.*, and the expenditure to 494*l.* 19s., leaving a balance in hand of 257*l.* 1s.—Ibid.

Miscalculations as to the Existing Means of Education.—In three ways the deficiency of the existing means of Education may be grossly exaggerated; first, by under-rating and concealing the number of schools already established; secondly, by miscalculating the numbers of children, in proportion to the population, who ought to be under instruction; and thirdly, by aggravating the extent and degree of popular ignorance which exists notwithstanding all the efforts to supply the means of Education. In each respect, Lord Ashley's portentous Speech was chargeable with enormous, though, on his part, unintentional misrepresentation. The statistics obtained by Mr. Edward Baines, jun., have demonstrated, that the bold statements made as to the absence of any provision whatever for the extension of Educational institutions corresponding to the increase of population, are utterly at variance with fact. But the adequacy of the provision very much turns, of course, upon the proportion of children who ought to be receiving instruction. Lord Ashley, speaking of the number of children in Day-schools, assumes that one-fifth of the population is the number supposed to be capable of sound education, and expresses an opinion, that this is understated, one-fourth being the ordinary calculation. But Mr. Baines has shown this to be a gross miscalculation. The children between the ages of five and fifteen are found to constitute, it is true, one-fourth of the entire population. But, in the first place, a considerable deduction must be made for those who are educated at home, or detained at home through sickness and other causes, as well as for the children of paupers and mendicants, &c. In the second place, the assumption of one-fourth, Mr. Baines remarks, "goes upon the gross fallacy, that all the children between five and fifteen years of age could be, or ought to be, receiving instruction at the same time; that is, that every child in the country was at school for ten long years, namely, from the age of five to that of fifteen! Why, it is notorious, that not even the children of the middle classes usually go to school for ten years; and that the working classes never keep their children at a day-school till they are fifteen years old. I do not think it at all reasonable to calculate on the working classes keeping their children at a day-school more than five years; and it is certain, that the average duration of schooling, even among those of the working class who are in tolerable circumstances, both in manufacturing and rural districts, is shorter. But, if we assume five years as the average period of education in day-schools, then it is evident, that only half of the children between five and fifteen years of age can be in the day-schools at one time; which would make one-eighth of the entire population, instead of one-fourth. But even this makes no allowance for the classes of children mentioned above, namely, the sickly, those educated at home, the extremely poor, &c. I should, therefore, think that one-ninth of the entire population would be as many as we could reasonably hope to see in day-schools in the best times. As to Sunday-schools, we might expect a larger proportion, because attendance there costs nothing, and does not interfere with work and because many young persons remain there to a more advanced age than fifteen years. Remembering, however, still the sick and the very poor, and also remembering that the children of the upper and middle classes do not generally attend Sunday-schools, I should not have expected those who attend such institutions to amount to more than one-fifth of the population."

Now we have seen, in Lancashire and Yorkshire, the Sunday-scholars are, to the population, as one to every five and a half, while one in ten are found in Day-schools. Most of the factory children, Mr. Baines says, who go to school, attend National, British, or other public schools. It will not be possible, therefore, to establish the allegation, that the instruction given in Day-schools is valueless.

But then, the State Educationists turn round upon us, and say: "If there are so many schools, and so large a proportion of the working classes attend them, how do you account for so fearful an amount of ignorance, depravity, and crime? Of what character can the instruction be, which allows of such results?" These questions demand a full and explicit answer; and there are several considerations which require to be taken into account in estimating the efficiency of the existing machinery of instruction.

In the first place, the vice and ignorance concentrated in our large towns, are not characteristic of the working population generally, but are, for the most part, the distinguishing features of a caste the most degraded and the most averse from regular labour. Take, for instance, Lord Ashley's report of the state of Leeds, in which he adduced the number of juvenile offenders as indicating the general character of town; citing as one of his authorities, a gentleman who was Mayor of Leeds in 1838, but who, in a Letter to Mr. Baines, disclaims the inference unwarrantably drawn from his language, in the following terms:—

"That, in a considerable community like Leeds, there should be a large number of young delinquents, must be at once admitted. Most of them are the children of idle and profligate parents, who are attracted to a large town by the various resources which it offers to enable them to escape regular labour. They do not belong to the working population of the district. They pursue chiefly a life of vagrancy, or adopt such eccentric modes of obtaining a livelihood as serve only as a covering for various acts of mendicancy or petty theft. Their children form no proportion of the juvenile population of the borough, nor of the aggregate amount of children employed in factories. To refer to these unfortunates as a type of the whole community of young persons, is as absurd as it would be, to select as specimens of the physical vigour of the rising generation of operatives, the feeble and stunted children of a parish workhouse, who for the most part are the offspring of vice, and the heirs of disease.

"Lord Ashley also quotes the evidence of an active police-officer, Mr. Child, in support of his dark picture of the moral condition of our town. No one can be better informed as to the worst features of our social state than that useful functionary; but to adopt his testimony in illustration of the general inquiry as to our moral condition, is obviously unreasonable and unfair. The particular facts stated by him are no doubt painfully true, but they furnish no information as to the moral circumstances of the entire community, much less of that particular class of it, the young people employed in factories.

"Why did not these impartial Commissioners inquire from other parties, besides police-officers, as to the tendency of factory labour upon our youthful population? Why did they not advance from the constable to the magistrate, or to the magistrates' clerk? If, indeed, the latter had been examined in relation to this important investigation, a very different result would have transpired. You have my authority for stating, that the young people employed in factories are seldom brought before our local public tribunals; and the criminal youths so prominently referred to by Lord Ashley, as an important part of our local population, are not those who have been educated in our Sunday-schools, or are trained to labour in our factories, but the miserable and neglected children of the most reckless members of society, who have had the most imperfect education, and who have been at an early period initiated in the habits of indolence, profligacy and vice."

What would be thought of a writer who should adduce the condition of the squalid population of the back slums of St. Giles's, or the worst parts of Wapping, as samples of the morality of the working population of London? As to insubordination, Mr. Baines states, that there has not, for more than forty years, been a riot of any kind in Leeds, except one, so called, after the great Yorkshire election contest of 1807, when a hot-headed Tory magistrate, irritated by defeat, called forth the troops without the slightest necessity; and excepting also an insignificant brush at the turn-out of last autumn!

But a second consideration, too often overlooked, relates to the counteracting causes which have been at work;—want of employment, and consequent distress,—a diminished attendance at the Chapel and the Sunday-school, arising from the want of clothing, as well as from the recklessness induced by poverty,—sickness and disease produced by insufficient food,—and the moral deterioration arising from all these causes, in combination with the rapid augmentation of a pauper population, both from natural increase and influx from Ireland, and from general distress. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, the miracle is, that crime and demoralization have not advanced at a more fearful rate.

Into a third consideration we cannot now particularly enter; but we shall be able to show, from the admissions of parties clamorous for the extension of State Education, that the National Schools have failed either to obtain adequate support, or to supply efficient instruction;—their tendency being, "to contract rather than to expand the intellect;"—and the religious instruction being "too seldom conveyed in such a manner as to interest the mind, touch the affections, or mould the character of the scholars." How absurd to suppose that their efficiency would be improved by State Inspectors, Clerical Trustees, and Privy Council quackery!—Pat.

FRANCE.—The Chamber of Deputies rejected on Friday the reduction of 14,000 men proposed by the commission. M. Passey, whose love of economy is well known, having come forward to declare that a reduction of the infantry force would be fatal and pernicious, had great effect, and the reduction was from that moment virtually abandoned. M. Passey wished the reduction to be made on the artillery and cavalry. But the Chamber and the Commission having fresh in recollection the enormous sums necessary to purchase horses, and complete the materiel of artillery, when the war-cry burst on France, thought it bad economy to effect any reduction in those parts of the service. It is decided, therefore, that the present infantry force is not to be reduced. General Schneider told the house that the fortifications of Paris rendered a permanent increase of the French army necessary, not merely to defend the works, but to keep them in a state of preservation. This is one of the consequences of the fortifications of Paris not announced at the time of their being voted. Full 200 members rose against the reduction, which sufficed to reject it without a ballot. There were 380 members present.

Marshal Soult's speech on Thursday contained many remarkable expressions. That most remarkable, no doubt, is his declaration that he would not put the reductions in effect, if the Chamber voted it; in other words, that he would resign. Another no less remarkable expression was, his saying that the army would not bear the reduction. This was considered rather cavalier.

M. Guizot, on Friday, stated that the affairs of Spain were so unsettled, that it would not be prudent to diminish the effective force of the French army. If an attempt was made to convert Spain into a Portugal (the minister must have in these words alluded to a marriage with a Coburg), then he would advise the French troops to pass the Pyrenees.

To this very grave avowal of the minister, the merciless commission rejoined by further questions, such as—"What would you do if you crossed the Pyrenees? Are you ready to occupy all Spain—to take charge of its government, its policy, its finance, its reactionary measures? Do you want 14,000 men from us, in order to repeat the violent absurdity of 1823?"

M. Guizot replied, "That in case of intervention he did not want to meddle with the government of Spain. He would be contented with maintaining a Bourbon on the throne. He would not have the French troops advance beyond the Ebro; but he would seize Pampeluna, and the towns on that river."

Several members of the Commission here observed that "this was war—war with England and with Spain; and that though ready for war England on just provocation and on national grounds, they would never sanction the embarking in such wars as those on which France had justly succumbed—wars in which France appeared as the invader and oppressor of Spain, whilst England was allowed to step forward as her saviour and her liberator. If such are your views, M. Guizot, you shall have neither men nor money from us; we maintain the reduction."

Several members insisted on the necessity of maintaining French influence in a country which, like Spain, was at the very door of France; but they also insisted on doing this in a manner that should not offend the Spaniards.

The Chamber of Deputies continued on Saturday its discussion of the war budget, retrenching 752,000f. from the sum allotted to cavalry.—Pat. 26*th June.*

A CONTRAST—1815 AND 1843.—"The following eulogium," say the Courier Français, "was published in the year 1815 upon one of the generals of the empire:—'This man, in the succession of his different characters, will have founded the monument of Quiberon, and laid waste the dwelling-houses of La Vendee; he will have celebrated the obsequies of Louis XVI., and the resurrection of Napoleon; he will have been Minister of Louis XVIII., when Napoleon conspired, and the Major-General of Bonaparte when Louis XVIII., was betrayed.' The object of this diatribe was Marshal Soult; the journal which published it was the Moniteur de Gand, and the author who wrote it was M. Guizot. The Moniteur de Gand shortly afterwards disappeared from the political world, but the two personages are at present ministers. When perusing this passage what must M. Guizot think of Marshal Soult, and what must Marshal Soult think of M. Guizot?"—Ibid.

FRANCE.—One of the most celebrated public characters of France during the last half-century—Mademoiselle Lenormand, the fortune-teller—died on Monday, the 26th inst., at the age of seventy-two years, leaving a fortune of 500,000f. She reckoned, it is said, among her clientelle, all celebrated characters of the age—all the soldiers, gamblers, and other adventurers of both sexes, from the Emperors Napoleon and Alexander, down to the cantinière and kitchen-maid—all of whom professed their surprise at the profundity of her knowledge of events, past and future.—Ibid.

FRENCH DESIGNS IN THE SOUTH SEAS.—We said that Madagascar would speedily follow Tahiti; and, from the following paragraph, which we transcribe from the Courrier Français, the fulfilment of the prediction would seem to be at hand:—"The Queen of Madagascar has just raised M. De Lastelle, a Frenchman, to the dignity of Prince. This gentleman, who is a partner in the house of Rondaunay, of Bourbon, has founded on the eastern coast a number of useful establishments, and developed the produce of the country. He makes and distils spirituous liquors, and has formed some fine cocoa and coffee plantations. For fourteen years, he has been of the utmost service to the country."

Is this the M. Rondaunay who has been twice a bankrupt in France?—Ibid.

FRANCE.—The discussion of the war-budget was to commence on Wednesday. The reduction or non-reduction of the 14,000 men, which the commission would not consent to, forms the important question. M. Thiers and the opposition were at first inclined, nay, had professed their willingness, to support the ministry in maintaining the strength of the army. But since Marshal Soult and M. Guizot have made use of the state of Spain as an argument for keeping up this force, M. Thiers and the opposition will, it is said, oppose them, and vote for the reduction.—Pat.

MADAME MONTGOLFIER, the widow of the celebrated inventor of the first air balloon, called "Montgolfier," is still living, and has just entered her 110th year.—Ibid.

SPAIN.—The following appears to be the position of parties in Spain:—Zurbano has advanced against Barcelona as far as Igualda, half-way between Lerida and Barcelona, and about 60 miles from the latter. Seoane is stationed at Cervera, as a kind of reserve for Zurbano, and, at the same time, in position to observe Teruel, and keep the country clear between Zurbano and Lerida. Prim had taken his stand, covering Barcelona at Molins del Rey and at Lobregat, where he expected to be joined by six additional battalions from Gerona. The force of the insurgents amounted to 50,000 men, more or less armed, nearly all volunteers; as the regular troops, who had adhered to them, still remain in Barcelona, the commander of Montjuich having declared that he would open his fire if they would march against Zurbano. Espartero proposes, in the first instance, to fix his head-quarters at Roda, for the purpose of communicating on the right with Van Halen, who commands in Andalusia; and on the left with Zurbano and Zeon[illegible].

Zurbano had published a proclamation to the Catalonians, viz that he is come to fulfil a mission of peace, and that he wishes oblivion of the past. He expects them to dissolve the Junta, return to obedience, and await the decision of the Cortes.

The Regent has gone by the road of Aranjuez and Ocana, and has appointed Quinlana del Orden as the rendezvous of the troops.

The Regent received very drily a deputation from Cuenca, which came to recommend the programme of Lopez, saying he would make no concession to sedition, and that the town had better not wait for his visit to return to its obedience.

There is no fresh news from Spain, except risings in Corunna and Santander.

Seville was tranquil, and the insurrectionists had fled from Malaga, after extorting contributions from the citizens.—Pat. 29*th June.*

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

The Editor of the Friend of India begs to acknowledge the following donation :—

From Lieut. Brooke, Co's. Rs. 5, to the Benevolent Institution, Calcutta.

THE AUGUST MAIL.—Early yesterday morning we received the London Mail of the 5th of August; and have endeavored to make as much room as possible for extracts. We have therefore been obliged to omit several articles which were in type. By this opportunity, we have the melancholy intelligence that the Memnon Steamer, which conveyed the July Mails, was totally lost on the 1st of August, about 450 miles from Aden. The crew and passengers were saved, but the whole of the Mails have perished.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH'S SPEECHES.—There has been considerable discussion in the papers regarding the speeches delivered by the Governor General at the various entertainments given to his Lordship by the Military community in and around the Presidency, on which we propose to offer a brief remark or two. But before we enter on the subject, some observations of Standfast, a correspondent of the Hurkaru, who has taken part in these discussions, and who impugns the truth of facts relative to the last Affghan campaign which are not usually controverted, seem to demand some notice. He attributes the destruction of the force at Cabul, in some measure, to the inactivity and indecision of Lord Auckland. A mere reference to dates will shew that the remark is unfounded. Our late Governor General did not receive the first indistinct intelligence of the outbreak before the 28th of November. Had he sent orders by return of post to push on reinforcements with the utmost energy and speed, they could not have reached Ferozepore or Loodianah so as to have secured the arrival of troops at Jellalabad in time to be of any service to the Cabul force. There was a fatal lethargy and indecision manifested on the occasion, by those who should have "moved heaven and earth," so to speak, to urge on reinforcements, under an able and energetic commander; but the blame of that error does not rest with Lord Auckland, and he was too far from the scene of action to correct it.

Standfast's representations of subsequent measures do not accord with published records. The Blue Book shews us incontrovertibly that Lord Ellenborough, on the 15th of March, while with his Council, resolved to adopt the most vigorous measures to retrieve our national honour in Affghanistan; that, on the 19th of April, after having heard of the repulse of General England, and the fall of Ghuzni, he determined to give up the contest and to withdraw our troops from the country as speedily as possible. These orders remained in force for ten weeks; and whatever supplies of cattle were forwarded during this period were intended to assist the retreat, and cannot be placed to the credit of the subsequent advance. At length his Lordship discovered the mistake into which he had fallen, and set himself to retrieve it with a degree of vigor and zeal, worthy of the Duke himself. After the order for the advance had been issued, at the beginning of July, there was no longer any hesitation, or slackness; on the contrary, the energy which was displayed in every department ought to be regarded as an atonement for the previous error; but it does not weaken the credibility of the two historical facts, that a great error was committed in ordering the retreat, and that the cattle which enabled the troops to advance consisted almost entirely of those which had been sent on by Lord Auckland.

The remarkable partiality for the army, so repeatedly announced in these speeches, has been the subject of much remark and some animadversion. We have little to add to the observations we made when the sentiment was first broached, at the first of this series of entertainments. A compliment from the Governor General to those who were so anxious to do him honour, was naturally to have been expected. That the Head of the Government should embrace the opportunity thus afforded him to bestow the due meed of praise on that gallantry and devotion, by which the Army had restored the lustre of our military reputation, after it had been eclipsed, was only a matter of justice. But the exhibition of so exclusive a preference for one branch of the service, comes with an ill grace from one entrusted with the responsibility of the whole machine of Government, and from whom every class has a right to expect equal attention. An invidious partiality for any single order ought always to be avoided, from its tendency to weaken that general confidence in the Governor General which is so necessary for the efficiency of the administration, and to sow dissensions among the public servants. It is a painful subject which we willingly drop.

His Lordship is also reported to have said that India was conquered by the sword, and by the sword it must be governed, or maintained; that, his proper place was along side the Commander-in-Chief; that we were still, in a vast encampment; and that with the aid of the army he would do wonders for India. Of the literal accuracy of these expressions we have no good assurance; but there can be little doubt that they exhibit the spirit of the Governor General's sentiments. We fear they are calculated to confirm the charge so often brought against our administration by intelligent foreigners, that during the period in which we have held dominion in India, extending almost to the limit of a century, we have totally failed to conciliate the attachment or confidence of our Native subjects; and are consequently still obliged to govern India by the sword, as much as though it had been held during this period by the most ruthless and oppressive of conquerors. If India is but a large encampment, then its Government is a 'Government of sentry boxes;' and all our boasted attempts to give security of person and property, and the benefit of just and equal laws to its people, and thus to render the permanence of our institutions an object of desire, must have totally failed. We are no farther advanced in the practice of good government than we were eighty years ago. The great object of our administration should be to render the sword unnecessary as an instrument of Government; if therefore we can only govern India by the sword, that object has not been attained. We are behind even the Government of China, which maintains good order among three times the number of our subjects, with only half the military strength we keep up.

But this view of our Indian empire is any thing but sound. That we acquired it by the sword is of course self evident, because we did not acquire it by gift or inheritance;—always excepting the Island on which the Bombay Times is printed.—But to assert that we govern it by the sword, or that the allegiance of our native subjects is secured only by brute force, and not by a rational acquiescence in the principles and practice of our Government, is to pronounce a greater libel on our administration than the licentious press in its most licentious paroxysm has yet ventured to utter. We believe his Lordship never uttered such a sentiment. His Lordship most probably said, what others have said before him, not that the country must be governed by the sword, but that the Empire could not be maintained without it. Last year he travelled five hundred miles by dawk without meeting a soldier. It was certainly not to the presence of the military that the Head of the Government, accompanied by only one or two attendants, was indebted for his safety. Bengal and Behar, with forty millions of subjects, do not require ten thousand troops to keep the peace, and to secure a perfect obedience to the orders of Government. The superstitious city of Benares, and the commercial emporium of Mirzapore, and the Mahomedan metropolis of Delhi, may require the presence of troops; but so do the manufacturing towns and districts of England. If our possessions were not surrounded with powerful and ambitious neighbours; if we had not in the heart of our dominions, a large number of princes, with little armies at their command, we might disband half our present army without risking in the smallest degree the stability of our Empire. But in a country so recently the scene of anarchy, a considerable force must be necessary to prevent its revival, till those habits of lawlessness become extinct, by the lapse of time. The force we require, is not for the purpose of guarding our own functionaries from the fury of the people, but of protecting the peaceable and industrious from those who would break up the order of society that they might revel in the confusion.

In Affghanistan our authority never extended beyond the limit of our encampment; every man was a natural and a religious enemy. We could never have governed that country but by the sword. We could collect no revenue but at the point of the bayonet. But this description will not apply to India. Here the spirit of acquiescence is stronger than the spirit of resistance. The people have become habituated to our institutions, and though they are very far from perfect, yet the Natives have confidence in the protection they afford; and in the substantive justice which they give. They do not fail to perceive that by far the largest portion of their misery is inflicted by their own countrymen, who are invested with the power of office or wealth. They trace no part of their distress to the personal character of the conquerors, or the oppressive character of a foreign rule. Hence there is a general feeling of submission throughout the country, which is the result of contentment, and not of sullenness. Still a military force is necessary to repress sudden outbreaks, to overawe the unruly, and to give confidence to the community in general. But there is nothing in the circumstances of our own provinces, or in the disposition and feelings of the people which would render it necessary for the Governor General to consider his proper place to be by the side of the Commander-in-Chief, in the midst of the army. On the contrary, there is every thing in the sober and orderly habits, in the activity and submission of the people, to make the Governor General desirous of being in the midst of his Council, devising schemes for improving the resources of the country, ameliorating the condition of the people, and perfecting the administration. India is in no other sense governed by the sword than England is. In the present century, there has oftener been a necessity for calling out the military to maintain tranquillity in England, than in India. We have had two outbreaks, if we remember aright, the one in the district of Bareilly, and the other in the city of Benares, the latter of which was quelled by the decision and tact of Mr. Bird. In both instances, the insurrection originated with ourselves. We tightened the revenue screw, and the people manifested that "insolent impatience of taxation," which somehow or other seems to exist alike in all climates, and among all people. If British India has been more tranquil, and has stood less in need of a military force to maintain peace than our own native land during the last fifty years, then it is a misuse of language to say we govern it by the sword.

RIVER STEAM NAVIGATION.—We are delighted to find from an article in the Star, which we have copied elsewhere, that there is at length a prospect that the navigation of our rivers by Steamers is likely to be taken up by private capitalists. We have repeatedly endeavoured to force the subject on public attention, but without any satisfactory result. The establishment of river Steamers at this Presidency, through the enlightened policy of Lord William Bentinck, and the active exertions of Capt. Johnson was an important event in the History of Indian improvement. But unfortunately while the most astonishing progress has been made in steam navigation in Europe and America during the last ten years, we have made none in India. The new vessels recently sent out by the Court of Directors, vary in no respect from those which were constructed for the original experiment, than in being heavier and more clumsy. We still continue to use two vessels, a steam tug, and a cargo boat or accommodation vessel. We have made little improvement in the speed of the Steamers, and the charges have risen with the lapse of time. Meanwhile the demand for freight seems to have increased in spite of the augmentation of the charge. The number of vessels employed on the Ganges has been multiplied, but this has not succeeded in lowering the rate of freight, because the supply is still far below the demand. From these facts we gather that double the present number of vessels would find ample encouragement, and that if the price of transport could be reduced to a reasonable rate, the despatch of merchandize by steam would become the rule and not the exception.

It is quite manifest that Government cannot supply boats adequate to the wants of a large and increasing commerce without an outlay of public money which would be altogether injudicious. Government has nobly led the way, and demonstrated the feasibility of the undertaking; to carry it out to the full extent of the public exigency, must be left to a private association, working with commercial capital. From the failure of almost all our joint stock enterprizes in Calcutta, and the general disfavour into which they have fallen, owing to the mismanagement which has marked their career, it is hopeless to expect that any such association can be formed in this country. But England is overflowing with capital, and only wants the assurance of a return to apply it to the use of India. This assurance can be acquired only by the employment of an agency which shall be independent of local influence. Not that there is no jobbing in England, as well as in Calcutta; but there seems to be this essential difference between the two kinds of jobbing; that they job and succeed, at least often; we job and fail, invariably. The supply of Steam boats for our rivers adequate to our wants, must therefore be undertaken by English capitalists, and managed by agents in this country, responsible to parties at home.

But we want improvement in the form and construction of our vessels, which shall give an accession of speed and a diminution of cost; and for these improvements we must go to America, the great scene of Inland Steam navigation. We must learn our lessons at New Orleans and on the Mississippi. North America excels England as much in the excellent adaptation of steamers to long river navigation, as England outstrips her in the construction of sea going Steamers. Yet when the Court of Directors had determined to construct new vessels for the rivers of India, they adopted the clumsy old build of the vessels already in use, instead of sending an intelligent Engineer to America, to study the art of building which had been brought to such perfection on its magnificent rivers. We are likely at length to enjoy the benefit of that experience. The Star announces that an association of Capitalists in London has undertaken to supply our rivers with a superior class of vessels; and that the Engineer they propose to employ has a familiar acquaintance with the mode in which the Americans navigate the Mississippi. The Association proposes to construct vessels adapted to the most intricate navigation, in which the locomotive power shall be placed in the same vessel with the cargo and the passengers. The very first improvement we require, is that of dispensing with two vessels. Without this, all inferior improvement will do little or nothing to lessen the cost of transport or to accelerate progress. It must be manifest that whenever this shall be effected, the same vessel, making the trip in a shorter period, will be able to do 50 per cent more work during the year without any additional expense for fuel or the crew. The vessels we are now promised are said to be built on this principle. We can scarcely credit the fact that vessels of three hundred horse power, will only draw two feet and a half of water. But if we can but obtain such vessels they will be every thing we could desire. Their power will enable them to overcome the current of the Ganges in the height of its strength. They will convey a larger cargo of merchandize at a more reasonable rate, and in a shorter time than our present vessels—and they will find ample and remunerative employment. There can be no reason why the port of Calcutta should not be as thickly crowded with river steamers as that of New Orleans;—but alas, the spirit of improvement, which is so vigorous in the West, is dormant in the East.

THE LAST CALCUTTA GAZETTE, AND RECENT CHANGES.—The last number of the Calcutta Gazette contains a string of appointments and removals, each of which affords matter for reflection. Soon after the province of Scinde had been annexed to our empire, three young gentlemen of the Civil Service, Mr. Riddell, Mr. Cocks and Mr. Wingfield were selected by the Governor General, and sent thither, with the view, we suppose, of conducting the duties of the Civil administration. The last Calcutta Gazette announces that they have been ignominiously expelled the province, on the representation of his Excellency the Governor. What may have been their offence we have not heard, and indeed, with the last Notification before us, we will not venture to enquire. But we are not perhaps very wide of the mark in supposing, that their removal has been occasioned by a deficiency in the virtue of implicit obedience, which Sir C. Napier is of all men most likely to exact. Perhaps some remonstrance may have been construed into contumacy, which we all know to be very nearly allied to rebellion, which is as 'the sin of witchcraft.' Two of the young gentlemen are therefore reduced to a mere subsistence salary, a kind of bread and water allowance, till the 1st of March next, and the third till he shall reach Delhi. Their appointment to Scinde appeared from the first to have been premature. A country, but recently conquered, which with a population of scarcely a million, requires an army of occupation, to the number of more than ten thousand men, is not exactly a scene for the labours of Civilians. For some time to come that country must be governed by the sword, and entrusted to Military Magistrates and Military Collectors, who shall implicitly obey the orders of the Governor, and temper justice and mercy with might, as far as the circumstances of the country will allow.

Major Lawrence has been appointed to succeed, perhaps to supersede, Mr. Hodgson as Resident at Nepal. He is directed to take charge of the appointment on the 1st of December. It is not usual thus to fix a day for the transfer of an office, except in cases in which the transfer is more agreeable to the controlling authority than to the retiring officer. There is a peremptory tone in the announcement which seems to indicate that the removal from office is not altogether voluntary; and that the disinherited Resident would still linger about Katmandoo, if he were not assured that his allowances would cease on the 1st of December. It is well known however that Mr. Hodgson has been desirous for some time of retiring from Nepal, on account of his health. Whenever he retires, he will carry with him the affectionate regrets of the Court and people among whom he has so long represented the British character. He has done good service to the state during the last five years. The Chiefs of Nepal have long been known to meditate a renewal of hostilities with us in the hope of dismembering the empire; and they have been intriguing for years in every Native Court to which they could obtain access. Repeatedly have they been on the eve of declaring war with us; but the tact of the Resident has succeeded in maintaining peace, and restraining the Cabinet from plunging into a war with us, more particularly at that juncture when our own disasters presented so tempting an opportunity to Nepalese ambition. If Governments had reached that stage of civilization, at which the merit of preventing a war was considered as great as that of bringing it to a successful issue, Mr. Hodgson would not leave Katmandoo without his medal of merit. Be that as it may; he is to be succeeded by one of the most able and energetic of our public officers, who has been long trained to diplomacy in the school of the Punjab. The selection of Major Lawrence for Mr. Hodgson's office affords another proof of Lord Ellenborough's discernment.

The appointment of Major Rawlinson to an important Political post, exactly adapted to his talents and acquirements, which the Calcutta Gazette announces, is an act of justice on the part of the Governor General, the value of which will be fully appreciated by the public. It was a matter of general regret that a man of his ability and energy, and who had rendered such eminent services to the state in so difficult a post as that of Candahar, should have been laid on the shelf, in common with the rest of Lord Auckland's clique, as those who rose to distinction during the last administration have been designated. That injustice has now been redressed. He has been appointed to a station where although there may not be the same scope for his diplomatic talents as in Affghanistan, a boundless field will be opened for those antiquarian researches to which he has devoted his leisure moments. The non employment of Major Rawlinson,—a trump card of our Government, if we may be allowed to quote the opinion of one of the highest and shrewdest of the public servants, not now in India—was a grievous discouragement to all those who were building their hopes of promotion on their own meritorious exertions. They will now learn that, sooner or later, merit will meet with its due reward, and that the public administration is as anxious as ever to avail itself of all the talent which the ranks of the Service possess. We can no longer despair of seeing those whose abilities were so eminently displayed in the field of Affghan politics, Col. Outram, Majors Macgregor and Matheson, and Captain George Lawrence again placed in situations of public trust.

LOTTERIES.—The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette, in a brief article we give below, represents lotteries as a very gentlemanly and "agreeable pastime," blame-worthy only in their abuse. He is of opinion that in an extensive country like India, a Government Lottery, conducted on fair principles, may even be an advantage; but he has not explained to us how the encouragement which the fairest lottery gives to the spirit of gambling, can be an advantage to any country, large or small. He tells us that, the taste of many persons leads them to employ their talents in concocting various lottery schemes but that nothing can be equal to that which is managed under the superintendence of Government, when strictly guarded by the Press. We have been accustomed hitherto to consider the various lotteries set on foot by private speculators as growing out of their cupidity; and we believe that it was entirely as a matter of revenue, not as a matter of taste, that Government established its lotteries both in England and in India. It is easy to comprehend how Governments may be reconciled to the receipt of an income, though it should grow out of the corruption of public morals; but this is the first instance in which lotteries, with all their demoralizing effects, have been traced up to the taste of the projector. But it seems that even Government lotteries cannot always be trusted, without the strict guardianship of the Press. Without its constant vigilance, it would appear that State Lotteries may be sources of mischief. But the Press in Calcutta, we are happy to say, has nobly vindicated its character, not by watching over the organization and movements of the State Lotteries, but by denouncing them altogether and by urging Government, from a view of the evils which attend them, to close its own shop that it may thus have a moral right to close the shops of others. In Calcutta, State lotteries have ceased, and the gamblers have been driven to Lattey, Brothers and Co. and Methold and Co. for the indulgence of their propensities. State Lotteries now exist only at Madras. The Bombay Gentleman's Gazette tells us with delight that the "scheme of the 73d Government Lottery has received the sanction of the most Noble the Governor in Council of the Madras Presidency" and is published in that journal. We read this announcement with other feelings than those of our contemporary. We think it would have been far better for the Governor to have applied to the Governor General for permission to abolish the Madras Lotteries. Doubtless it would have been cheerfully and speedily given. We hope the assent of the Court of Directors to the entire prohibition of all Lotteries, public and private, throughout all the Presidencies, will be speedily received in India. The subject will have been before them nearly three months when the August Mail left England. There can be no ground for doubt or hesitation. The immoral and mischievous tendency of the Lotteries has been indisputably established. They cannot be re-established in the face of the public of England. When once suspended, every one felt that their doom was sealed. No Government ventures to revive a nuisance. But this delay in the arrival of the Court's reply, postpones the legal extinction of all lotteries, and enables the small fry of Lottery projectors to draw the unwary and the dissolute within their toils.

"There was, some time ago, a long discussion in the Calcutta Journals, respecting the propriety of abolishing Lotteries: they appear in general to have pronounced judgment as to the immorality of such modes of amusing and exciting the Indian Public; yet we presume that no legislative enactment is likely to be sanctioned on the subject. This opinion is formed on the fact of the scheme of the 73rd Government Lottery having received the sanction of the Most Noble the Governor in Council of the Madras Presidency, and which we this day publish.

"We must here calmly express our opinion, that it is the abuse of Lotteries, which is to be considered blameable. In an honest and well conducted Lottery, as a means of affording an agreeable pastime to the Public, there is nothing criminal; and in an extensive country such as India, one carried on by the Government, and on the fairest principles, would seem an advantage. It would appear that the taste of many persons leads them to employ their talents in concerting various schemes; but there cannot be any equal to that which is managed under the superintendence of the Government Agent, and when strictly arduad by the Public Press."

CAPT. LAWRENCE AND THE CAMPAIGN IN AFFGHANISTAN.—The number of the India Review for May 1843, which has just made its appearance, contains a brief Memoir of the services of Capt. Lawrence, Military Secretary to the late Sir William Macnaghten. A portrait of that officer, in the dress he wore while a prisoner among the Affghans is prefixed to the number, and appears to us to be a very faithful likeness. The Memoir consists chiefly of extracts from Dr. Atkinson's Work on Affghanistan; but it contains also notes of the Editor's conversation with Capt. Lawrence, which present us with some interesting anecdotes illustrative of the state of the prisoners during their captivity, as well as of the Affghan character.

The Memoir notices with a kind of tipid regret the injustice, regarding his allowances during the period in which he remained a Hostage in the hands of the enemy, of which that officer has been the victim. Our Military Regulations provide for the case of officers who may happen to become prisoners of war, but they do not contemplate the possibility of a British Army ever being reduced to the humiliating necessity of delivering hostages to an enemy. It rested with Government therefore to determine the rate of allowances which the hostages in the hands of the Affghans should receive; and it has been fixed upon the most niggardly scale. Captain Lawrence was allowed for this period no higher sum than 170 Rs. a month—less by 130 Rs. than he received the day he landed in the country. This was the only reward he obtained for becoming security for his brethren in arms, with a man who had recently imbued his hands in the blood of his beloved Chief. It is but one of the chances of war that the prisoners who survived the wreck of that army, and many of whom exhibited as heroic a devotion in the midst of unexampled dangers, as any of their brethren attached to the garrison of Jellalabad or to the victorious army, should be passed over without any acknowledgment of their services; but it reflects little credit on the public Authorities that those who volunteered to remain in the hands of the enemy for the benefit of others, should be subjected to so serious a loss of allowances, in addition to the loss of all their property in the retreat.

We are happy to find it stated in the India Review that Capt. Lawrence intends, during his furlough, to publish a narrative of events at Cabul. We will venture to predict that it will be found in the highest degree interesting. The narratives we have from the pen of Lady Sale, Lieut. Eyre, and Lieut. Melville were composed by those who were not in a position to perceive the secret springs of action during the siege of the cantonment. Captain Lawrence was the confidential Assistant of the Envoy; he lived in his family; he was acquainted with his daily thoughts and projects, and participated in his hopes and anxieties. He will be able to describe the view which the Envoy took from time to time of the position of affairs; the arrangements which he so repeatedly proposed for the relief of the garrison, and the listlessness or perversity by which those arrangements were thwarted. Without his narrative we should but imperfectly understand the cause of that melancholy catastrophe.

We embrace this opportunity of stating that the papers belonging to the late Envoy, which Lady Macnaghten succeeded in preserving during her captivity, and bringing in safety into the provinces, have been sent home, to be placed in the hands of his family with a view to the publication of a full narrative of the transaction, and the vindication of his memory from the obloquy which has been so unjustly heaped upon it.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.—Last Friday, the 15th of September, was the Eighth anniversary of the freedom granted to the Press by Sir Charles Metcalfe by law. Its practical freedom however dates from an earlier period, and was coeval with the commencement of Lord William Bentinck's administration. During this period of virtual and legal freedom, extending through fifteen years, more grievances have been redressed, more salutary reforms introduced, and greater improvements effected in the spirit and management of our institutions, than at any preceding time. To this period belongs the abolition of the Transit and Town duties, of Lotteries, of Judicial Oaths, and of Slavery. During this period, Inland Steam Navigation has been established, a Settlement of the land revenue believed to be equitable and advantageous to the people, has been made in the Western Provinces for a period sufficiently long to encourage agriculture; the unhallowed connection of Government with the shrines of idolatry has been abolished; the office of Deputy Magistrate has been established; the use of the vernacular language has been restored to the country, and the Natives have been reconciled to our administration by being admitted largely to assist in conducting it. It would be idle to attribute these beneficial innovations to the sole agency of the Press; but it is undeniable that it has greatly contributed to their adoption, by the discussions of which it has been the channel, and by its uniform efforts to introduce a liberal tone of thought among those entrusted with the Government. In reference to those improvements the adoption of which was opposed by the inveteracy of prejudice, the Press has been pre-eminently useful in facilitating them by the removal of prejudices. The freedom of the Press has encouraged a general freedom of thought and a spirit of manly enquiry through the community, which has led to the exposure and correction of abuses which would otherwise have continued to fester in the body politic. It has inspired both Natives and Europeans with a degree of confidence in the intentions of Government, and created an attachment to the institutions of the country to which they were before in a great measure strangers. This assertion is not affected by the ebullitions of disaffection recently exhibited in the Fouzdary Balakhana, by a few young patriots, and which have died out with the circumstances which gave them birth. Though the Press, in the exercise of its freedom, may sometimes have occasioned mischief, yet the evil has been far outweighed by the good of which it has been the instrument; and it is only by a comparison of good and evil that the value of any human institution can be ascertained.

Yet the Press has been pronounced licentious by those in England who have not only the power, but we fear also the disposition, to impose fetters on it; and we must not be too sanguine touching the continuance of the freedom we now enjoy. It may be quite true that the Press since it was made free, has not affected the stability of the British authority in India, but rather served to strengthen it. During this period of freedom, our empire has, it is true, passed through an ordeal which has tested its strength beyond every preceding trial, and is at this moment more consolidated and firm, as far as the attachment of the people is concerned, than before the ordeal.—But, within the last seven years, India has been united to the civilized world by the establishment of a monthly steam communication. A new interest has been excited in our local proceedings; and the character of the administration, and the conduct of our rulers has become a subject of discussion in the European commonwealth. A hundred thousand newspapers are annually despatched to Europe: seven years ago there were not a thousand. It would be vain to deny that public opinion in England and on the Continent is influenced by the representations thus sent home month by month. If ever the freedom of the Press should be suspended —and our apprehensions arise from the unfavourable light in which it is regarded by some of the most influential members of the present Ministry—it will be with the view of controlling public opinion in Europe, and not in India. Here the Press has little or no influence upon the natives in the interior; its power is limited in a great measure to the metropolis, which is isolated from the country. During the period in which the circulation of our newspapers in Europe has increased fifty, perhaps a hundred fold, the increase of Native subscribers to indigenous or English newspapers has not even doubled. Neither can public opinion among Europeans of India ever affect the solidity of the empire. They are but a handful, and their sentiments, if we may judge from recent events, are of no very obstinate character. Half a dozen well cooked dinners are quite sufficient at any time to command public opinion within the Ditch. It is not therefore from any influence which the Press exercises in the European or Native community that it is so violently decried. It is the nine thousand papers conveyed by every monthly Mail from the shores of India, and diffused through the various nations of Christendom, which render its comments an object of complaint, and which may sooner or later affect its freedom. But unless this monthly communication can be abolished, and the union of India and Europe can be repealed; unless the interest which has been excited in Indian affairs, can be extinguished, the abolition of the freedom of the Press, will not meet the case. Information will inevitably find a circulation through channels which no Government can control; and the result will be much the same as in the case of spirits or tobacco, or any other produce for which the public evince a partiality. The prohibition will only increase the contraband article. If the Press be shackled, the monthly overland summaries may yet be published in London. If the printing of the single copy intended for the printers in London be interdicted, still human ingenuity will not be exhausted. The whole paper may be sent home as a letter; or those parts which Government may consider harmless may be set up in type and despatched, while the articles which would be deemed obnoxious may be sent in manuscript. If any attempt should be made by the ministry at home to muzzle the Press, we are confident that it will create odium without effecting its object, and that it will inflict far more injury on Government than the most unrestrained freedom of the Press could do. It is in the nature of things, that men should form a high opinion of a Government which fearlessly exposes its measures to public criticism, and entertain the darkest suspicions of any Government which finds it necessary to restrain public discussion, and to allow nothing to appear without its sanction. In this suspicious frame of mind reports will generally find credit in proportion to their extravagance, and the information which is obtained clandestinely will be swallowed with the greater avidity.

The late Mrs. Hanson.—We announce with feelings of deep regret the death, at Tranquebar, on the 31st of August, of Mrs. Hanson, the beloved wife of the Honourable Mr. Hanson, the Governor of that settlement. He was formerly the Chief of Serampore, and during the four years in which his Lady occupied the first place in its society, she endeared herself to all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance by the simplicity of her character, and the extreme amiability of her disposition. She has left a husband and eight children to deplore her loss; which will be deeply felt, not only by the members of her own family, but in a large circle of friends.

WEEKLY EPITOME OF NEWS.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14.

— A correspondent of the Englishman states, that the rent received for goods lodged in the Bonded Warehouse amounted in the last half year to 29,152 Rs. and that the general charges, including the establishment, during that period amounted to 9892 Rs. or 34 per cent. on the rents. "No wonder the dividends are so small, and the shares at a discount." The establishment and charges amount to a little more than 800 Rs. a month. Some reduction may possibly be made in this charge, but when property of vast amount is concerned, some person of respectability must be appointed to take charge of it, and 500 Rupees a month, is not beyond the average value of such an appointment. For augmented dividends, the shareholders must look to augmented rents.

— The Ice has at length arrived. The supply is small, within two hundred tons; but the second vessel has now been four months on her voyage, and may be hourly expected. It is to be hoped that the Americans will not again leave us destitute of an article which has ceased to be a luxury, and is now reckoned among the necessaries of life.

— The Hindoostan arrived at Galle late on Saturday evening the 19th of August; and was expected to sail on the 21st. It would thus appear that in Ceylon she was two whole days employed in coaling.

— A notification has just appeared in the papers stating that Government had resolved to garrison the whole of the province of Scinde from the Bengal Army.

— A brief account of the last meeting of the Agricultural Society appears among our selections extracted from the Hurkaru. The final report of the Finance Committee relative to the Carey Testimonial was read, from which it appears that the sum of 1448 Rs. has been collected towards this object, which has been remitted to Dr. Royle in England with instructions to procure a marble bust of the late venerable founder of the Society.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 15.

— The Delhi Gazette states, that such is the ill feeling between the Muharajah at Lahore and his Minister Rajah Dhyan Singh, notwithstanding their apparent reconciliation, that serious apprehensions are entertained of a serious breach between them. The King has assembled an immense body of troops at Lahore, ostensibly for the celebration of the Dusserah which comes off early next month, but it is far from improbable that the two parties, who are so nearly matched in point of military strength, may bring their disputes to an issue by an appeal to the sword.

— The latest account from Sukker received through Delhi extends to the 28th ultimo, when sickness was on the decline. The casualties had not been so great as the number of those attacked might have led us to suppose. Sixteen Europeans, one woman and one child had, up to that day, died of the prevailing fever.

— Yesterday's semaphore announced the arrival of the Ellenborough from London, after a very short passage. Mr. Theodore Dickens, formerly of the Calcutta bar, then Ecclesiastical Registrar, and latterly a member of the extinct firm of Ferguson, Brothers and Co. is, we perceive, a passenger on her. It is generally supposed that he will resume to his place at the bar.

— The Star furnishes us with a return of the number of Coolies shipped to the Mauritius during the month of August last in eleven vessels. The number of men was 2109, of women 290, and of children 79; in all, 2478.

— The Delhi Gazette has received intelligence from Cabul to the effect, that Dost Mahomed has been gradually losing ground among the chiefs, and that his pecuniary necessities have compelled him to resort to measures of great severity towards the poorer classes. He had even ordered those who were possessed of any English coin to bring it in. These proceedings exasperated both the chiefs and the people and they appeared in open arms against him. He met and defeated them; but though the victory was upon a small scale yet it served for a time to confirm his authority.

— The post of Commandant of the King of Delhi's guards having become vacant, it is said to have been conferred on Willayut Alee Khan, on his paying down the sum of 10,000 Rs. which has been devoted to the expense of the Mission to England.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16.

— The general Relief of the season has been published in General Orders. It is an exceedingly small one, and extends only to ten Regiments, of which four are unfortunately to be transferred from one half batta station to another. It is supposed however that when the Army of Exercise breaks up, there will be a more extensive relief.

— The Bombay Times states, on the authority of letters from Hydrabad of the 6th of August that the weather remained cool and agreeable, and that the health of the troops, both European and Native, continued to improve. The Indus was supposed to have reached its height, the canals, tanks, and ditches were every where full of water. After all, the casualties in Scinde have been far fewer in number than we had been led to anticipate from the dampness of the climate.

— The Ceylon Observer, of the 24th of August, has some forcible observations on Slavery in the Kandian Provinces, for which we hope to make room next week, together with our own comment. After the abolition of Slavery throughout the Company's dominions, the Queen's Government at Ceylon cannot plead the want of a good example, for not extinguishing it in that island.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 18.

— The Englishman publishes a letter written at Bombay at half past six P. M. the 6th of September, which announces the arrival of a Steamer; but instead of being the Steamer with the August Mails, it turns out to be the Victoria, which left Bombay on the 27th August, with the Mails for Suez. She was five days running 550 miles. She experienced bad weather, and finding that her coals must run short before she could reach Aden, thought it prudent to return. This disappointment is owing to some improvements which were made in the vessel at Bombay, and which reduced her speed so much, that instead of being the fastest vessel from that Port, she is become the slowest. Happy are those who took the precaution of sending their letters by the Hindoostan from Calcutta.

— The Delhi Gazette states, that at a recent Durbar held at Lahore, it was mentioned that many of the Sirdars of Moultan were anxious to afford assistance to the ex-Ameer Shere Mahomed, but the Dewan having intercepted the correspondence, had placed them under arrest, and threatened to treat with the utmost severity any one who should be found corresponding with them.

— The Bombay Times in reference to Scinde says, that letters come in from Sukkor and Hydrabad as punctually as from the most tranquil parts of the world; that the tidings brought are stale and flat; that there is no fighting, no sickness, no adventure, no stir of any kind, and that even rumours of danger have died away; that the chiefs were coming in daily and that the country was becoming pacified with most unexpected celerity.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19.

— The Bombay Correspondent of the Englishman, in a letter of the 7th instant, states that the Cleopatra steamer was ordered to be in readiness to start with the returned mails and passengers of the Victoria. She was ordered to leave the port at daylight; but the Government despatches were not ready before 3 P. M., and she did not get to sea before 4½. It is scarcely possible for her to reach Egypt in time for the Peninsular Company's vessel.

— The Reverend Dr. Duff will this evening deliver, in the Town Hall, the first of a series of lectures, expository of the principles, the maintenance of which has led to the recent disruption of the Established Church. We are happy to find from a list sent us by Mr. Stewart, that the subscription to the Free Protesting Church amounts to nearly 12,000 Rupees.

— The Ice from Boston, viâ Madras, has now arrived and is again for sale at the Ice House at the low rate of two annas a seer.

— Papers were received yesterday from the Straits and from China, but their contents have been anticipated by a recent arrival with later intelligence. Numerous have been the conjectures regarding the appointment of Col. Butterworth to the Governorship of the Straits. One has it that he met Lord Ellenborough at the Cape, and got into his Lordship's favour; another that he married the daughter of Mr. John Bird, Member of Council at Madras, and niece of the Deputy Governor of Bengal; and now we find a third reason for the appointment in the Singapore paper; namely, that he is the nephew of Mr. Butterworth Bayley, the Director. It seems as though the writers supposed that these separate or united claims were so strong that they need not be supported by any reference to personal merit. We have no doubt that Col. Butterworth will make a good Governor, and that he owes his own appointment to his own conduct in other departments of duty, and not to nepotism. But the removal of Mr. Blundell, must continue to be a blot on the character of this Government. He will soon be up here, and embark for England to lay his case before the Court of Directors, and if report speaks true, he will make some very singular and rather awkward disclosures.

— We are sorry to learn that Col. Alexander, the able and indefatigable Adjutant General at Madras, is constrained to quit his office for a time and seek the renovation of his health and strength at the Cape. His close application of eight and ten hours a day to the duties of his post, will sufficiently account for the necessity of this relaxation.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20.

— The August Mail arrived yesterday afternoon, and a precis of the intelligence will be found in subsequent columns.

The undersigned begs thankfully to acknowledge the following sums in aid of the Kishnaghur Relief Fund.

CONTEMPORARY SELECTIONS.

AGRICULTURAL AND HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The monthly meeting of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society was held yesterday morning in the Town Hall, at the usual hour. In the absence of the President, Sir John Peter Grant, one of the Vice Presidents, Dr. Griffiths, took the Chair.

The Honorary Secretary read the minutes of the last month's meeting, which were confirmed.

The final report of the Finance Committee was read relative to the Carey Testimonial. It appeared that the sum of Rs. 1448 has been collected towards this object, and the Committee recommended, that this sum, with a small exception, should be remitted to Dr. Royle in England, with instructions to him to procure a marble bust of the late venerable Founder of the Society. The recommendation of the Finance Committee was approved of by the meeting, and the money ordered to be remitted by the next mail.

A report was also brought forward from the Fruit and Kitchen Garden Committee. It was resolved upon, sometime ago, to appropriate a certain portion of the Society's funds towards granting premiums to native malees and others, with a view to encourage the early growth of cold-weather vegetables and fruits, and also prolonging their production to a longer period than hitherto. In accordance with this intention, the Committee put in a schedule of the prizes which it would be most beneficial to offer, and recommended the 28th October to be fixed for a public exhibition. The Committee's proposal was approved of and passed.

A report was read from Dr. Mouat, on a black dye, produced in the Saharun country, of which a sample had been presented to the Society. Dr. Mouat found the dye to produce a jet black in the article dyed with it. The dye also is not easily to be resisted or removed even by the strongest acids. But it does not appear to be a pure vegetable black dye, so much desiderated. Dr. Mouat, therefore, expressed a desire to obtain the plant, from which this dye is said to be produced, for farther experiment.

The gentlemen proposed at the last meeting, were all duly elected members of the Society; and several other names were proposed for election at next month's meeting.

There were a great number of specimens and presentations of different kinds laid upon the table. Of these the following appeared to be the most important.

There was a quantity of the famous Guano manure, of which so much has been said, presented by Mr. Henly, and brought by him from the Mauritius, where it has been found to be of great value, in the cultivation of sugar canes. Mr. Henly also annexed a few observations on the ingredients which enter into the composition of this manure, the price at which it is procurable, and the peculiar benefits with which its use is connected in sugar plantations, as well as the mode of its use.

There were on the table several specimens of the ichen, also presented by Mr. Henly, and brought by him from the Mauritius. One of these specimens was said to be the last of the variety, and capable of producing a beautiful dye. Its marketable price in England was stated to be about £120 per ton.

The Society has been presented with an extensive assortment of seeds collected in Affghanistan. This presentation was made by Major Anderson, of the Artillery, to whom the thanks of the Society were ordered to be duly returned.

Before the meeting broke up, a resolution was brought forward and generally approved of, to the effect, that the Society should subscribe for about half a dozen copies of a work, in the course of publication by Mr. Raye, to be entitled the "Sugar Planter's Companion." Lord Ellenborough has consented to the work being dedicated to him, and the meeting thought, that the Society was indebted to Mr. Raye for his having allowed the Committee of Papers to publish the first portions of his forthcoming publication in the Society's Journal. In acknowledgment of this obligation, it was the sense of the meeting, that the Society should subscribe for a few copies of Mr. Raye's proposed work.—Hurkaru, Sept. 14.

LA MARTINIERE.

Yesterday having been the anniversary of the death of the Founder of this Institution, the customary annual sermon, in honor of the occasion, was preached by the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop. Besides the children belonging to the Institution, the school chapel was quite thronged with a numerous company of ladies and gentlemen. The Honorable the Deputy Governor and suite honored the occasion with their presence; and there were likewise present Fred. Millett, Daniel Elliot, and F. Halliday, Esquires, and several other Civil, Military, and Clerical gentlemen. Our respected Diocesan seemed enfeebled from bodily ailment, and on that account, no doubt, the discourse delivered by him, was wanting in much of that fire and animation which are his peculiar characteristics as a preacher. The sermon, notwithstanding, was a good one, sound, practical and highly instructive. That well-known beautiful passage from Isaiah II. 2, 3, 4, verses, was chosen for the text,—and the subject of the discourse was the leading features, the principles and the tendency of what his Lordship termed the "Christian School." After the sermon, prizes to the most meritorious children in each department of the schools, were distributed by his Honor the Deputy Governor, who concluded this part of the business with a short and appropriate address. The children then adjourned to the dining room, where, as usual, a grand entertainment had been furnished for them. The annual toast, according to the requirement of the benevolent Founder's will, was proposed by Mr. Millett, and drunk by the children in silence. It needs scarcely to be added, that under the very efficient and zealous superintendence of the Governors and Secretary, the Institution continues to be conducted with all possible vigour and success.—Hurkaru, Sept. 14.

ASSOCIATION FOR RIVER STEAMERS.

The River Steamer proposed for the Ganges, of which plans, drawings and calculations accompany Mr. Robinson, has been designed in London from all the sources of information on the subject of Ganges navigation which could be made available either through private information or the East India House; combined with and on the general principle of the boats employed in that most extensive field of River Navigation in America, particularly from the practice of the River and rapids of the St. Lawrence.

The plans of the boats now brought out are, as we have said, course open to such modifications as either local experience or the personal examination of the river by Mr. Robinson on the part of the proposed Company may suggest. One remarkable feature in the present plans is its peculiar fitness for narrow and intricate navigation, a plan also borrowed from the American Engineers. The engines are not connected, each one being placed at the side of the boat and connected with its own paddle: by this arrangement the paddle wheels may be made to revolve in opposite directions with the effect of turning the vessel round actually on its own centre: the wheels are also much further aft than usual and rudders are placed turning in the smallest compass. By this arrangement, and in which we have now years of practical experience of the Americans before us, the narrowest and most tortuous navigation may be followed with the greatest certainty, with the immense advantage of permitting the employment of large and roomy boats calculated to afford the greatest comfort to passengers, and space for tonnage with very small draft of water. By the plan of the Boats now before us we observe they are calculated to draw only about 2 feet 2 inches of water, the power 300 horses, with about the same extent of measurement in feet over all.

Thus it will be seen that judicious measures have been taken to profit by every source of information requisite for carrying out the scheme proposed, and that the great object of uniting in one vessel the locomotive power, the stowage of cargo, and the accommodation of passengers, has been for the first time soundly designed as applicable to navigation on our Indian rivers. Mr. Robinson is himself intimately acquainted with the system of river navigation adopted in America, and which, on the Mississippi, offers a close analogy as respects the means taken to meet the influence which the currents and depth of water in the river present, with those which it may be reasonably supposed will be requisite for the navigation of similar vessels in the Ganges, and its fluvial outlets.

We have infinite satisfaction in making public this interesting intelligence. It was we have heard the original intention of this Government to work their river steamers for a certain time for the purpose of proving the feasibility of the undertaking, and then to make them over at a valuation to any private company ready to carry on the business. This has been perhaps too long delayed, for a Government should as soon as possible divest itself of the conduct of any enterprise, which interferes with the private operations otherwise open to its settlers, or its subjects. The present movement offers a happy mode of arranging the question.—Calcutta Star, September 18.

THE HINDOSTAN.

The Hindostan Steamer, arrived at Galle on the 19th ultimo; the following extract of a letter from a Passenger on board details her progress—

"Point de Galle, August 20.—We left Madras roads soon after gunfire on Wednesday evening and soon after 10 lost sight of the Light. Thursday was very fine, the sea smooth and our progress excellent; the only incident this day was an unlucky seaman falling overboard about 7, when it was nearly dark, but the Engines were promptly stopped, the boat let down and the man, who was a good swimmer, was in about quarter of an hour recovered, though we had lost sight of him and given him up for lost. On Friday we were in sight of land and soon after sunrise passed Trincomallie, towards evening the weather became squally, and during the night there was a heavy swell which lasted all the following day. At 1 P. M. on Saturday we were off Doondra head, the most Southerly point of Ceylon, and about sunset came into the little harbour of Point de Galle where we found the Queen Steamer anchored. Here many of our passengers (about a dozen I believe) who are desirous of trying the health-giving breezes of Nuwera Ellia, went on shore as soon as the steamer anchored, and this morning most of the others followed, desirous alike of seeing something of the coast of Ceylon, whose picturesque appearance has, from the moment it became visible, attracted a good deal of our attention, and of escaping the disagreeable "process of coaling," which commenced early this morning.

Our party, as you are aware, is a very numerous one—above 120 passengers, and specious as the Hindostan is, the whole of her accommodation is pretty well taken up. Sir J. Grant, Archdeacon Dealtry, and several members of their families here go on shore proceeding to Nuwera Ellia, but as we take about the same number of passengers on board from Ceylon, the crowd will continue hence to Suez, and thence homeward. In crossing Egypt I expect there will be a tremendous scramble, in fact how so large a party is to proceed together I hardly know—vans, camels and donkeys will be at an unprecedented premium.

I am much pleased with what little I have seen of Ceylon, the beautifully irregular line of coast, the bold mountains in the interior, the luxuriant cocoas and other trees, and the comparative coolness of the atmosphere are quite delightful. The latter however may be in part owing to the heavy rains of the last two days which have been very squally, and would have impeded the progress of a less powerful Steamer than the Hindostan. It is expected we shall reach Suez about the end of next month; but this I think is a rather sanguine calculation as we are evidently about to experience the expiring efforts of the South West Monsoon, which may detain us for awhile, though enable seriously to throw us back.

The Steamer Queen took her departure this afternoon for Bombay, and we have notice to be on board at 2 P. M. to-morrow, when the Hindostan will proceed on her voyage.—Spectator, Sept. 2.

THE BOONDELAHS.

You are not to suppose from this that the Boondelahs are thieves;—on the contrary, they are, in fact, the most honest set of people I have ever met. In proof of this I may mention that during the whole time this station (Nowgong) was being built, when many thousands of them were employed, although baggage stores &c. &c. were lying about in all directions (we never thought of keeping chowkeedars) not one pice worth of property was ever missing—nor has a single instance of their taking advances and walking off without fulfilling their contracts, ever occurred. I may here mention another instance of honesty which I never saw equalled by a "native." During a morning's ride, I met a man conveying, what appeared to me, very fine timbers towards cantonments. He agreed to sell me the wood, which he conveyed to my compound; and, after some delay, was paid the price.—After he had received the money he came up to me and asked for what purpose I required the timber. I replied "for building"—"Oh" said he, returning the money "the wood is bad—it is not fit for building purposes!" He reloaded the cart and sold the wood in the bazar for a smaller sum than I had given him!—(Did you ever!!) Yet this man was, I have no doubt, like the majority of his brethren, a robber—a dacoit.

The men of one village are always ready to loot the neighbouring one; one petty Rajah to make a foray into the territories of a brother Rajah—but there is no systematic opposition to our Government except by some eighty (80) individuals, the Chiefs of whom are known, and for whose heads rewards are offered. The remainder of these are bound to the Chiefs by ties of blood—a feudatory one; and I have no doubt that, were conciliatory measures adopted, all would tender their allegiance.—As it is, there is hardly a village in Bundlekund from whence they will not obtain volunteers, if the aim of their errand be plunder. Having effected their purpose, the proscribed return to their jungle fastnesses, and their "aides" convert their "spears into pruning hooks" and are, to all intents and purposes, peaceable and well disposed inhabitants—till next time:

There is no chance of "war, glorious, (horrid?) war" in Bundlekund, so long as the present non-interference system is continued—that is, so long as our Government can look blandly on whilst the inhabitants cut each others' throats "more majorum." Interference in this national pastime might indeed bring a host of enemies upon us; but, barring this, the "consummation so devoutly to be wished" can be effected by nothing but their cupidity being excited by the sight of John Company's "broad acres."

"I forgot to mention that all parts of the country are safe for Europeans—that is, if they do not carry with them property sufficient to tempt the cupidity of the inhabitants. In proof of this, officers ride about weekly between this and Jytpoor through dense jungle, whilst natives disappear for ever in it!—I am perfectly willing to travel "frae Maidenkirk to John O Groats" (in Bundlecund) with no attendants except my personal servants—not one of whom would demur at the idea of accompanying me"—The Hills, Sept. 7.

THE KHOONDS.

The Friend of India, in an article we have extracted, makes a charge against the Madras authorities which we trust for their credit as a Christian Government admits of a simple explanation or refutation. The Friend states that an application was made four months ago to have about a hundred of the rescued victims from the Khoonds, boys and girls, consigned to the care of the Missionaries in the neighbourhood, who were anxious to bring them up in a knowledge of the Christian truth; but the letter has never received the slightest attention. In consequence of this silence, the children have been made over, the boys chiefly to Mussoolmauns and the girls to a tribe of Khoonds. Our contemporary indulges in a little flippancy about the alleged backwardness of Madras in the acquisition of "liberality of sentiment" and "freedom from pagan propensities," which is out of place in discussing so grave a subject and unlike his usual sober tone; but we must not let this divert us from the importance of the subject to which he has drawn attention. We do not believe that an application of the nature stated could meet with intention from our present authorities, and some circumstance must therefore remain for explanation; for we at the same time can see no objection to its being readily approved. The victims rescued in Khoondah were all intended as human sacrifices, some sold for the purpose by their wretched parents, some stolen, and others reared up and devoted for years to it. In some of these cases we should not even be justified in giving them up to their own parents; but we believe that in no case have their parents come forward to claim them. Remaining in our hands under such extraordinary and singular circumstances, we consequently take the place of their natural protectors, and have thus a responsibility cast upon us as to their bringing up which admits of our taking only one conscientious path. If we believe in the necessity and efficacy of our own faith, there cannot be but one course open to us. It may be urged that to instil the principles of Christian truth into these children, will give a colour to the pretence that we seize them for the sake of making them converts, and doubtless this may be turned to evil. But we must endure the reproach, and risk whatever disturbance it may create, when so obvious a duty is before us. These unfortunate children are rescued from threatened death, and remain virtually as orphans in our hands: we have to feed, and clothe, and instruct them. Can we do this without making religion a part of the instruction, and can we dare to let it be other than what we believe needful to their souls' salvation!—Madras Spectator, Sept 6.

THE DUSSERAH VACATION.

To the Editor of the Friend of India.

SIR,—I perceive by the Government Gazette, that the General Treasury will close for the DUSSERAH VACATION from the 28th Instant to the 5th Proximo being 8 days. Be good enough to refer to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut's Circular letter, No. 5, dated 24th March last, which directs that the Civil Courts are to be closed from the 20th September to the 20th October, and tell me whether you do not think that the Revenue Officers are dealt with very hardly; for while the Omlahs of a Collectoral or Zillah Treasury are obliged to drudge at their work, the Omlahs of the Civil Court are permitted to enjoy a relaxation which ALL are so eager to obtain, being the only time of the year that they are able to visit their families.

While I lament the short vacation which REVENUE Officers are permitted to enjoy, I do not wish to advocate an equalization, because I presume it would be considered very cruel indeed, if the Civil Courts were to close for the same number of days as the General Treasury, but I would respectfully suggest that the officers of the Revenue Department have their vacation extended from 8 to 15 days.

I may here remark that if Government should feel disposed to grant such an indulgence, it would not in the least affect their interests, because during the whole of the time that the Civil Courts remain closed, seldom or never do Land-holders come in to pay Revenue. As a proof of this fact I would refer to the Sudder Board of Revenue's Circular, No. 6, A, dated 30th June, which provides for the adjournment of the Sale of Estates for arrears of Revenue fixed on the 28th September—(that is—the sale will not take place until the opening of the Civil Courts after the 20th October) and the Sudder Board of Revenue subsequent Circular Notice dated 4th September, which states that "all estates from which at sunset of the 27th "September, an arrear of Revenue may be due, WILL "be liable to sale on the day, &c. &c. and that no "payment made subsequent to the sunset of that date "WILL BAR such liability to sale."

The day fixed for the closing of the Collector's Office as also the General Treasury is the 20th September. There is another contingency which has escaped notice, viz. that payment of large sums of Revenue until the evening of the 27th will as a matter of course detain the Collector's Omlahs for two or three days for the purpose of preparing the accounts, and entering up all the Revenue Books—so that in fact the vacation to be enjoyed by them is only 5 days. Surely you will admit that this period is inadequate and too short to enable the Natives to visit their families. Those whose houses are at a very great distance will feel this HARDSHIP. Hoping you will advocate the indulgence solicited by appropriate comments, I am sanguine that the Government would benevolently respond to your suggestions and confer a favor upon many eager individuals upon which their happiness for the time being depends.

In conclusion I respectfully urge that if there is any foundation for the rumour which has made its way to the Mofussil, viz. that it is the intention of the present Governor General to reduce the vacation enjoyed by the Judicial Officers it would be a measure of extreme hardship. The Sudder Ameens, Moonsiffs and Law Officers, and every individual Omlah would cry out against such an usurpation of privileges accorded to them for a series of years, and though they must eventually succumb to the order—because "what cannot be cured must be endured,"—yet the benevolence and humanity of Government would be regarded by all classes as a mere name divested of its essentials. I entreat that due consideration be given before any premature instructions are issued to debar the enjoyment of long established privileges.

I am, &c.

LATEST EUROPEAN INTELLIGENCE.

London, Aug. 3.

GENERAL REMARKS.

The news of the present month will be found rather of English than of Indian interest, for public attention has been chiefly engaged with discussions upon the state of the nation, and the difficulties which appear to be gathering round Sir R. Peel and his government. The importance of these difficulties has undoubtedly been exaggerated, but they are not, therefore, to be despised; for it is a fact that, however opposed men may be in political opinions, there is an almost universal expression of disapointment, perhaps occasioned by the general depression which prevails in every department of business. But the government have had to contend with more than this,—they have lately had to experience the indifferent support of some, and the almost open defection of others upon whom they had every right to calculate. Under these circumstances, it is not surprising that rumours of change should get abroad; but it is quite certain that, notwithstanding the success of the League in returning Mr. Bright for Durham, Conservatives will keep their places, and that there is no immediate prospect of the restoration of the Whigs to power.

Our report of the parliamentary proceedings of the month, which, from the importance of the subjects discussed is necessarily of considerable length, will be found to embrace questions of the very greatest interest, having reference, not only to the general affairs of state, whether foreign, political, or commercial, but special relation to Ireland, Scotland, and India. We have been at considerable pains to give as ample a summary of the several debates as our limits permit; because, in the present state of parties, the opinions expressed by individual Members are in themselves significant, and, when taken in connexion with the extracts we furnish from the leading journals of the day, they enable the reader to form a fair idea of some of the difficulties with which the present Ministry have to contend. The Government, though close pressed to avow themselves, have as yet given no direct approval of Lord Ellenborough's policy with respect to the occupation of Scinde; the debate which will take place on Mr. Roebuck's motion, fixed for the 8th inst., is therefore regarded with much anxiety. A large volume of papers has been laid before parliament, but they merely refer to transactions preceding the battle of Meannee. This has disappointed those who looked for the proclamations and general orders issued by Lord Ellenborough concerning the administration of the territory on both sides of the Indus.

Notwithstanding the military force in Wales has been augmented by the accession of the 4th Light Dragoons, the 75th Regt., and Marines, the disorders which have some time prevailed on the borders of Pembrokeshire and Carmarthenshire have spread to the southern part of the latter county, and even to Glamorganshire, and have assumed a far more serious aspect since reaching the mining and manufacturing districts. The followers of Rebecca have become more daring and their system of attack better organised; for they do not now oppose the military, who in large parties nightly patrol the country, but no sooner have the soldiers passed, than horns are sounded, signals blaze from hill to hill, men assemble in large masses, and instantly demolish the very gates through which the troops have just moved. There has as yet been no conviction of parties connected with these disturbances, the indictment against the persons in custody for attacking the workhouse at Carmarthen having been removed into the Court of Queen's Bench, as it was considered the Crown could not have a fair trial upon the Welch circuit. It appears to be quite impossible to get at the prime movers of the revolt, who are said to be persons of property and station. If this be so, we can scarcely wonder that small farmers should be ready to join in any movement likely to put an end to a system which obliges them to pay, in the article of manure for example, as much as 6*l*. in the shape of tolls upon a quantity of lime for which they paid but 5*l*. in the first instance. In the neighbourhood of Swansea, some arrests have taken place, in effecting which the police were attacked, and Capt. Napier, the Superintendant, severely beaten. This officer was compelled, in self-defence, to fire upon one of the prisoners, who was dreadfully wounded but is recovering. The Government have sent Mr. Hall, the Bow-street magistrate, to investigate the state of affairs in Wales.

Though an account just published shows an increase of "Rent" for the quarter of 14,000*l*., as compared with a similar period last year, the "Repeal" agitation does not seem to have gained strength in Ireland during the past month, as far as regards either the number of meetings held, the display of physical force, or the degree of excitement manifested by the lower classes. The feeling previously exhibited was far too intense to last; and the moderation shown by Government has done much to weaken the power of those by whom an excitable people are readily influenced. In so far, Ministers appear to have acted wisely. Had they adopted measures of strong coercion, there would have been no diminution of agitation, but, on the contrary, many persons of moderate political opinions would have been forced unwillingly into the ranks of Repeal. Very different, however, is the present state of things; for, as matters now stand, nothing having been effected, the lower classes are beginning to doubt their own powers, and to question the importance of their leaders; while the concentration of troops at different points, the strengthening of military defences, and the formation of depots of arms and ammunition in convenient places, sufficiently manifest the determination of Government to crush the very first exhibition of overt treason. From the reports which we elsewhere publish, our readers will be able to collect some of the objects of Repeal agitation, but the most important speech is that of Dr. Higgins, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Ardagh, who denounces the very idea of connection with the state, and ridicules the proposal to renew diplomatic relations with the Pope, and recognise the titles of the Roman Catholic Church. His objects are far higher than such concessions as these. There seems to be an end of American sympathy, for Mr. O'Connell's Anti-Slavery speech has given such offence, that the Repeal Associations in the States are dissolving. The display got up by the republicans in Paris, has proved a most ridiculous failure, of which all parties appear to be heartily ashamed.

We have but little to report respecting the state of the Scotch Church question, except that her Majesty has filled up several of the parishes, the former ministers of which went over with the secession. Lord Aberdeen's Bill is now before the House of Commons, and it is likely to meet with less opposition than it did in the Peers, where the Law Lords were deeply offended, in as much as the measure proposed by government,—a modified Veto Act—went to declare that to be law which was adverse to the former decisions of the House itself in its judicial capacity.

The insurrection in Spain has triumphed, almost without a struggle; the revolutionists have possession of the capital and of the Queen; the government of Espartero is, for the present, at an end, and the Lopez ministry again in power. This revolution has been ascribed solely to the officers of the army, who are suspected to be in the pay of Christina. It was unprovoked and unpopular to an extraordinary degree; its success, therefore, appears to be mainly referable to the misconduct of the Regent himself, who, instead of striking a decisive blow, exhibited an apathy perfectly unaccountable, if not the result of cowardice. He remained inactive in the neighbourhood of Valencia till he lost the confidence of his supporters, and was then out-generaled by Narvaez, who got possession of the road to Madrid. By the last accounts Espartero had joined Van Halen, and was engaged before Seville bombarding the city. It is said that his only motive for this is want of money for some exigency. Had the revolt terminated without bloodshed, his chances of being recalled were many, for when the coalition by which he has been overthrown shall have been broken up, which it is believed will happen soon, he would probably have been solicited to resume the reins of Government. The destruction he has caused, and the blood that he has shed, are calculated to injure him irreparably with his countrymen.

The proceedings in the French Chambers on the discussion of the budget, are rather interesting. M. Guizot appears to have seized upon the occasion for the delivery of a speech, in the course of which he most positively denied that the insurgents in Spain had received any assistance from his government; and bearing testimony to the perfect toleration with which England has treated her Roman Catholic subjects, he discountenanced all interference with the Repeal agitation in Ireland.

Among our extracts will be found an account of the melancholy loss of the Pegasus steamer, with a fearful sacrifice of life; and some particulars of the unfortunate misunderstanding, which ended in the fatal duel between Lieut. Munro and the late Colonel Fawcett.

AFFAIRS OF INDIA.

However dark the political horizon may be in the West, it is becoming clearer in the East. The last Indian mail confirms the hopes that its predecessor raised. We have passed that anxious crisis in the history of Indian affairs, when each successive telegraph only awakened fresh fears for the precipitancy of the Governor-General's acts or the verbose temerity of his speeches. This crisis has passed. We have ceased now to tremble lest the arrival of a mail should bring the report of some high-flown proclamation or ambitious aggression. Warned by the past, moderated by the censure of his distant critics, and now familiarized to the habits and language of command, Lord Ellenborough no longer amuses his enemies with travesties of Napoleon, now startles his friends by his wholesale imitation of Lord Wellesley. Satisfied—perhaps disgusted—with display, he may at last afford to exercise that quality for which he was most conspicuous at home—strong and practical common-sense. That he is not ignorant of the ample scope which exists for the exercise of this virtue in the administration of our Indian empire—that he knows full well the immense extent of good which a benevolence well directed and vigorously seconded is able to insure—is, we think, apparent from the important reforms to which he has of late devoted his attention. In another column will be found a statement of his plans for the improvement of Indian police, the better administration of Indian jurisprudence, and other acts of civil amelioration. They are the trophies—the unfading trophies—of peace. It is on such victories that Lord Ellenborough's fame must rest. They are far more likely to secure for himself the affections, and for England the respect, of the millions whose government is intrusted to his hands, than the most flowery harangues or the most brilliant campaigns.

We rejoice to say that the war which he commenced so inconsistently with his own professions, and in such manifest emulation of his Whig predecessor, has been decided by the splendid victories of Sir C. Napier. There will, we trust, be no more bloodshed, no more costly triumphs. The brave officer who vanquished, is now engaged in pacifying Scinde. Already he has made his terms with the majority of the Chiefs; and there is but little prospect of resistance or rebellion from the rest.

It were useless to moralise upon the policy which has added another large tract of country to the Anglo-Indian empire. We have already blamed it as precipitate, and denounced it as dishonest. But Scinde is now ours. The same course of action which led to the reduction of the Carnatic—to the subjugation of the Mahrattas—to the occupation of Ceylon, and the possession of Arracan—has been consummated by the successful invasion of Scinde. It may be that the same pleas which have been urged in justification of the former aggressions might be advanced in defence of this last, viz., that the Indian Government had no alternative but to go on and conquer—that conquest and acquisition were their only means and sole guarantee of safety.

Be this the case or not, Scinde is ours: and it is our duty so to govern the inhabitants of the conquered territory that they may not regret having exchanged the authority of their own Ameers for the dominion of England. Already has one great change in the fortunes of that people accompanied the triumph of our arms. Slavery is no more. The same victory which subjected Scinde to England delivered the Scindians from the power of their native tyrants.

This was a happy beginning, and we can only pray that it may be an auspice of the future. The despotism of England has been hitherto beneficial to her Indian dependencies; her laws, her literature, her religion, are each exerting a salutary influence upon the multitudinous tribes of the great peninsula. The energy and industry of her merchants and traders have not been lost upon the natives of the East, and the Indian people are happier under the dominion of an unknown and indefinite company of merchants than they were under the yoke of their own Sovereigns. It can hardly therefore be apprehended that the last accession to the list of our Oriental possessions will fare differently from the rest; and that the same incidents which, under Providence, have blessed British supremacy in Mysore and the Carnatic, will be barren of good results in the fertile and favoured country of Scinde.—Times.

COURT AND FASHION.

The Queen gave state balls on the 24th and 31st of July, at Buckingham Palace.

The King and Queen of the Belgians embarked on the Ariel steam-packet for Ostend, on the 12th of July, on their return to Belgium, and arrived at Brussels on the following day.

The Queen Dowager is completely recovered from her recent indisposition, and is now able to enjoy her accustomed airing in the neighbourhood of Bushy. Her Majesty goes to Witley Court next week.

The Affairs of Scinde.—Lord J. Russell said, that some hon. members on his side of the house had understood the right hon. baronet to say, some time ago, when he was asked to produce some papers relating to the affairs of Scinde, that he waited until the Government had decided, from the information before them, what instructions they should send out to India with respect to the affairs of Scinde; and that (as the hon. members he referred to understood) he intended to produce, together with the papers in question, the decision to which the Government had come with respect to the future government of that province. He (Lord J. Russell) did not, he confessed, so understand the right hon. gentleman; but what he now wished to know was, whether the right hon. gentleman was prepared to state the decision that the Government had come to respecting the course to be pursued in Scinde, and which, he supposed, had by this time gone out to India? It would be convenient that the house should have before them the decision of Her Majesty's Government previous to the debate on the motion of the hon. and learned member for Bath (Mr. Roebuck) which was fixed for the 8th of August.—Sir R. Peel said, that Her Majesty's Government had sent out to the Governor General of India statements explanatory of their general views with regard to the course to be pursued in Scinde. Of course it was very difficult at this distance, and with their degree of acquaintance with the subject, to give instructions with regard to a question of so much importance. All such instructions must necessarily be contingent and dependent on the state of the country at the time they might arrive in India. Her Majesty's Government did not think it their duty, under these circumstances, to communicate the instructions to the house.—Mr. Mangles at a subsequent period of evening said, that he had certainly understood the right hon. baronet, as he believed the house did, that he intended to supply the house with information as to the instructions of Her Majesty's Government to the Governor General regarding Scinde, at the same time that he communicated the papers. If that were not so, he wished to know why the papers were withheld?—Sir R. Peel said that, in the case of the Chinese war, and in the case of the Affghan war, papers had been laid on the table as to the events of the war, but not the instructions from the Government at home. By each mail affairs of great importance were announced, so that the Government had not thought it their duty to make any earlier communication to the house.

The Ameers of Scinde.—Lord Jocelyn wished to ask the right hon. baronet at the head of Her Majesty's Government, whether any communications had been received from India relative to the treatment of the Ameers of Scinde, who were taken prisoners on the field of battle, and whether they had been allowed to hold intercourse with their friends?—Sir R. Peel said, as his noble friend had given him notice of his intention to put this question, he was enabled to put the house in possession of the information which had been received by the Government as to the personal treatment of the Ameers. Communication had been received from the Governor General, dated Agra, the 29th of March, in which it was stated that directions had been given that all the Ameers, except one, who was charged with participation in an act of murder, should be treated honourably, as prisoners of war; that they were to be allowed to hold intercourse and communication with their families, though access would not be given generally to all their followers; and that the ladies and women in their respective families were to be treated with all possible attention and respect. He understood that, while the Ameers were at Bombay, a house belonging to the Government was appropriated to their residence, and they had interviews with Sir G. Arthur. In May they were transferred from Bombay to a palace in the neighbourhood of Poonah, and Sir G. Arthur was anxious that they should receive the most respectful treatment compatible with their situation as prisoners of war. In communications forwarded to India by Her Majesty's Government, an earnest wish had been expressed that the Ameers might be treated with the respect which was due to their station and their misfortunes, and that every means should be adopted to promote the ease and comfort of themselves and their families.

It is now generally stated that the Houses of Parliament will not be prorogued until the last week in August. Mr. Roebuck has fixed his notice of motion respecting the recent transactions in Scinde for the 8th of August. It is not, however, likely to come on so early as that day, owing to the great quantity of government business, and of other notices that have priority of it.

Expired, on the 29th July, the Duke of Dorset, at his residence in Harley-street, in his 76th year. He succeeded to the family honours in 1815, on the death of his cousin, Charles Duke of Dorset, who was killed by a fall from his horse near Dublin. The late duke has left an only sister, married to Mr. H. A. Herbert; and a niece, daughter of his late brother, the Hon. George Sackville Germain, married to Mr. William Bruce Stopford, of the Foreign Office.

The Earl of Glasgow died at Edinburgh on the 6th July. The deceased Earl was Lord Lieutenant of the county of Ayr, and is succeeded by his son, Lord Kelburne, representative of the same county.

The Countess of Mansfield expired on the 11th July, at her residence at Richmond, at the advanced age of 85 years. The venerable deceased was the third daughter of Charles, ninth Lord Cathcart, and sister of the late Earl Cathcart and Duchess of Athol, by Jane, second daughter of Lord Archibald Hamilton, and was born July 1, 1758.

The Countess of Elgin, the lady of the Governor of Jamaica, died in childbed on the 4th June. Lady Elgin was the daughter of Major Cumming Bruce, M.P., and was married only last year.

Dr. Hahnemann, the founder of homœopathy, died lately at Paris, aged 88. Dr. Hahnemann was born in 1755, at Meissen, of poor parents; and owed his education to the great aptitude for learning he gave evidence of at the little school where he was first placed.

The Irish legal world has lost one of its most illustrious members, in the Right Hon. Charles Kendall Bushe, late Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, who died recently at the house of his son, Mr Thomas Bushe, after a short illness.

The decision of the Judges affirming the invalidity of mixed marriages performed by Presbyterian ministers, has produced the expected consternation in the North of Ireland. In the General Assembly, a Committee was appointed to draw up a series of resolutions and petitions to both Houses of Parliament on the subject, which were adopted, and a deputation was appointed to proceed to London and take active steps to procure redress.

The celebrated Field-Marshal Count Wittgenstein died at St. Petersburgh on the 16th June, at the advanced age of 87. He was Commander-in-Chief of the Russian armies during nearly the whole of the late French war. The Emperor, upon being informed of it, gave immediate orders that the whole Russian army should wear mourning for three days.

It is said that Southampton will be fixed upon as the starting point of the steamers carrying the mails to the West Indies and South America, to the East Indies, Egypt, Malta, and all parts of Spain and Portugal, without calling at Falmouth to take in the mails, or on the homeward voyage to deliver them.

Mr. Serg. Talfourd gave an entertainment on the 27th July to the Right Hon. Sir E. Ryan and to Sir R. Comyn, who were formerly his youthful friends and associates. The dinner took place at the Royal Hotel, Ross. Among the company were Mr. Justice Williams and Mr. Justice Maule.

A return, just published, states that the sum of 1,281,211*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.* will be required, to make good to certain holders of opium surrendered in China in March, 1839, the amount of compensation due to them under Art. 4 of the Treaty of Peace. The above amount, however, includes a sum of 29,289*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.* as a claim by the Parsee firms of Heerjeebhoy Rustomjee and A. and D. Furdonjee, the settlement of which depends on further explanation.

On the 12th of July, the Court of Directors entertained at dinner, at the London Tavern, many of the distinguished civil and military officers of the Company, who have recently returned to this country from India. Most of the military men present had borne very conspicuous parts during the campaigns in Affghanistan and Scinde, and the operations in China. John Cotton, Esq., the Chairman, presided at the entertainment. The invitations included Messrs. T. C. Robertson, H. T. Prinsep, C. M. Lushington, Amos, Benham, Smith, J. R. Colvin, Clerk, Kindersley, Ogilvie, H. C. Tucker, Clementson, &c.; the Baron Von Orlich; Colonels Pennefather, Outram, Wild, Huish; Majors Macgregor, Fraser, and Simpson; Captain Colin Mackenzie and Lieut. Haughton; Captains Hall and Tudor, R. N.; Captains Hawkins, Brucks, Low, and Ormsby, I. N.; Messrs. Kennedy, Gray, Wylie, &c.

The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company's ship the Bentinck, has arrived in the Thames. She is 250 feet in length, from the head to the taffrail, 40 feet in breadth, 31 feet in depth, and admeasures, including the spar deck, 2,020 tons. Her engines are of 520 horse-power, and her cost about 84,000*l.* Her average speed, on her passage from Dublin to Southampton, was thirteen miles per hour, and occasionally she ran fourteen miles per hour; being a higher rate of speed than any other vessel adapted for ocean steam navigation has yet attained. This vessel is fitted with iron bulkheads, dividing the vessel's hold into a number of water-tight compartments, which, besides adding greatly to the strength of the vessel, effectually prevent her from sinking, in case of springing a leak, by striking on a rock or otherwise; because no more water can enter the vessel, in such a case, than to fill to the water line the particular compartment in which the leak may happen, and the vessel will therefore continue to float. The Bentinck is also fitted with the patent Paddle-box Life Boats, which, with her other boats, afford ample means of carrying the whole of the crew and passengers, with provisions and water, in case of accident to the vessel. She is fitted with Mr. Williams's patent consumers, which considerably diminish, or altogether prevent, the issuing of smoke from the funnels. With respect to the interior arrangements of the Bentinck, she has accommodation for 102 cabin passengers, consisting of 20 single, 22 double, and 12 family and general cabins, which are so arranged as to obviate those objections which were made to the accommodations on board the Hindoostan. They are all fitted up with every attention to comfort and convenience; and, above all, light and ventilation have been abundantly provided. Each has its marble-covered basin-stand, mirrors, drawers, writing apparatus, &c. Venetian blinds are inserted in the upper part of the doors, and, wherever possible, in the sides of the cabins also; and plates of perforated zinc and all manner of contrivances are introduced to ensure a constant circulation of wholesome and refreshing drafts. The spar deck forms a magnificent walk, the full length of the ship, with convenient seats abaft. The main deck, below, is also comparatively open and airy, and forms, with the houses on each side, a spacious and well-lighted arcade, which may be resorted to in showery or boisterous weather. The principal cabin or saloon, under the quarter deck, is a large square apartment, well lighted from the deck, and from the stern and side windows. It affords room for 100 persons to be seated commodiously at the tables, is lofty, and differs somewhat from those usually constructed, being nearly square, and free from the inconvenience of the several berths entering immediately into it, as it occupies the whole width of the vessel in the stern, and is upwards of thirty feet each way, having, besides large stern windows, spacious ports on each side, thus giving abundance of light and air, and a full view of the sea, in nearly every direction. The ladies' saloon or boudoir is entered by the side of the staircase, and presents a quiet, pleasing contrast to the more brilliant decorations of the grand saloon. This room, and the range of cabins adjoining to it, are appropriated to the use of ladies exclusively. The decorations of the grand saloon consist of several highly-interesting views of Cabul, Ghuznee, &c., painted, or rather enamelled, on slate. A wide passage communicates with the state cabins, and terminates with a good flight of stairs, spreading each way at the top of the upper deck. Among the other contrivances for ministering to the health, comforts, or luxury of Oriental voyagers, are cold, hot, and shower baths. A well-selected library is also placed in the saloon. This truly splendid vessel will proceed from Southampton on the 24th inst., for Calcutta, via the Cape of Good Hope, touching at Gibraltar, Cape de Verd Islands, the Cape, Mauritius, Ceylon and Madras, and will start from Calcutta on her first trip for Madras, Ceylon, and Suez, on the 15th December next, and will thenceforward continue to ply on the line between India and Suez, in conjunction with the Hindostan.

AUGUST 5.—A telegraphic despatch, with news from Bombay to 19th June, reached London by express from Paris early on the 31st July. Details of the intelligence were published in the Times of the 1st, and letters and papers via Marseilles, were delivered on the morning of the 2nd August. The news received by this mail is considered highly satisfactory.

Some most important despatches are understood to have gone out by the present Mail.

It is said that the Steamer "Precursor" has returned from Russia; so we presume she has not been disposed of.

The despatches received last month from India were, by permission of the Board of Control, submitted to a full Court of Directors.

The Court of Directors of the East India Company have, at the request of Her Majesty's Government, consented to the appointment of M. Jullien, as Vice Consul from the King of the French at Bombay.

Commodore Brucks, Indian Navy, has presented a memorial to the Court of Directors, praying for increased honours and emoluments to that branch of the service.

Mr. Dyce Sombre, late member for Sudbury, has been declared a lunatic. We give a full report.

We are sorry to find that Mr. Arthur Galloway, son of Major-Gen Galloway, met with a frightful accident on his return from the amusements at Cremorne-house, Chelsea. Whilst crossing the road near the "World's-end," he was knocked down by a horse attached to a cab, and so injured that when raised from the ground he was in a state of insensibility, and the blood was gushing in profusion from his nose and ears. A stretcher was procured, and the unfortunate gentleman was conveyed without loss of time to St. George's Hospital, where it was discovered that he had sustained a violent concussion of the brain, besides other severe injuries. Mr. Galloway had recently obtained an appointment in the Civil Service, and would have sailed in a week or two for Bengal. He is better, but still in a very dangerous state.

Sir Augustus D'Este has, it is said, presented a petition to the Queen, claiming to be entitled to the titles of his father, the late Duke of Sussex. —Standard.

The meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, at Cork, will surpass, in magnitude and magnificence, any former assemblage of that learned and scientific body. Preparations are being made for the most ample and comfortable accommodation of the multitude of visitors who will attend on the occasion; and arrangements have been entered into for the conveyance of passengers, in steamers, from London, Liverpool, Bristol, Plymouth, Glasgow, and Dublin.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, AUG. 4.—OPIUM.—The House having resolved itself into Committee of supply, Sir G. Clerk moved a vote of 1,281,000*l*., for compensation to the owners of the opium delivered up at Canton. On the conclusion of hostilities, a treaty of peace was concluded, and some 6,000,000 dollars were agreed to be paid by the Emperor of China to the British Government as compensation to the owners of such opium. By a return on the table, the house was aware that these 6,000,000 dollars, after assaying and deducting charges, amounted to 1,315,158*l*., and it was the intention of the Government to pay over to the owners of the opium 1,281,211*l*. The difference between this sum and the sum received was to be accounted for (as we understood) by the circumstance that the amount of opium agreed to be given up was deficient by five hundred chests; and the Government made up that deficiency by purchasing and paying for so many chests. Consequently it was proposed really to give up the whole of the money which had been received as compensation; and this, on an average, would amount to 64*l*. a chest. The committee would perceive that this was a fair compensation, as it was a considerably larger sum than the owners of the opium would have received if the average price of opium in India in 1840 had been assumed as the basis of calculation. Still, as the Government had received 6,000,000 dollars, they proposed to pay over the whole amount. He concluded by moving that 1,281,211*l*. be voted as compensation to the owners of opium, under the 4th article of the treaty of peace with China.—Mr. Mangles contended that this sum would fall short of the true value of the opium. The influence of the British Government must materially depend upon the opinion entertained by the Eastern people of its justice and good faith; and these required that the measure of the compensation should be the invoice cost. Two-thirds of this opium belonged to native merchants, who had connexions and transactions throughout the whole Eastern world; and at all events he trusted that the Government would not shut the door against inquiry into the principle on which this compensation was fixed.

Mr. Lindsay condemned, though reluctantly, the decision at which the Government had arrived.—Mr. Goulburn held as highly as any man the importance of preserving the public faith; but he was bound, in a case like the present, to take care that no larger sum than public faith really demanded should be charged upon the people of England. The Chinese Government having resorted to means not warranted by the law of nations, Captain Elliott took upon him to make the best arrangement he could for the interests of the merchants themselves; and on obtaining the release of their persons from the Chinese Government, he gave them receipts for the opium which they delivered to him to be surrended to the Chinese. But so far from undertaking to pay those merchants for payments at invoice prices to the other descriptions of goods which they were compelled to abandon, leaving the amount which was to be paid for the opium—the contraband article —to the discretion of the Government at home. The Government had taken the greatest pains to ascertain the true value. The article was one upon which sometimes an immense profit was realised, at other times a heavy loss sustained; the traffic was subject to all the fluctuations of a gambling trade; and the invoice price, therefore, was no just measure of value. At the particular time of this seizure the market was in a state of stagnation from glut; and if the opium seized had been added to that market, it would not have been likely to realise any thing like the invoice price. The price at which Captain Elliott's script receipts sold was a tolerably fair test of the value of the opium which they represented; but that price was only about 35*l*. per chest; whereas the compensation now proposed was 64*l*. Sir H. Pottinger thought the 6,000,000 dollars an adequate compensation, and this was also the opinion expressed by the Chinese, who were good judges of the value in their own market. There were three items for which this country had demanded indemnity from China—the Hong debts, the opium compensation, and the costs of the war. All these were covered by the aggregate sum agreed for under the treaty with China; and if any thing beyond a due proportion of that aggregate sum were now to be paid to the owners of the opium, it could be defrayed only by a tax on the British people. This was no argument, indeed, against withholding what was just; but it was a strong reason against paying more than justice really required.

Two or three explanations were asked from and given by Mr. Goulbourn, and then a discussion arose between him and Lord Palmerston respecting the form of the vote. Upon this a division took place, and the vote was finally passed in the shape proposed by Mr. Goulbourn.—London Mail.

PORTUGAL.—The Cortes has been occupied with various Government projects. The Deputies had passed the Bills imposing a tax on fresh fish and increasing the legacy duty. An Address to the Queen, praying her to consent to a diminution of income in consideration of the necessitous state of the country, was met by the Ministers declaring that her Majesty had again given up fifty contos this year, and the King Consort forty; and was rejected by eighty-nine votes against four. An Address of thanks to both the Queen and King Consort on the occasion of this concession was carried by 72 against 21 votes. The Court was to remain in Lisbon till after the great annual procession of Corpus Christi, when it would proceed to Cintra. Dr. Kaley's proceedings at Madeira had excited much animadversion by the High Catholic party, and great efforts were made to induce the Government to remove him from the island, but it was not considered that a measure of the kind was either justifiable or probable. Dr. Kaley's "conversions" were considered to be due, in a great measure, to his benevolence and personal influence.—Record.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE REV. JOSEPH FLETCHER, D. D.—In a former Number we announced the decease of this distinguished and highly esteemed servant of Christ. It is now our melancholy task to lay before our readers a brief account of the circumstances connected with the funeral of the departed, which took place on Friday last at Abney Park Cemetery. Every possible mark of respect was paid to the memory of the deceased by his surviving relatives and friends. At eleven o'clock the remains were conveyed, by the relatives and connexions, accompanied by about thirty ministers from the metropolis, from the residence in Cottage-grove, Mile-end-road, to Stepney Meeting-house—for more than twenty years the scene of his pastoral labours. The body was conveyed to the communion-pew, directly under the pulpit, where it lay during the whole of the solemn service. The Rev. J. A James, of Birmingham, commenced by reading the Scriptures and prayer. The Rev. H. F. Burder, of Hackney, delivered the funeral oration. The Rev. G. Smith, of Poplar, concluded the service by prayer. The service, throughout, was of the most solemn and appropriate kind. The spacious chapel was thronged, and hundreds were unable to obtain admission.

At the conclusion of these services the procession, augmented by considerable numbers, in mourning coaches and on foot, moved on to Abney Park. The number of ministers exceeded sixty, and the whole line of road from Stepney Meeting-house to the cemetery was crowded with attendants on foot, anxious to pay this last mark of respect to the remains of the departed, and to witness the interment. Amongst others the police force of the district, anxious to show their regard for one who had taken a deep interest in their spiritual welfare, were conspicuous; at their own request they formed part of the procession.

On arriving at the cemetery, thousands were found waiting for the arrival of the remains, who had assembled from different parts of the metropolis; and, as the day was remarkably fine, the whole scene was one of the greatest interest. The vault in which the remains were deposited, is close by a large yew tree facing Abney House, where Dr. Watts, one of the brightest ornaments of the denomination to which the departed for so many years belonged, resided for a considerable period. In the presence of some thousands, the Rev. S. Walford delivered an address over the grave, and the Rev. J. Pye Smith, D.D., concluded with prayer.

On the following Sabbath, the Rev. Ralph Wardlaw, D. D., of Glasgow, delivered an appropriate, ela-gant, and eloquent discourse on the occasion of this severe loss to the Church over which Dr. Fletcher had so long presided. We understand that it is to be published, together with Dr. Burder's oration.

"The memory of the just is blessed."

May the bereaved family and people of our departed friend enjoy much of the consolation of that Gospel, which he was so long permitted to proclaim, and the sanctifying influence of which he was enabled to evince so constantly in his own character and life.—Pat.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON.—No bishop (says a Clerico-legal correspondent of the Times,) has any the slightest right to interfere (and the courts will tell this bishop so) in the offertory, its manner of collecting, or the disposal of its produce afterwards, except in the case prescribed by the Rubric:—"After the Divine service ended, the money given at the offertory shall be disposed of to such charitable uses as the ministers and churchwardens shall think fit; wherein, if they disagree, it shall be disposed of as the Ordinary shall appoint." I would beg to observe further, that the jurisdiction of bishops over the parochial duty, and more particularly over parochial incumbents, their co-presbyters, is more exclusively of an appellate character than the Bishop of London is aware of. All such language as 'this is authoritative'—'this I enjoin,' &c. in a matter or matters coram non judice, is in the highest degree unbecoming, offensive, and illegal; and would not be borne by any other than the clergy of the diocese of London, now become callous to insult:—

"Some have been beaten till they know
What wood a cudgell's of by th' blow;
Others been kicked till they know whether
A shoe's of horse's or neat's leather."—Ibid.

THE REV. MR. BADGER.—To the Editor of the Record.—SIR,—I write in order to direct your attention to a subject which, for the honour of the Church, requires an immediate investigation. It is known that the Rev. Mr. Badger has been sent out by the Bishop of London, as the representative of the Church to a body of Nestorians inhabiting the mountains of Kurdistan. Various reports are in circulation respecting the conduct of that gentleman in Mosul, which are highly derogatory to his character as a delegate of the Church of England, and which, if true, must only require to be known to secure his immediate recal. If these reports are false, they should be publicly contradicted forthwith by those who are acquainted with the circumstances of the case. In the first place, it is said that Mr. Badger is a thoroughgoing Puseyite in doctrine and practice. It was reported of him that both in Malta and Constantinople he preached to perfection the doctrine of baptismal regeneration and of transubstantiation, or something so nearly like it, that no Papist could perceive the difference. Report says that at Mosul he wears the Puseyite gown and hat, as his every day dress, and that he is on the best terms with the Papists, both native and foreign. At the same time he has had a quarrel with the Jacobite Bishop, Athanasius, about the Apochryphal books of the Old Testament, Mr. B contending that they belong to the sacred canon, expressly against the thirty nine Articles to which he has subscribed.

But this is not the most objectionable thing reported against him. The Americans have had a prosperous mission among the Nestorians for many years. They have pursued their work apparently with great prudence and discretion, acting wholly on conservative principles, and not interfering in any degree with the ecclesiastical organizations of the people. On this point we have the testimony of the Rev. Mr. Southgate, an American Episcopal clergyman, who visited their mission in Ooroomiah, and who will not be suspected of any undue partiality for Dissenting missionaries. Any one who wishes to hear his testimony on the subject can have access to it in the valuable book of Travels in Persia, by Mr. Southgate, published a few years since.

The Americans, who confined their labours at first to the plain of Ooroomiah, some time since, it seems, commenced operations in the mountains of Kurdistan, where the patriarch resides, and by his warm approbation, and apparently hearty co-operation, they have commenced opening schools, and making arrangements for the prosecution of other branches of missionary labour. Taking advantage of the temporary absence of the American missionaries from the mountains, they having been called to go for awhile to Mosul to make further arrangements for their work, it is reported that Mr. Badger, Jesuit like, has gone into the mountains with many presents for the Patriarch to endeavour to supplant the Americans, and get possession of the field himself. It is certainly to be hoped that he will not succeed, but it is impossible to say what effect a large show of presents, and corresponding promises, may have upon a poor and ignorant people. At any rate, if this story be true, and it is told on good authority, Mr. Badger has disgraced himself and those who sent him out, and nothing short of his immediate recal can wipe out the foul blot he has brought on the Church. The world is wide enough if we wish to prosecute missionary labours, to enable us to choose our field without encroaching upon the labours of others; and for a missionary of our Church to crowd himself into a field already occupied, and well occupied by other Protestant missionaries, and to endeavour to establish himself by supplanting them; traducing their characters, calling them heretics, &c., in order to excite the prejudices of an ignorant people against them, as, it is said, Mr. Badger has done, cannot be tolerated for a moment. Such conduct is worthy of the best days of Jesuitism. Already have these missionaries often suffered from the falsehoods and calumnies of Papal emissaries, who are said to abound in those countries, and now, it seems, they have a new enemy to contend with, coming in the shape of a Protestant missionary, or, at least, of a missionary of a Protestant Church.

I feel fully confident that his Lordship, the Bishop of London, needs only to be informed that such stories are in circulation concerning Mr. Badger, to lead him at once to order an investigation of the case, and I would venture to suggest that a very proper witness on the subject may be the Rev. Dr. Bennett, our Chaplain at Constantinople.

I mention his name merely because it seems probable that, from his position, he may be in possession of facts on the subject. Q.

DEATH OF THOMAS WILSON, ESQ.—Our present Number records the decease, in a good old age, of Thomas Wilson, Esq., the venerable Treasurer of Highbury College; an Institution with which his name has been associated for more than half a century and to which he gave his constant attention and princely support. But, while this was the Institution in which he took a more peculiar interest, the London Missionary Society and other kindred Institutions shared largely in his affections, and profited by his benefactions. To him is due the high praise of having been keenly alive to the growing religious wants of the Metropolis; and he may be regarded as one of the greatest Church-extensionist of his day. The encomium passed on the Roman centurion, "For he loveth our nation, and hath built us a synagogue," applies in a tenfold or twentyfold degree to Mr. Wilson, whose zeal and munificence led to the foundation of numerous new chapels in populous neighbourhoods, which are now filled with flourishing congregations. It was not in the Metropolis only, that Mr. Wilson was instrumental in the erection of additional places of worship. In almost every part of the country, he aided in supplying the spiritual provision required by the wants of the neighbourhood. The well-built and well-placed structures of which he was the actual founder, will be permanent monuments of the hallowed use that he made of the wealth intrusted to him;

"And sure the coming Master found
The golden talent well employed."

In short, it may truly be said, that Mr. Wilson was in England, what the Heldanes were in Scotland; uniting to the munificence of the Countess of Huntingdon a large measure of the faculty of organization which characterized John Wesley. For some time past, Mr. Wilson's health had given way under the infirmities of age; but, to the last, he was actively useful, taking the warmest interest in all public religious affairs; and in reference to the recent threatened attack upon the rights and institutions of Dissenters in the shape of the Factories Education Bill, he showed that age had not impaired his attachment to the great principles of Protestant Nonconformity. One of the last occasions on which he took a part in any public proceeding, was in presiding at a meeting, held in Union Chapel, Islington, to petition against that atrocious measure. Mr. Wilson expired on Saturday, in his seventy-ninth year. The heavy loss to his denomination is mitigated by the reflection, that he is succeeded by his excellent Son Mr. Joshua Wilson, the founder of the Congregational Library, who not only inherits his ample fortune, but also his devoted attachment to Congregational principles. Long may the honoured name of Wilson be associated with the Institutions of Congregational Dissent!—Pat.

THE PROTECTION OF YOUNG FEMALES.—A number of gentlemen connected with the different societies in the metropolis for the protection of women, have had their attention powerfully called to the deficiency of the law, which permits a set of the vilest miscreants upon the face of the earth to pursue as a trade the destruction of young, giddy, and helpless women and children; and having expressed, in the form of resolutions, their views upon the subject, they held on Wednesday last a conference with Lord Brougham at his own house, with a view to some steps being taken to bring the subject before Parliament this session. Lord Brougham will move for a committee of inquiry. Preliminary, however, to this, he proposed to ascertain whether the question would not be taken up by the Government, or, if any other mode of proceeding could be adopted by which the objects proposed might be better accomplished. The Society for the Protection of Young Females had on Thursday their annual dinner, at the London Tavern, Lord Ashley in the chair; a long list of subscriptions was read.—Ibid.

PRIMITIVE METHODISTS.—The twenty-fourth Annual Conference of the Primitive Methodist Society closed on the 16th instant. Their numbers are as follow:—85,505 members; 489 itinerant preachers; 7,488 local ditto; 1,278 chapels; 74,450 scholars in their Sunday schools; deaths, 934; increase for the year, 6,042; increase of Sunday scholars, 4,386.—Pat.

DEPARTURE OF THE "IRISH SQUADRON."—The following appear in the Cork Reporter:—"The Malabar sails to-morrow (Sunday), report says for Lisbon. The Tyne was towed up this morning, as guard ship, until the arrival of the Inconstant. The Racer, Lynx, &c., were under orders to sail this morning, but are countermanded. The Tyne had moved down the harbour, but has now resumed her former position." The Cork paper says:—"We regret to state that the Irish squadron, whose stay at Cork diffused so much pleasure—and profit, too, we hear—amongst the good people there, and caused so many of our townsfolk to take advantage of the accommodation offered by the river steamers, and visit the 'men of war,' is departing and dispersing, going nobody knows whither, as nobody can tell for what they came."—Pat.

HER MAJESTY'S PIPER.—The Queen has just appointed Angus Mackay, brother of the piper of the late Duke of Sussex, to be Her Majesty's piper at the Palace. Highland dresses and ornaments are to be provided for the new functionary, and our townsman, Mr. Macdougall, has been authorized by Lord Jersey and the Hon. Captain Murray to furnish three suits one for the morning, another for mid-day, and a third for after-dinner and state occasions.—Inverness Courier.

STEAMER ON LOCH CATRINE.—On Saturday last, a small iron steam-boat arrived in our town on its passage from Glasgow to Loch Katrine, on which it is intended to ply during the summer months. It is only about six tons in weight, engines and all, has no deck, nor any part of it covered in except the engine, which is of six-horse power. This will be a great improvement to the enjoyment of visiters to this romantic lake.—Stirling Observer.

SPAIN.—THE REGENT'S MANIFESTO TO THE SPANISH PEOPLE.—The Spanish Regent has issued the following manifesto to the nation:—

"Spaniards! at a time when my conduct and my intentions are so sedulously blackened, when the country is menaced with such misfortunes through the falsehoods of its foes, I can no longer keep silence. I must raise my voice and oppose facts to the treacherous attacks of calumny. It is a painful task, grateful as it may be to address my fellow-citizens. I need not recapitulate the events which have raised me to my present lofty post. The debates of both Chambers preceding my election are still fresh. Spain and Europe admired the calm with which the Cortes proclaimed my name, and the oath which I took to govern by and for the Constitution still sounds in my ears. I swore to devote myself to the upholding of the laws and the country. This oath, which I took with emotion, in presence of all Spain, has continued to guide my steps. Never did I break this oath, nor, indeed, the idea of violating it enter my head. I surrounded myself with a constitutional and responsible Ministry; and this Ministry asked no force but that of the law against those who provoked even the military to insurrection. Against calumny, and the bitterest personal attacks, I used no other arm than silence. On the two occasions on which I marched in person against the rebellious, could I have forgotten the Regent in the soldier? I had too often led the troops to honour and to danger. If my presence tended to check disorder and terrify the anarchic, none but the enemies of the country could complain. Exceptional laws were recurred to in the two instances. But the history of all States, ancient and modern, tells that the statue of liberty must be sometimes veiled for the preservation of liberty. These free nations would have perished, or fallen more short of their greatness, if conspirators, working under the protecting mantle of the laws, could go on with impunity, protected by the slow procedure. It is easy now to judge whether these exceptional laws were the result of necessity or caprice. The Cortes approved of the first of these instances of exceptional measures. They shall discuss the second, when passions are less incandescent. On one occasion I accepted the resignation of a Ministry censured by the Cortes. On two others I dissolved the Cortes and appealed to the people, the Constitution in my hand. The Fundamental Law gave me this power. Why? Lest the Cortes should not be in harmony with the nation, or one Chamber not so with the other; or lest passion, error, or other causes might endanger the interests of the country. The right to dissolve cannot be questioned. The Parliamentary forms are invoked against me. Do Parliamentary forms agree with the formation of a Cabinet of which one-half did not belong to Parliament? Do Parliamentary forms demand what reason and justice repudiate? The Regent of the land was intrusted to form a Ministry, after the factions of the Lower House had shown themselves exhausted and powerless. Spaniards! I know the Constitution better than those who thus invoke it. By it I am Regent; in it are my rights and titles; with it before me, I have sown to maintain my country's liberties. Beyond the constitution there is but an abyss for me, and ruin for a great monarchy, whose independence was purchased with so much blood. Shall I reply to the interminable abuse of which I am the object? Shall I condescend to refute the accusation of my seeking to prolong my Regency beyond an legal time? I repel the calumny which is employed to embitter my day. The manifestoes of my Ministry did not suffice to discredit such assertions, nor my own asseverations before the first bodies of the nation; because nothing can silence the lie, which personal enmity repeats. How should I wish to defer that day which closes my political career? I prefer the example of those who laid down rule, to those who have violated the laws to keep it. I want alike the genius and the ambition of Napoleon. He expiated his usurpations on a rock in the ocean. Let others than me enjoy the glory that their country too dearly pay. Baldomero Espartero, conge to a private station, is satisfied with having fulfilled his duties, and merited the sympathy of the good. Spaniards! I speak from the heart, and more sincerely than those who seek to plunge you in convulsions. They use numerous pretexts to raise the standard of rebellion, covering thus their own private ambition. They preach union, but sow dissension; preach amnesty, but practise vengeance; and proclaim the virtue of Parliamentary forms, in rendering all government impossible. Reason and justice are on my side. I fear nothing; I rely on the Constitution, and stand covered by it. I have the same confidence, as on former occasion, in the loyal, the good, the lovers of liberty, the army, the navy, the national guard, and in Spaniards worthy of the name. They will aid me in putting an end to these divisions. They will step down into the electoral arena, and return a Congress in harmony with the country's interests. To the Cortes, which ought to decide the great questions mooted, I must deliver up untouched the sacred deposits of the Queen's and my own authority. I will not give these up to anarchy or to the license of passions. The fate of him who has so often offered his life to his country, is of little consequence. But the Queen, the Constitution, the monarchy, impose duties which I will fulfil, as first magistrate of the nation, and which I will defend as a soldier.

UNITED STATES.—The Meetings of the Anti-Slavery Societies have this year attracted very little notice; this is to be ascribed to the unhappy divisions which have taken place among the friends of emancipation, and to the furious Radicalism into which many of them have run. That the past labours of the friend of the slave have not been in vain, is obvious, not only from the change which public sentiment in the north has undergone, but also from certain indications in the south. The following extracts from a recent article in the Cincinnati Gazette contain evidence that the southern mind is, to say the least, beginning to move upon this subject. The editor asks, "Is there any difference of opinion at the south upon this subject?" Judging from the fiery language of politicians, we should say, No; they seem to be united upon it—they declare it to be a blessing—they tolerate no discussion of it. Now we know that these sentiments are repugnant to a very large class there. True, they as yet say little aloud; but they talk with each other; they are quietly but surely extending their views; they think rightly, and reason well, and when assured of their strength, their thoughts will find a tongue. In Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, this result is nearer at hand than many suppose. No subject is becoming more earnestly talked about than that of slavery. It is brought up in a thousand ways—in church, in college halls, in the shop, the farm-house. Judge Gaston (of North Carolina) did not tremble to recommend the collegiates of Chapel Hill (the University of that state) to turn their thoughts to it as an evil which required to be mastered. Mr. C. M. Clay did not hesitate, in discussing this matter in Kentucky, to denounce the timidity of politicians, the time-serving of Churchmen, and the paltry shuffling of all classes, which did not dare to look the dire evil in the face. Virginians even do not fear to speak of it as an incubus, which can be removed by emancipation alone; while at Knoxville, in Tennessee, a fearless editor invokes the aid of all honest men against those political hacks who are always endeavouring to make political capital out of it; and he boldly proclaims the law of the state a brutal law which puts up human beings for sale; and he calls upon the people of the state to unite in blotting it out for ever from their statute-book. These statements are made by one whose vicinity to the slaveholding states, and whose connexions with them, give him access to know something of the sentiment which is beginning to manifest itself there. Of the dreadfully demoralizing influence of slavery in the south, no one, who has not actually seen it, can form any just conception; the non-slaveholding states are rapidly outstripping the slaveholding states in wealth and population; and while this last fact excites the envy of the Calhouns and the M'Duffies, who, with one breath, prate of their democracy, with the next pronounce slavery a blessing, it, at the same time, cannot fail to engage the serious and anxious attention of reflecting men at the south. There can be no doubt, however, that the politicians of the south are aiming to bolster up their declining dominion by the annexation of Texas. That this is the present scheme of the south, and that it is warmly approved by President Tyler, is asserted by Mr. Adams, who is not apt to make assertions which he is not able to prove. That the free states will never sanction such a scheme I cannot for a moment believe; and even if they did, Great Britain surely would interfere to prevent the consummation of the villainy.

The General Assembly of the American Presbyterian Church is now in session. The question of the lawfulness of marrying a deceased wife's sister, is again to come before the Assembly; it is a question which has been a good deal discussed here during the past year, and the general opinion seems to be, that the present Assembly will abandon the ground taken by the last Assembly.—Record.

We find that the draft of the charter of incorporation for the borough of Sheffield was prepared at the last Meeting of the Privy Council, held on Saturday last, June 10th, and that it is to be immediately transmitted to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, to receive the Queen's warrant; after which a short time only will be necessary to carry the charter through the seals. All doubts therefore with regard to a municipal corporation for this borough are now removed.—Sheffield Paper.

SHEEP EXPORTED FROM DEVON TO FRANCE.—It is stated that Mr. Bond, a large sheep dealer, sold, in Exeter market, a short time since, fifty fat wethers to a French gentleman. He took them to France, returned immediately, found the same person, and bought of him all the sheep he had for sale, sixty in number.—Western Times.

It is said, that notwithstanding the care of postmasters, and the dreadful consequences of theft, the letters missing, containing coin, are one in fifty; whilst of letters in general, the missing are one in 1,000. —Record.

A correspondent of the Times states, as a "hint for brother Jonathan," that a young man of colour, almost of pure negro race, is keeping his terms in the Middle Temple for the bar; and that he is treated by his companions, including some of the most talented and noblest of young Englishmen, with as much respect as any. In a few years the boast will probably be remembered as strange, because parallel instances will then be common; but we are glad to see a race that has already many of its members occupying posts of distinction in the West Indies pushing for metropolitan honours: it will serve it in every way and everywhere.—Watchman.

IRISH REAPERS.—It is an extraordinary proof of the zeal of the Irish peasantry in behalf of the Repeal movement, and of their anxiety to attend Mr. O'Connell's Meetings, that scarcely any of them have come over this year to the haymaking. Our streets and roads usually swarm with them at this time of the year, but there are actually not any to be seen this summer. We suspect that these poor fellows will find, before the year is out, that agitation is not half so good a trade (for them, at least) as haymaking.—Liverpool Times.

PUBLIC HEALTH OF GLASGOW.—We regret to state, that the city has been in a very unhealthy state for some time past. The female ward of the Fever Hospital has occasionally been so full that patients have been refused, and those belonging to the poorer orders are being treated in large numbers at their own houses, by the district surgeons attached to the Town's Hospital. The prevailing troubles are low fever, influenza, and cold, caused, no doubt, by the late severe weather. Though much sickness prevails, the mortality, fortunately, is very trifling, and the ailments generally give way in a day or two to medical treatment and adequate nourishment, which, in the case of the humbler classes, is readily supplied by the Town's Hospital.—Scotch Paper.

THE HEARTS OF ST. LOUIS AND OF RICHARD CŒUR DE LION.—M. Leprevost, a Deputy of the department of the Eure, addressed a long letter to the Moniteur, in reply to the opinion expressed by M. Letronne, Keeper of the Archives, relative to the heart of St. Louis, which was believed to have been lately found in the Holy Chapel at Paris. M. Letronne had contended that the head of that Monarch had not been removed to France, and that if it had been it would certainly have been enclosed in a box made of a more precious metal than tin. M. Leprevost considers the former assertion as extremely hazardous, and resting on no well-established fact. "As respects the argument drawn from the paltry value of the box," says he, "an argument which has gained many partisans we will begin by observing that the box in question was neither made of tin, nor lead, but of tinned copper, and we will oppose to it a single fact, which appears to us conclusive. The heart of a prince nearly coeval with the French Monarch, who was certainly as great a King as Louis—I mean Richard Cœur de Lion—was also enclosed in a metal box, which box, so fortunately discovered by my Learned Friend, M. Deville, and so shamefully abandoned ever since, in a corner of the cathedral of Rouen, is not made of gold, gilt-silver, or silver, nor even of tinned copper; it is made of the vilest of metals,—lead." "Why," asks our Correspondent, "did you not demand this precious relic in return for the remains of Napoleon? It is not too late. Make the demand. France cannot have the face to refuse you."—Record.

CUSTOMS REVENUE.—The revenue of the Custom-house at Liverpool continues to improve. The receipts for the month of May, 1843, exceeded by 30,000*l.* those of the corresponding month in last year.—Ibid.

COPENHAGEN, MAY 27.—The financial statement for 1841 is published. It announces that the revenue for that year amounted to 16,169,171 rix dollars; and the expenditure to 15,860,721 rix dollars; so that there was a surplus of 308,449 rix dollars.—Hamburgh Papers, June 2.

LEIPSIC FAIR.—Our fair is over. Before it commenced there were fears that it would be little prosperous. These fears have been realized as far as regards the purchasers of North Germany. There were a sufficient number of purchasers from South Germany and from Switzerland, for which country much cloth was bought. From Poland there came merely some Israelite purchasers of Warsaw and Lublin. There were few Russian purchasers—their high tariff impeding. There were many Moldavians and few Wallachians. Of 160,000 pieces of cloth brought to the fair but 50,000 remain. English woollens had no great sale. Silks have little success. Damask linen much sought after. Great sale of printed cotton: those of England diminishing—those of Germany augmenting. It is not the same with English mixed woollen and cotton goods. Saxony does not know how to dye them so well as the English. In all, the fair was a good fair for the quantity on sale, though the prices were not high.—Leipsic Journal.

EARLDOM OF BUCHAN.—We are authorized to state that Sir Colin Mackenzie, of Kilcoy, whose claim to this ancient peerage, as being the representative of Lady Marjory Fraser, of Inverallochy, the eldest daughter of James, seventh Earl of Buchan, was supported by a train of apparently the most conclusive historical, documentary, and oral evidence, and confirmed by the opinions of the most eminent lawyers and genealogists, both in England and Scotland, has recently and accidentally discovered a document from which it would appear that Lady Margaret Gray, and not Sir Colin's ancestress, was the eldest daughter. Even the existence of this Lady Margaret was never once mentioned by any of the peerage writers, or, which is still more strange, so much as alluded to in the extensive family correspondence of the time. On the contrary, it was uniformly stated by several branches of the family who have assumed the title, and by all the writers whose names have weight as peerage authorities in Scotland, that Lady Marjory Fraser, of Inverallochy, was the eldest daughter of the seventh Earl. As her representative, Sir Colin Mackenzie was, consequently, the person deemed legally entitled to the honours. Though the unlooked-for discovery alluded to was known only to Sir Colin, he yet, in accordance with the feelings which actuated him throughout, immediately announced it to Mr. Douglas, of Brighton in Forfarshire, whom he learned to be the direct lineal descendant of Lady Margaret Gray. To this gentleman, and to his family, the communication proved a matter of no little surprise, as neither they nor any in their neighbourhood had ever heard even a surmise of such a right.—Globe.

SIR CHARLES NAPIER.—Sir Charles Napier is one of the most chivalrous and experienced soldiers in Her Majesty's service. He commanded the 50th Regiment throughout the campaign which terminated with the battle of Corunna, where he received five wounds—namely, the fracture of his leg by a musket shot, a sabre cut on the head, a wound in his back from a bayonet, the fracture of several of his ribs by a cannon-shot, and other severe contusions. He returned to the Peninsula in 1809, where he remained two years; was at the battle of the Coa (at which he had two horses shot under him); the battle of Busaco, where his jaw was broken, and his eye seriously injured; the battle of Fuentes d'Onor, the second siege of Badajos, and numerous other engagements. In 1813, he served in North America, he was also present at the storming of Cambray. Nor is he less expert with the pen than with the sword, as his admirable work on military law, and his caustic letters to Mr. O'Connell abundantly testify. He has, moreover, greatly distinguished himself by the anxiety he has uniformly manifested to promote the interests, and improve the condition of the humbler classes of the army.—Standard.

VISIT OF THE QUEEN TO WALMER CASTLE.—The present intention, we hear, is, that the Queen, with her Royal Consort and the infant Prince of Wales and the Princesses, will take up their abode at Walmer Castle, for the purpose of enjoying frequent short sea excursions along the coast in the Royal Victoria and Albert yacht, which splendid vessel will be moored off the Castle during the time of Her Majesty's sojourn. The alterations and improvements that are being effected, are various and extensive, nearly every portion of the Castle being subjected to the hands of the workmen for the purpose of repair and embellishment. This speedy repetition of the Royal visit will be hailed with pride, not only by the inhabitants of Deal and Walmer, but by every loyal son of the county thus honoured.—Kentish Paper.

TESTIMONIAL TO THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEA.—On Friday last the Anniversary Dinner of the 7th Hussars took place at the Clarendon, being the first of the three days commemorative of the battle of Waterloo, not to interfere with the Duke of Wellington's banquet on the 18th, when this great victory was gained. Lieut. General Sir Edward Kerrison, G. C. B. in the chair; the Earl of Belfast, Vice-President. The festivity of the celebration was not a little enhanced by the presence of their late Colonel, the Marquis of Anglesea, their guest, who, having served in this regiment for nearly half a century, has been appointed to the command of the Blues. After the entertainment an opportunity was taken to present a piece of plate, value one thousand guineas, to the Noble and Gallant Marquis, their brother officer and fellowsoldier, representing a corporal of the 7th Hussars engaged with a French Dragoon.—Record.

THE PLATE AND PICTURES OF HIS LATE ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF SUSSEX.—Tuesday was the first day for the private view of the collection of plate, pictures, &c., of his late Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex, at the rooms of Messrs. Christie and Manson, in King-street, St. James's, preparatory to the sale, which commences on Thursday next. The collection is certainly a most superb one. On entering the room the eye is perfectly dazzled with the profusion of gold and silver that glitters on every side, in the shape of immense salvers, lofty chalices, deep bowls, curiously carved cups and tankards, filigree baskets, rich ewers, candelabra and plate of every description; and on a nearer approach it is no less bewildered by the quantities of enamelled watches, antique clocks, chased and diamond snuff-boxes, delicately painted miniatures, knightly and masonic orders, seals, pipes, swords, mulls, walking-sticks, and all the numerous paraphernalia that made up the Royal collection. The pictures and engravings which hung on the walls were most easily seen, but these were not a nature to excite much interest, except in a few instances, being all portraits; the best among them is that of the late Duke of York, by Sir Thomas Lawrence. The silver and gilt plate were more readily accessible than the objects of vertû, and there was much here to repay curiosity and gratify taste. Amongst the most interesting were a pair of silver gilt candlesticks, once the property of Charles I., whose cipher and crown are engraved on them; an Indian coffee pot of solid gold, with figures of Vishnu and rich jewelled ornaments, which belonged to a barbarian monarch, the King of Candy; a silver tankard engraved with the battle of Culloden, and ornamented with a medallion of William Duke of Cumberland; the Irish gold inkstand of King William III.; a number of gilt and partly gilt tankards; some beautiful pearl nautilus shells exquisitely mounted; a superb tea-urn, said to have been in Queen Anne's collection; a large two-handed cup and cover, presented by the City of London to Alderman Wilkes; and a magnificent silver cistern.—Morning Paper.

THE LATE ADMIRAL SIR SYDNEY SMITH.—A monument to perpetuate the memory of this brave officer is about to be erected in the burial-ground of Père-la-Chaise, near Paris. It is probable this is first instance of the national prejudices and feelings of members of the French army towards English officers being removed for the purpose of paying a deserved tribute of respect to the memory of the late Admiral Sir Sydney Smith; but this testimonial they consider justly due to mark the resting-place of the remains of that gallant officer, who, although opposed to them when serving his country, saved many hundreds of the lives of the officers and men of Napoleon Bonaparte's army from the merciless disposition of the Turks, when they had them in their power during the memorable French expedition to Egypt.—Record.

COLOGNE, June 9.—Dr. Hermes, who a month ago ceased to contribute leading articles to the Cologne Gazette, saying that a writer who felt as an honourable man must retire from a position where he was no longer permitted fully to express his sentiments, has now obtained a situation elsewhere, which will doubtless excite no little surprise; he is engaged to write for the Prussian State Gazette, with a salary variously stated at 1,500 to 2,000 rix dollars.—Ibid.

RAILROAD FROM MILAN TO VENICE.—The Emperor of Austria's fête was celebrated at Milan on the 30th ult., on which occasion the first stone was laid of the railroad from that city to Venice. The Viceroy, the Archbishop, and all the principal military, civil, and ecclesiastical authorities assisted on the occasion. The Cardinal-Archbishop of Milan consecrated the stone, after which the Viceroy completed the ceremony of laying it. Within the stone was laid a specimen of every description of coin now current in Milan, besides two specimens, one in gold and one in silver, of a medal struck on the occasion. The railroad, in compliment to the Emperor, is to be called the Ferdinand Railroad.—Ibid.

Upwards of fifty thousand labourers are at present employed upon the St. Petersburgh and Moskow Railway. The whole distance will be nearly 500 English miles; and, nevertheless, it is confidently hoped that the gigantic work will be completed in less than two years.—Ibid.

Of the many anecdotes of what the Duke of Wellington has said, which though seldom true, are at least probable, this is one—it was told him that Mr. Tom Attwood had spoken of a hundred thousand men at Birmingham who would at his command march upon London. "March," said the Duke; "a hundred thousand men march to London! Where would they get shoes?"—Morning Paper.

REDUCTION IN THE PRICE OF GAS.—A correspondent says—"The following gas companies have determined to reduce the price from 9s. to 8s. per 1,000 feet, from and after Midsummer-day next:—Imperial, Chartered, City of London, London and Equitable."—Ibid.

THE BURNING OF THE TARTAR.—Two of the guns lately recovered from the wreck of the Tartar were proved during the week by Mr. Wolff, at the request of the underwriters, with a view of testing the quality and strength of the metal after having been made red hot in the fire, and being suddenly let down into cold salt water. For this purpose, two of the guns which had been apparently most injured by the fire were selected. The first gun burst, and the breech part, a piece of metal weighing six or seven cwt. was blown upwards of 100 yards; the second gun stood the proof properly. The great injury done to these guns is accounted for on scientific principles. The guns it appears were, from their position in the ship, subjected to all the heat of the fire, and were consequently made red hot. Gun metal when heated expands in dimensions to the extent of about one-eighth of an inch to the foot; it therefore follows, that the pieces, being so suddenly cooled by being immersed in water, would immediately contract, and a great many cracks and flaws would be the consequence, which cannot be discovered; and, besides, the crystallisation of the metal would undergo a complete change. The operations of raising the vessel have been continued during the week, and great quantities of iron shot and other articles have been recovered. It is expected the hull will be raised the end of next week.—Hampshire Independent.

ANECDOTE OF ELEPOO.—A correspondent of the Times relates an anectote of Elepoo, the late Chinese Imperial Commissioner. He was Governor of Ningpo when Captain Anstruther and the people of the wrecked brig Kite were confined there—"On news of the successes by us in the Canton river in the commencement of the year 1841 reaching Pekin, the Emperor became so exasperated as to send to the Governor of Ningpo a peremptory order for the execution of all his prisoners. But Elepoo remembered, and nobly redeemed his pledge; and, with the full knowledge of the penalty his disobedience was incurring, instead of murdering, he summarily released the whole of his captives, placing himself thereby in their stead. He was at once made over to the Board of Punishment; was deprived alike of all public honours and private estate, and himself and his whole family sentenced to ignominious execution; a consummation only stopped by the treaty with Commissioner Keshen, which the above successes gave rise to. In the subsequent troubles, the high character and estimation of Elepoo again procured for him high and responsible employment; but without removing from him many of the consequences of his disgrace. Though a firm and steady advocate of the superior advantages of peace, he zealously performed his share in the duties of the war; but when success upon success on our part gradually forced upon the Emperor himself similar conviction, and peace for the empire became necessary, he found himself selected one of the Imperial Commissioners for the arduous though welcome duty of opening those negotiations which so happily terminated; and when these had so far advanced as that complimentary visits were exchanged between the respective authorities, an urgent request was sent by Elepoo to his quondam prisoner, Captain Anstruther. * * * On this occasion, the late Commissioner appeared as an aged man, infirm in body, being then under medical treatment; and on the signature of the treaty, a few days subsequent, he was so ill as to be obliged to be taken from his own boat into the cabin of the Cornwallis in a chair, carried by a party of the admiral's bargemen, to whom he afterwards sent, for this service, a present of 300 dollars. His death, therefore, under the worry of settling at Canton the items of the future tariff, may be more justly lamented than wondered at."—Pat.

The amount of British property, &c., destroyed by the late earthquake in the West Indies is estimated at 3,000,000*l.* sterling; French, 1,000,000*l.*; Swedish, 9,000*l.*; Dutch, 8,000*l.*—Record.

QUEEN'S BENCH PRISON.—Yesterday the nephew of Lord Denman entered upon his office of Governor of this prison, vice Chapman, who retires upon a pension, Mr. Chapman resigned the Office of Marshal as he felt himself unequal to the onerous duties imposed upon him by the new regulations, which, amongst other things, compel the Governor to visit the rooms every morning before ten o'clock. The new regulations are yet but partially in operation. The turnkeys who accompanied the prisoners from the Fleet to the Bench have been discharged; and no additional officers are engaged, notwithstanding the great accession to the residents of the latter place by the removal of the prisoners from the Fleet and the calling in of "the rulers."—Ibid.

INCOME TAX AND POOR-RATES PAID BY RAILWAY COMPANIES.—It has been computed that the amount obtained by the Government, in the shape of income tax, from the various Railway Companies throughout the country, will very nearly reach 100,000*l.* per annum; and it is expected that, before the Income and Property Tax Act expires, it will, by the now gradual extension of the several lines, considerably exceed that amount. The inhabitants of many small parishes, through which the lines of railways pass, have been very materially relieved by the various companies being assessed to the relief of the poor, according to the estimated profits upon those portions of railway lying within their respective boundaries.—Ibid.

By Her Majesty's ship Favourite which arrived at Sydney from Tahiti on the 26th ult., we learn that the Tahitians are quite peaceable, and that two French officers had been left on the island by the Reine Blanche, one of which was acting as military commandant, the other as port officer; the French colours had been blended with the Tahitian. Queen Pomare was residing at the island of Eimeo. The Captain of Her Majesty's ship Hazard has received instructions from the Colonial Government after leaving Tahiti, to cruise about the South Seas, in order to secure the whaler Water Witch, which, it must be remembered some time since, was seized by the Mate.—Port Phillip Gazette, Wednesday, February 8, 1843.

ROMAN CATHOLIC EMIGRATION.—The London Correspondent of the Montreal Courier writes, that "a scheme has been matured in London, in concert with the Roman Catholic clergy of Ireland, for an extensive emigration to the agricultural free states in the North-western valley of the United States, comprising the States of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wiskonson, Iowa, and Missouri. Father Mathew is one of the trustees of the proposed company."—Record.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY MORNING.

No. 456. Vol. IX.] SERAMPORE: THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 28th, 1843. {Price 2 Co's. Rs. monthly, or 20 Rs. yearly if paid in advance.

The August Mail arrived on Wednesday morning last, too late however to allow of our offering any remarks on the intelligence which it brought. There is not indeed any striking event announced, but it is impossible to peruse the papers, Whig or Tory, Conservative or Liberal, without perceiving that we are on the eve of great changes, which may probably affect the stability of our institutions. The general aspect of affairs is gloomy, and the gloom is unrelieved by a single ray of cheerfulness from any quarter. The Tories have now been two years in office, with a strong Government, and an overwhelming Parliamentary Majority; they have had the benefit of an income tax, and of the money refunded by China; yet the revenue is in a more deplorable condition than under the Whigs; our foreign trade is still falling off; and our home consumption of taxable articles, is becoming more restricted. In addition to every other calamity, we have now the ruin of the iron trade; the Masters have been obliged to blow out their furnaces, and it was expected that a hundred thousand workmen would be thrown out of employment, in a very short time, and thus augment the general distress and disaffection. The palmer worm is evidently at the root of our national prosperity, and its blossoms are withering. The extremes of wealth and poverty, plenty and want, are become daily more palpable and galling, and the time draws near when those extremes will meet, and fearful indeed will be the shock.

It is manifest to all parties, that some radical changes must be effected in the state of society, highly distasteful to the upper and wealthier classes, and which no Minister, Whig or Conservative, can venture to propose without the certainty of being driven from his post, but which no circumstances can apparently avert. The working classes of society perceive that every arrangement, every change, and almost every improvement serves only to increase their distress. The corn law enhances the price of the poor man's bread, for the benefit of the landlords; the tithe commutation Act has in many instances made the tithe pressure more insupportable; turnpike roads which afford such admirable convenience for the conveyance of goods, are charged with so many tolls that the labouring community cannot take advantage of them; and even the Poor Law, designed for the relief of the country, has in many instances inflicted an additional burden on the industrious, and, in all cases, exasperated their feelings. The general depression of almost every interest is so great, that even the income tax, drawn chiefly from the pockets of the rich, has afforded no compensation for the loss of revenue. The drain on the Treasury from foreign war has ceased. Except in Ireland, we have no army in the field; yet the prospects of England are not improved. The revenue continues to sink.

Even the peaceable, the forbearing, the phlegmatic Welsh have been roused into resistance, and three Regiments cannot prevent toll gates from being levelled with the ground. The Welsh began with a war upon the tolls, and have now extended their opposition to tithes, and the Poor Law. We may almost adopt the language of Burke, and say on this occasion, "Since the invasion of King Edward, and the massacre of the bards, there never was such a tumult, and alarm, and uproar, through the region of Prestatyn... The fury of litigious war blew her horn on the mountains; the rocks poured down their goat herds, and the deep caverns vomited out their miners. Every thing above ground and every thing under ground was in arms." The determined and organized resistance of so large and hardy a population, serves still more to embarrass the machine of Government. At the same time the condition of Ireland is enough to appal the most stout hearted Minister. That country is at present under the control of one man, and that man is not the Queen's representative. Some of our contemporaries appear to consider the agitation as dying out. We cannot see on what ground their opinion is formed. The rent has not decreased; the gatherings of the people are as large as ever; their feelings towards the Saxon become daily more bitter and exasperated. The accession of the gentry to the cause of Repeal continues without abatement. O'Connel will not of course stand still. He proposes to organize a Government and to draw to it the functions of the administration. He has directed the appointment of arbitrators, to act in lieu of the justices of the Peace who have been dismissed. He has alloted 3000£ to the building of a Parliament House in Dublin. He will soon assemble representatives in the Capital, without however committing himself by any violation of the law; and then, the first collision with the Queen's troops will bring on a general outbreak, and cover the land with blood. The Minister, Sir Robert Peel, evidently quails before the demon of revolution which O'Connell has conjured up; and his "do nothing" policy has alienated many of his adherents and some of his colleagues. Beset on all sides with difficulties, perhaps greater than those which ever assailed a Premier, it seems as though the Cabinet would soon be deprived of his assistance. Indeed nothing but mistrust and hatred of the Whigs on the part of the Tories, seems to keep Sir Robert Peel in his place. Should he throw up office he must be succeeded either by some more uncompromising Tory Premier, who will bring matters to a point, or by a Whig Ministry, pledged to make great concessions. In either case, a radical change in the state of things will be hastened.

In the Church, there appear to be the same elements of danger at work, as in the State. If the Irish Church should survive the present crisis, it must be by the special interposition of God, 'who alone doeth great marvels.' Six years ago the idea of touching the revenues of the established Church in the sister island would have been scouted in the House of Commons. Now, the proposal of making a fresh distribution of ecclesiastical revenues in Ireland with the view of endowing the Catholic Church, is made a matter of discussion; and though it has met with much opposition, yet the mere fact that such a proposal has been brought forward and supported, is a circumstance which bodes no good. It is thus that all mighty changes in our constitution, civil and ecclesiastical, have gradually crept upon us. At first they have been spurned with scorn; then they have gained admission, and have been discussed in the House under the pressure of circumstances; and have been eventually carried. We must not be too sanguine that even a Conservative Ministry would not, under the terror of a Civil war in Ireland, give up part of the Protestant endowments as a sop to the Catholics; and nothing could be more fatal to the stability of the Established Church than this sacrifice of the principle on which it is based. Meanwhile, the Bishop of Down has been preaching doctrines which have served to alienate the 800,000 Presbyterians in the north of Ireland, who form the strength of the Protestant interest, and the Judges in the House of Lords have declared the mixed marriages hitherto celebrated between Presbyterians and Episcopalians, illegal, and thus bastardized thousands, and disturbed the security of property. Thus the two bodies of Protestants are thrown into a state of mutual alienation, at a time when there is no safety for either but in active co-operation.

In England, Tractarianism continues to tear the Church of England to pieces; and the Puseyites continue to approximate nearer and nearer to Popery. The salvation of the Church, to all appearance, depends upon the firm stand the Laity may make against these innovations; and it is gratifying to find that some of the most influential gentlemen and laymen in the Church have sent up a protest to the Chancellor of Oxford against the propagation of doctrines so subversive of the principles of the Reformation. At the head of these are Lord Ashley and Lord Sandon. The Methodists, disgusted with the insolence of the Puseyites, are identifying themselves more closely with dissent; and the compact body of Dissenters have constrained her Majesty's Ministers to withdraw the Factory Bill, though supported, without exception, by the adherents of the Established Church. Some of the Tory papers upbraid Sir James Graham for having yielded to the dictation of the Sectaries. He has yielded to the wishes of two millions of petitioners, whose voice no Minister could safely despise. All these events evidently portend the approach of great and radical changes, not merely in the measures but in the principles of government; changes not only relative, but organic. So rapid indeed has been the succession of new influences, arising out of the repeal agitation in Ireland; the discontent of the starving manufacturers, the progress of opposition to the corn laws, and the triumph of the Dissenting interest over the advocates of the Education clauses of the Factory bill in England; and the secession of half the Ministers and their adherents from the Church of Scotland, that it is impossible to foresee what may be the character of the next Parliament. That Assembly will be elected under the pressure of circumstances more momentous than any which have arisen since the convocation of the Long Parliament.

Col. Sleeman and his Antagonists.—We perceive that Col. Sleeman's persevering foe continues to attack him through the columns of the Bombay Times. In the number for the 9th of September, the charge is renewed, and an attempt is made to weaken the value of the plain, straightforward and satisfactory refutation which he has put forth in his own name ;—satisfactory, we mean, to those who have no personal interest in Bundlekund affairs. The letter is anonymous ; this speaks for itself. After Col. Sleeman had risked the displeasure of his own official masters, by affixing his signature to his defence, his antagonist ought to have shewn that he had the spirit of a man, by coming forward in his real name. With such an example before him, there can be but one reason for continuing to assail the character of another under the protection of a mask.

And what, we may ask, is the real cause of that unexampled virulence with which Col. Sleeman has been attacked ? Other officers, placed in circumstances of equal responsibility, are allowed to work out their plans of reform or pacification without molestation. In every other instance, it has been usual to await the result of a course of operation, instead of attacking it step by step, and contesting every inch of ground, with a public officer through the medium of the public papers. Col. Sleeman was selected by the Governor General for the management of a province in which disaffection was gradually assuming the character of revolt. Granting, for the sake of argument, that the steps he has taken have not been judicious ; that Pareechut is held in high estimation by the chiefs, instead of being regarded with contempt ; and that the two insurgents who have been reinstated, were on the point of being captured by Capt. Boland, when they surrendered on conditions to a native officer, is this a sufficient cause for that unexampled acerbity of feeling which marks the numerous papers published against Col. Sleeman in the public journals? Why should a course of action be pursued towards him, which is never pursued towards any other officer ? Why is it deemed necessary to hold him up to public contempt by charging him with imbecility, with cowardice, and with a degree of disingenuousness which amounts almost to bad faith ? Why are letters addressed to the Governor General in the public papers calling on his Lordship to depose the Commissioner ? Is it public virtue, or is it private interest which has raised this storm against him ? Is it not because he is suspected of having advised the summary dismissal of all the Sagor and Nerbudda officials ? On no other principle can we account for that extraordinary inveteracy with which every measure is decried, and every motive traduced. This course however, is not without precedent. We find that even the good Lord Teignmouth, then Mr. Shore, on his arrival in India, finding that Clive had curtailed the emoluments of the Civilians by abolishing the system of dustucks ; that is, by abrogating a system of fraud and injustice which has few parallels in Christian history, designates him "Clive of infamous memory." Thus we find that the great bulk of the army, having been led to believe that Lord William Bentinck had agreed to carry out the half batta order as the condition of receiving the Governor Generalship, have continued to regard him as the basest of human beings, and to consider the strongest epithets too mild for his conduct. To a similar cause and to no other can we attribute these repeated and inveterate attacks on Col. Sleeman's personal character and policy ; and his opponents must not be surprised if the public should judge of the merits of the controversy, from the motives which animate the assailants.

It is said that Col. Sleeman has compromised the British character by his pacific policy. But assuredly there is nothing impolitic, nothing cowardly in the attempt to restore order in so large a province by a conciliatory system. It can do no harm to try the effect of mildness during the first season. When that has failed, it will be time enough to let slip the dogs of war upon the territory, and deliver it up to fire and sword. No interest is injured by postponing to the last moment this resort to arms. On the contrary, should Government be under the necessity of punishing the refractory chiefs who are said to harbour the rebels, its previous forbearance will give a character of peculiar equity to the proceeding.

Our contemporaries will, we trust, feel the necessity of closing their columns to the calumniators of the new Commissioner. When he could no longer brook the attacks which were made on his character and policy by those whom Lord Ellenborough had unjustly, we think, ejected, he turned round on his pursuers and met them with a bold refutation, bearing his own name. This proceeding has given offence to the Governor General, whose fondness for generalization has led him to issue a notification forbidding all public officers to communicate any document or information of which they may become officially cognizant. Whatever inconvenience this notification may occasion to Government, or to the public, lies at the door of those who have constrained Col. Sleeman to take the field in his own defence. That officer is thus deprived of all means of defending himself from any aspersions which may be cast on him, while no such prohibition can reach his anonymous detractors. He is perfectly defenceless, and may at any time be assailed with impunity. To attack any man in such circumstances is repugnant to that generosity of character on which Englishmen are accustomed to pride themselves ; and we hope our contemporaries will not fail to bear in mind how dastardly any future attacks must appear which they may admit into their journals.

SCINDE.—Government has resolved that the newly acquired province of Scinde shall be garrisoned with troops from the Bengal, and not from the Bombay Presidency. Ten Regiments of Infantry and Cavalry, with a suitable complement of artillery are to be detached from Bengal, and stationed in that country. The arrangement appears to be based on sound principles, and has received general approbation. It appears that the number of troops necessary to maintain our authority in that province, will not fall far short of 12,000. To mingle the corps from two Presidencies, in the same locality, would be productive of much inconvenience and confusion. Hence it is desirable that all the Regiments should be furnished from one Presidency, and be subordinate to the same establishments. But as the troops required for Scinde, are equal to one third the strength of the whole Bombay army, it is manifest that they could not be spared from that Presidency ; and must come from Bengal, which alone is able to furnish them without inconvenience.
